FOREWORD

We believe that everyone has the right to be informed. Everyone ought to have the chance to get all relevant basic texts as efficiently and rapidly as possible. The publication of the Chronological Koran and all relevant Islamic scripture in one single volume is a necessary action. Complex problems require practical remedies. The accessibility of all relevant Islamic scriptures is limited due to the fact that most people who want to read the facts have neither time, passion, opportunity nor the knowledge to find the right material. For this book, we have collected everything that really helps to understand the ruthless doctrine and political ideology of Islam.

Most of the Islamic texts may be available even online but they are hidden in countless different places of the messy internet jungle. A part of religious deception is that one document can bear several different names, so can their authors. Often there are several different translations in circulation too. The overwhelming mass of all those ancient documents and manuscripts is breathtaking. For any amateur, it is quite frustrating, yes, almost paralysing, to compile all texts into one collection, from either online or offline sources. This is the reason why we have been doing this tedious work for you.

This book is about Islam, not about Muslims. The only Muslim we have to pay attention to is Mohammed as he is the original source of Islamic doctrine and all the consequences that come with it. Therefore, what we show here, are the facts only. It is up to the reader to build their own conclusions.

The Chronological Koran is designed as a searchable PDF document. It means that anyone can search for a word or phrase when the document is open. Simply click on EDIT, then on FIND, then type the wanted word in the searchfield, then click ENTER. Click ENTER again to go on with the search of the same word. You can copy parts or entire texts right from this PDF and paste it into a word or any other text document. You also can print the PDF either in A4 format or in the large A3 format.

In order to achieve good search results, we have removed all accents, apostrophes, dots, and dashes from the transcription of Arabic words and names. In our Glossary, we give simplified advice that shows you how to speak Arabic words so clearly that listeners understand what you mean.

There is one attribute that sets Islam apart from all other belief systems or religions: While in Buddhism, Christianity, or other religions, the doctrine wants to make the believer a better Buddhist or a better Christian, over 50% of the Islamic scriptures however, and this is new to most readers, deal with non-Muslims and what Muslims are supposed to do to them.

Since the shameless terror attacks onto the twin towers of the World Trade Center in New York on the 11th of September in 2001, the United States has been at war. That at least is what people have been told by their leaders. The following declaration of "war against terror" as well as the quick reassuring of President Bush and Prime minister Blair that this declaration were "not directed against Islam", yes that "Islam be a religion of peace" was a diplomatic faux-pas of giant proportion as it clearly showed everyone their ignorance and total unawareness of Islam's dualism. The statements of disinformation made Muslims all the world over laugh about the ignorance of the Kafirs (non-Muslims) in Washington and London. Islam is a belief and government system of peace AND war, of benevolence AND utter violence! And there are good reasons for that. The only public person who got it right was the Franco-German journalist Peter Scholl-Latour. Immediately from the start, he knew exactly what the date 9/11 meant. It was the very last day on which the Islamic jihadists of the Ottoman Sultan advanced towards the city walls of Vienna to crush the Holy Roman Empire. On the next day, the Polish king Jan Sobieski rode down the hills with his 20,000 hussars on draught horses (followed by 50,000 German and Polish infanterists) towards 300,000 jihadists and defeated them decisively. Since this disgraceful defeat, Islam was declining. With the choice of 11th September, Osama bin Laden made his political message crystal clear: "Islam is back!"

Americans are well-known for their short memory when it comes to historical facts. The declaration of war was an embarrassing faux-pas quite simply because the Americans had forgotten that they already were at war against Islam since the days the United States of America became independent.

Fair Is Foul, And Foul Is Fair,
Hover Through The Fog And Filthy Air.
(Macbeth, Act I- Scene I, 12-13)

Nothing can describe the state and attitude of unaware western societies, their governments, and their media better than this chilling Shakespeare line. It simply means that appearances are often deceptive, and that things are different from what they appear to be, and it echoes the shortest Hadith (Sahih al-Bukhari, Volume 4, Book 52, Number 267) with goes "War is deceit," a wit that has been written more than a thousand years earlier and more precisely by Zhou general Sunzi: "All war is deceit". The subtlest sophisters and most hypocritical draftsmen are set to work, and have produced many ingenious exercises which have deceived us for far too long. Like a tumour, the doctrine of Islam is creeping into the societies of its neighbours and others, proclaiming "assimilate or die!" Actually, most civilisations have this kind of behaviour. But Islam is the only civilisation that has elevated this (by biology dictated) behaviour to a sophisticated doctrine. There is no Thomas Jefferson in sight who has the ability to see clearly, to speak up loudly, to decide boldly, and to act ruthlessly. The pestilence of empty phrases, has come along its way in sheep's clothing, spread by an appeasing media and a poisoned education system, they are creeping into our minds every day, for the last three generation to the degree of almost total paralysation.

Are you aware that the Koran is not just a book about religion but primarily and foremostly a Book of Law? Do you know that Islam has been at war against the United States not just since 2001 but since 1776? Do you realise that Islam has been at war against the Christian Roman Empire, India, China, Russia, and all countries nearby Islamic borders for 1,400 years? What has law to do with Islam? Answer: Everything! And, what has Thomas Jefferson to do with Islam? Answer: Everything!

Right after the Independence of the United States from the United Kingdom, Thomas Jefferson already became acquainted with Islamic law when he had to deal with the jihadist pirates of the Barbary states at the North African coast. When Jefferson met in March 1786 the envoy of the Barbary states in Paris, he dared to ask why the American ships were raided, they had never harmed any Muslims. The Islamic ambassador replied: "It is written in the Koran, that all nations which do not acknowledge the Prophet are sinners. We cover you with war due to your unwillingness to pay the jizya. Allah commands us to make war on all kafirs (non-Muslims) who do not submit to Islam or pay the jizya (a polltax every non-Muslim has to pay in addition to the normal taxes)".

Jefferson, highly educated as he was, immediately understood that the piracy against the U.S. had to do with Islam. As soon as he could, he bought a Koran and read it. What he found out was a shocking revelation: The United States were fighting not against common pirates but against brain-washed and relentless jihadists who were easily willing even to sacrifice their own lives as Islam promised them that they would end up in an afterlife in which Muslim 'martyrs' would marry beautiful Houris (Huriyas) and enjoy rich sensual rewards on reaching paradise.

Jefferson understood how attractive those ideas of life after death could be for believers. He knew that the United States had to crush the Muslim pirates if they ever wanted to enjoy free trade in the Mediterranean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean. The very first thing he did was fighting with all his strength to make the politicians of Congress build a navy. Eventually, Congress passed naval legislation that provided for building warships. On Jefferson's inauguration as president of the United States in 1801, Yusuf Karamanli, the Pasha of Tripoli (one of the 4 Barbary states, demanded $225,000 from the new administration. (this was a vast amount of money at the time). He was in for a surprise when Jefferson refused the demand. Consequently, and in his arrogance, on 10 May 1801, the Pasha declared war on the U.S. Result: Two Barbary Wars were necessary to clean the High Seas from Islamic pirates.

Most non-Muslims believe, the Koran be "the Bible of Islam". Unfortunately, this perception is utterly wrong. Result: even highly educated scholars and politicians do not understand what the Koran says. In order to comprehend the vast scale of Islamic ideology, one must read 3 books: the Sira (called Sirat Rasul Allah = the "Life of Allah's Messenger"), the Koran (the Recital), and the Hadith (the Sahih al Bukhari, the Sahih Muslim, or the Sahih Dawud, for instance). The Sira and the Hadith build the Islamic tradition (also called "Sunna"). All 3 books build the "Islamic Trilogy". There is a fourth book called the "Reliance of the Traveller" (or Umdat al-Salik in Arabic). It is the "Sharia Law" extracted from this Trilogy. The Sharia law is the practical implementation of the doctrine and ideology of Islam found in the Sira, the Koran, and the Hadith. This doctrine is solemnly based on the life and relentless effort (jihad) of Mohammed himself.

To make it short: Islam is not just a religion. In fact, Islam is the blueprint of an entire civilisation as well as a manual about how to get rid of rival civilisations. Islam is dualistic in nature. It is based on the two very different lives that Mohammed lived: his first life refers to Mohammed's time in Mecca as a peaceful and religious but unsuccessful preacher who hardly could gain more than 100 followers in 12 years. His second life was triggered by the tragic death of his first wife Khadija and also of the death of his mentor and uncle Abu Talib. After a short time, he was forced to leave his hometown due to his attempt to gain power and his aggressive and bullying character. His migration is called Hijra. Mohammed went to Medina, became a politician and a ruthless warlord. This change of life brought him success. He managed in ten years to turn everyone in the Arabian Peninsula into a Muslim. Everyone who did not want to follow Mohammed and his newly invented Islam, was expelled, enslaved, or just killed. And because of that, the entire Islamic calendar is based on this success. The Koran itself then is based on these two different lives. Therefore there are two Korans which reflect these two different lives.

These two Korans, however, were arranged in one binding or volume. Caliph Uthman had destroyed any chronology and narrative by arranging the Koran chapter from the longest to the shortest chapters and the Koran we can buy in a bookshop looks like an unorganised jumble of all kinds of topics. It was done so on purpose probably in order to make the Koran incomprehensible for non-Muslim readers.

What you find here in this book is the Koran in which the chapters are arranged according to Mohammed's visions or revelations in a chronological order and this is the only form in which the Koran makes sense., especially when you read it side by side with the Sira, the biography of Mohammed. By reading the chronological Koran, you can see how very different the peaceful Mecca Koran is from the violent Medina Koran.

The today's generation of politicians, theologians, and lots of other citizens in East and West know next to nothing about religions and their history. Especially those who grew up in the last third of the 20th century and later, have not been taught anything about it and therefore have the attitude "There is no need to know anything about such an old-fashioned thing as religion, and religions are all the same anyway." Although we live in a sophisticated society with all its technological achievements, there is the tremendously frightening fact that university students who graduated within the last 50 years are the most uneducated academics there have ever been, and these are the very same people who rule our countries now.

We can hear and see their lack of knowledge and their empty, hackneyed phrases every day in the so-called modern media. Even worse, the decisions made by politicians and other people of this group, who are now in positions of power and responsibility, are too often catastrophically wrong. Politicians took over who do not act according to realpolitik or logical pragmatism but according to their ideological convictions. And this has disastrous consequences for all those people we claim to be our citizens. Today's reality has already surpassed the negative predictions and the detailed warnings made public by John Enoch Powell in 1968. Almost unnoticed, a fifth column has been established in western countries, camouflaged as 'culture club' or 'student association'. It is the modern politicians who are responsible for the outsourcing of public school lessons in Religion and History. Making the attendance of these vital subjects a "matter of choice" is a scandal that comes close to treason.

Unskilled and blinded politicians, inactive religious leaders, and their them surrounding "establishment" or "elite", infiltrate the mind of their unaware citizens with dull "political correctness", deliberate misinformation or even with blatend lies. Fear has stunned the will to stand up. Free speech is at death's door. This coward attitude and lack of knowledge causes disruption in all our societies and will lead to civil war or worse in many nations. All modern nations will pay dear for accepting stupid misconceptions such as that 'all religions are just the same', which they are clearly not. All the beautiful and good that we owe our ancestors will vanish from the face of the Earth. All our dreams of a good and fair society will get drowned in an ocean of totalitarianism and misery.

In the famous "Plea For Free Speech" we hear: "Liberty is meaningless where the right to utter one's thoughts and opinions has ceased to exist. That, of all rights, is the dread of tyrants. It is the right which they first of all strike down. They know its power. Thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers, founded in injustice and wrong, are sure to tremble, if men are allowed to reason of righteousness, temperance, and of a judgement to come in their presence. Slavery cannot tolerate free speech. ... There can be no right of speech where any man, however lifted up, or however humble, however young, or however old, is overawed by force, and compelled to suppress his honest sentiments. ... Equally clear is the right to hear. To suppress free speech is a double wrong. It violates the rights of the hearer as well as those of the speaker. It is just as criminal to rob a man of his right to speak and hear as it would be to rob him of his money. When a man is allowed to speak because he is rich and powerful, it aggravates the crime of denying the right to the poor and humble. The principle must rest upon its own proper basis. And until the right is accorded to the humblest as freely as to the most exalted citizen, the government ... is but an empty name, and its freedom a mockery. A man's right to speak does not depend upon where he was born or upon his colour. The simple quality of manhood is the solid basis of the right - and there let it rest forever." (Frederick Douglass in Boston, 1860)

The analysis of error begins with the analysis of language. We perceive reality through words and if we do not understand the clear definition of a word, then our mind is like stepping through a thick layer of fog. The misunderstanding of a word is even manifold amplified when we do not know who says that word and why. So we understand best when we know the meaning and the history of a word, and our perception becomes absolutely clear when we have good knowledge about the person who uses this word because then we can say why this word is used. Example: "Repeat a lie often enough and it becomes the truth!", is a law of propaganda attributed to the Nazi propaganda minister Joseph Goebbels. Among scientists something like this is known as the "illusion-of-truth" effect. A "big lie" is another propaganda technique closely connected to that effect. The expression "big lie" was a concept used by Adolf Hitler when he dictated his book Mein Kampf (My Struggle) and it was about the use of a lie so "colossal" that no one would believe that someone "could have the impudence to distort the truth so infamously". The Illusion-of-truth' effect can be a dangerous weapon in the hands of all sorts of propagandists. It is the main technique to "brainwash" people's mind. No surprise that it is in use at "Koran schools" from a very early student-age of 3 or 4. Repetition can even make known lies sound more believable. Why do we wonder that since 2001 almost 40,000 terror attacks have been committed almost all by Muslims?

Since the time Mohammed began his conquests 1400 years ago, Islam fought about 550 wars and battles against the western civilisation of Greece and Rome; another 400 wars and battles followed in the East against Hindus, Buddhists, Chinese and south-east Asians. Millions went into slavery. When Americans and Brazilians acquired slaves in the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries on the one end of the slave trading line, these slaves were sold on the other end of this line by Islamic slave traders who captured "worthy" slaves from their African villages and killed all "unworthy" people there. Result of all these war and slavery activities: Between 200 and 300 million dead people and misery of an unspeakable amount!

There can be no doubt that Western Civilisations are on the brink of total disaster due to the ignorance of their leaders. While our law is based on "We, the people", Islam is based on Mohammed and "In the name of Allah", or in other words: Our "law of the people" versus Islam's "law of God". Wahabi Muslims, fed with petro dollars, already have raised their sword to deliver the coup de grace by unopposed migration, undermination, dawa, deception and demography. As the Koran speaks mostly about non-Muslims, it is time to listen to the voice of Mohammed, the man who is responsible for all this.

There are over 50 Islamic states on Earth and they build the largest voting block in the UN assembly. The constitutions of most of them are similar to those ones of Saudi-Arabia and Iran. All Muslims belong to the Umma, the Nations of Islam. Each and every Muslim considers themselves first to be part of the Umma, not as Arab, Syian, Iranian or American. In other words: The policies of Islamic leaders have everything to do with Islam. In fact, they are entirely based on Mohammed and the Islamic Trilogy (Koran, Sira, Hadith). Bear in mind: Acting against the stipulations formulated in the Islamic Trilogy is considered treason in Islam and punishable with Death! No Muslim therefore dares to speak up against Islam.

This Table of Contents gives you a first impression about what modern law has to do with Islam. When you read these documents, you will see that the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith are considered as The Law in Islamic states. By going through all these documents, you will see very soon that Islam is a matter not only concerning Muslims but primarily YOU!

GLOSSARY OF ESSENTIAL ISLAMIC WORDS

This list of vocabulary should be read first because it explains in some detail what Islam is all about. It is arranged according to context.

Arabic names are ruled by grammar case like Latin or German. However, in this book we avoid using these cases as English-speaking readers should not be confused. A name such as Ali ibn Abi Talib (Ali the son of Abu Talib) is here principally given in its nominative form: Ali ibn Abū Talib.

Islam is based on three books: the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith. This entire Islamic Trilogy must be ploughed through to comprehend the basics of this topic. The entire belief system of Islam is based on Mohammed only. In order to comprehend Islam, we must therefore read the Sira first. The Sira is the biography of Mohammed and its full title is Sirat Rasul Allah (Life of Allah's Messenger).

If one has read the Koran only and has not understood its contents, one cannot be surprised about it because the Koran represents only 14% of the Islamic Trilogy. The biographical Sira accounts for about 26% and the explanatory Hadith for about 60%. Another reason for its incomprehensibility lies in the structure of the Koran.

Bill Warner explains: Less than 15% of all the Islamic Trilogy is concerned about god and religion, 85% is about law and rules for every aspect in a Muslim's daily life, and is about politics and ideology. To be clear about this fact: No other belief system on Earth deals that much with issues concerning non-members of precisely this belief system. Over 50% of the entire text has nothing to do with Muslims at all but prescribes how to deal with non-Muslims! Circa 64% of the Koran, over 35% of the Hadith, and even over 80% of the Sira, making it 51% for the entire Trilogy, deal with the "Kafirs" (Arabic plural: kuffar = the vile non-Muslim) and how to treat them, how to convert them to Islam, how to undermine their societies, how to fight against them, how to exploit them, and even how to kill them. The amount of text devoted to jihad: the Koran from Mecca 0%, the Koran from Medina 24%, the Sira 67%, the Hadith 21%, the entire Trilogy 31%. Compare text that is devoted to Jew hatred: the Koran from Mecca 1%, the Koran from Medina 17%, the Sira 12%, the Hadith 8.9%, the entire Trilogy 9.3%. Hitler's book "Mein Kampf" (My Struggle) contains 7% Jew hatred.

TRANSCRIPTION OR ROMANISATION OF THE ARABIC LANGUAGE

This is a very simplified advice how to pronounce Arabic words in an understandable way. Translating Arabic words and names into a form that English-speakers can deal with is a problematic issue. There are several distinct ways to do it. Scientific translators tend to be over-exact, marking each and every Arabic sound with accents, dashes, dots or hyphen. Such words however are almost unreadable for common readers.

Instead of that, here we shall give you some basic pronunciation rules: Arabic (and other Semitic languages such as Aramaic, Hebrew, Phoenician, etc.) is poor in vowel sounds. We hardly can hear more than 3 vowels: a, i, u. This is the reason why vowels even are not written in Semitic languages. They are not considered very important. They can be spoken 'closed' or 'open'. And, depending on the origin of the speaker, they can take a different sound. So an 'A' can sound like 'e' in 'egg' and 'U' can sound like an 'o' (Omar instead of Umar). Today (but not in history!) they are recognised only by little dots or something like it. Therefore, transcriptions from Arabic to Roman script is inconsistent: Each word can appear in a different Roman spelling, depending on the author.

Semitic words are spoken with a lot of stops which gives a Semitic language its characteristic 'chopped' sound. The following rules will not make you perfect in Arabic but they come close to that what Arabic sounds like:

1.) Vowels in Arabic have the same or a similar sound value as vowels in Spanish, Italian or German: Speak 'A' as the 'A' in 'father', 'e' as in 'egg', 'I' as in 'Image', 'o' as in 'orbit', 'U' as the 'oo' in 'boot': Abbas, Ibrahim, Umar (does not sound like Amar or 'yumar' but like Oomar!).

2.) Two vowels that follow directly one another are no diphthongs (!), like in English, but each letter has to be spoken separately: Maadd is spoken Ma-add, in other words: two vowels have a stop in between: Aisha = A-i-sha, not eisha!; Ismael = Is-ma-el; Kaaba = Ka-a-ba; etc.

3.) This rule applies also for word beginnings and ends. In other words: Each of the following words begin abrupt: Abdul, Ibrahim, Umar (= oo-mar, not: yumar!!)

4.) There are even stops between a vowel and a following consonant: Abdul = A-b-du-l. Short vowels within a word that are followed by a stop may be omitted.

5.) Most words do also stop with a stop at its end. Notice: Final short vowels are often omitted here too.

Tip: Stick to the first 3 rules, and most scholars and Arabs might understand you!

WORDS FOR PERSONS AND PEOPLE:

- Allah = God (derived from the Hebrew word "Elohim" which means in original "Gods")

- Rasul / Rusul / Rasoul = Messenger or "bringer of divine revelation", another word for prophet

- Nabi = Prophet = religious teacher and leader, particularly a high-ranking one

- Muslim / Moslem = meaning a "Mohammedan", or as Islamic interpretation "the person who surrenders to God Allah, the Koran, and the Islamic authorities". The name's origin lies in the 8th century and comes from the Mesopotamian city of Mosul + man = Mosulman. Important: A Muslim is always a slave to Allah, to Mohammed, and Islam. It means that a Muslim always has to follow Mohammed's commandments found in the Sira, Koran, Hadith, and consequently the Sharia law.

- Houris / Huriyas (adjectival and feminine singular word for "dark-eyed, wide-eyed ones") are women in Islamic eschatology who will accompany faithful believers in Paradise. Particularly Muslim "martyrs" will immediately enjoy rich sensual rewards on reaching paradise with "dark-eyed," of "modest gaze" and "virginal" Houris.

- Mecca Muslim = A Muslim who follows the more or less peaceful teachings of Mohammed. In his time in Mecca, Mohammed was bound to cautious and peaceful behaviour as he was in an inferior position of political power. His time in Mecca was unsuccessful as he gained only around 100 followers during a twelve years activity in Mecca

- Medina Muslim = A Muslim who follows the violent teachings of Mohammed. In his time in Medina, Mohammed gained more political power by force. The more powerful he became the more ruthless and violent his behaviour turned towards to all opponents. As his political and military actions as Medina Muslim were much more successful than his humble and religious life as Mecca Muslim, modern Jihadists feel attracted to this success and copy Mohammed's violence as Medina Muslim. Mohammed gained millions of followers and the entire Islamic Calendar is based on this success.

- Muslimology = sociological study on Muslims, their feelings, beliefs and their opinion. It is all about opinion, not facts, The facts is that what we call Islam. And Islam is a doctrine of Mohammed which is strictly based on the texts in the Sira, Koran and the Hadith. Any debate about Islam cannot include Muslimology but must contain only the doctrine on which the life on every Muslim is based if we really want to figure out what is the difference between cause and effect.

- Mohammedan = someone who follows the Koran, the Sira, the Hadith. The belief system is called Mohammedanism or Islam

- Kafir / Kufr / Kufer / Kufar / Kafer = Islamic curse word that describes the disgust for a non-Muslim / disbeliever / non-believer / unbeliever. Its Arabic plural form is kuffar. This notion is taught in all Koran schools (madrasses) to students from the earliest age on (age 3-5 years!). In Islamic thinking, a Kafir is subordinate to a Muslim at all times. The typical western notion of equality, democracy, suffrage etc. is totally alien to Islam and therefore absolutely incompatible with it.

- Dhimmi = the non-Muslim or second-class citizen in a Muslim state who has to pay the Jizya tax. It is not openly imposed in today's Islamic countries because the Sharia turned almost everyone into a Muslim long ago, and also because powerful western countries forced Islamic states to abandon the Jizya.

- Muahid = another word for dhimmi. It means "agreement", literally: "Ally" or "Ally maker". Muahidin was in medieval (Islamic) Spain a Jew or Christian who accepted Islamic supremacy.

- Salafist = A Muslim who follows the teachings of the The Salafi Movement, also called Salafist movement. Salafiya, and Salafism, is a reform branch or revivalist movement within Sunni Islam that developed in Egypt in the late 19th century as a response to Western European influence. It had roots in the 18th-century Wahhabi movement that originated in the Najd region of modern-day Saudi Arabia. It advocated a return to the traditions of the salaf, the first three generations of Muslims. Those generations included the Islamic prophet Mohammed and his companions (the Sahabah), their successors (the TabiUn), and the successors of the successors (the Taba TabiUn). The Salafist doctrine is based on looking back to the early years of the religion to understand how the contemporary world should be ordered. They reject religious innovation or "bidAh", and support the implementation of sharia (Islamic law). The movement is often divided into three categories: the largest group are the purists (or quietists), who avoid politics; the second largest group are the activists, who get involved in politics; the third group are the jihadists, who form a minority and advocate armed struggle to restore the early Islamic movement. The appropriate western term for this kind of movement is "radicalisation" in its meaning "back to the roots".

- Umma / Ummah = the worldwide community of all Muslims regardless of their denomination, race or citizenship. The Umma is the only nation Muslims think of when identifying themselves. A Muslim would not identify himself first as Arab, Turk, Syrian, Egyptian, Iranian, Iraqi, etc. but always as Muslim and member of the Umma first. The "nation-state" in a western sense of meaning has no significance in Islam as most of them were created by Western powers. This is why Muslims never would whole-heartedly support the nation-state they live in.

- Mufti = Islamic scholar who interprets and expounds on Islamic law (Sharia and fiqh). Muftis are jurists qualified to give authoritative legal opinions known as fatwas. Historically, they were members of the ulama ranking above qadis.

- Mullah = Islamic teacher or "clergy" (the learned ones), scholar and religious leader (master, vicar, guardian) "the clergy", the ulama or mullahs. The ulama or mullahs are equivalent to "vicar, master, guardian". See Ulama

- Ulama (m) / Alimah (f) = Islamic teacher or "clergy". The Arabic term ulama or alim means "scholar", literally "the learned ones", also spelled ulema; feminine: alimah [singular] and uluma. See Mullah

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

- Imam = Islamic religious leader (ie. bishop, cardinal, metropolitan, etc.), leader of mullahs and ulama. The Imams are responsible for the doctrine taught at Koran schools.

- Emir (territorial and political entity: emirate) = an independent ruler or chieftain (King or Duke) and his realm.

- Vezier = high official or minister in certain Muslim states such as the Ottoman Empire.

- Sultan (territorial and political entity: sultanate) = Emperor. Islamic ruler or sovereign and his political realm, the Sultanate, a Muslim country or empire such as the Ottoman Empire.

- Caliph (territorial and religious entity: caliphate) = from "al-Khulafa". Islamic Pope and his political-religious realm, the Caliphate, that is the title of the successors of Mohammed as rulers of the Islamic world.

- Sheik or Sheikh / Shaykh = meaning 'old man' is in Muslim countries the head (duke, prince) of an Arab tribe, village, town, caravan etc.; he is most likely also a religious leader as there is no division of government and religion in Islam!

- Sharif (also: Shareef, Sherif, Shareef, Alsharif, Alshareef, or Cherif) is a traditional Arabic title of nobility (meaning "noble", "highborn"). The feminine singular is sharifa(h) or shareefa(h). The masculine plural is Ashraf.

- Ikhwan = a "Muslim Brother". That is a member of the "Muslim Brotherhood" or one of its many branches (such as Islamic student organisations, or Islamic "Culture Clubs").

- Pasha (or Bashaw)

- Wahabist or Wahabi = A Muslim who follows Wahhabism (Arabic: al-Wahhabiyah), an Islamic doctrine and religious movement founded by Mohammed ibn Abd al-Wahhab. It follows the teachings of the Koran word for word and has been described as "ultraconservative", "austere", "fundamentalist", or "puritan(ical)"; as an Islamic "reform movement" to restore "pure monotheistic worship" (tawhid) by devotees; and as a "vile sect" and as distortion of Islam by Islamic apologists. Mohammed ibn Abd al-Wahhab (1703–1792) started a reform movement advocating a purging of such widespread Sunni practices as the veneration of saints and the visiting of their tombs and shrines, that were practiced all over the Islamic world, but which he considered idolatrous impurities and innovations in Islam (Bid'ah). He formed a pact with a local leader, Mohammed bin Saud, offering political obedience and promising that protection and propagation of the Wahhabi movement meant "power and glory" and rule of "lands and men" (waqf). The House of Saud continued to maintain its politico-religious alliance with the Wahhabi sect over the next 150 years to the proclamation of the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia in 1932, and then into modern times. Today Ibn Abd Al-Wahhab's teachings are the official, state-sponsored form of Sunni Islam in Saudi Arabia. With the help of funding from Saudi petroleum exports, the movement underwent explosive growth beginning in the 1970s and now has worldwide influence. The US State Department has estimated that over the past four decades concerns in Riyadh have directed at least $10 billion (£6bn) to select charitable foundations toward the subversion of mainstream Sunni Islam by Wahhabism. Wahhabism has been criticised for the destruction of historic shrines of saints, mausoleums, and other Muslim and non-Muslim buildings and artifacts. It has been accused of being "a source of global terrorism", inspiring the ideology of the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIS), and for causing disunity in Muslim communities by labelling Muslims who disagreed with the Wahhabi definition of monotheism as heretics and apostates (takfir) and justifying their killing. The Wahabists, as well as Al Qaeda, the Muslim Brotherhood and its offspring Hamas, are responsible for the current Islamic Civil War in many Muslim countries, as well as terror attacks and financing mosques and their Koran schools teaching Muslims in western countries how to undermine their legal and political systems by implementing Sharia law step by step in a pussyfooting way. These implementations begin with enforcing Political Correctness, demands for Halal food, forbidding non-Halal food at western public schools, demanding the provision of prayer rooms in western companies and schools, and by getting into commissions for school textbook creation in order to ensure that Islam is depicted there in a positive light.

WORDS FOR THINGS:

- Koran / Koran / Al-Koran / Al-Koran = The Recital / The Sayings of Mohammed

- Meccan Koran or Meccaniah. That is the text in the Koran which refers to Mohammed's sayings and deeds in Mecca (c. 610-622). The Meccan Koran depicts a peaceful Islam as the deeds and sayings of Mohammed in Mecca concerns about religion only.

- Medinan Koran or Mediniya. That is the text in the Koran which refers to Mohammed's sayings and deeds in Medina (c. 622-632). The Medinan Koran depicts the violent, intolerant and cruel side of Islam as the deeds and sayings of Mohammed here deal with statecraft, warfare, politics, and Ideology. War and politics are the foundations of Islam and its Success. The entire Islamic Calendar is based on the events in Medinah! See: A.H.

- Sura / Surah = chapter (lit. 'folder'). The chapters in the Koran are not arranged chronologically but simply according to length: from the long to the short chapters. This arrangement is a propaganda trick: non-Muslims are not supposed to understand any context of this very public book without any assistance from a Muslim scholar.

- Ayah = "verse" (The real translation of the word Ayat is actually "A Sign", meaning: "evidence", or "miracle"; plural: ayat, or ayas in English), one of the statement of varying length that make up the chapters (surah) of the Koran and are marked by a number.

- Ruku = "passage" or "stanza" — is a term that bears two distinct meanings that have to do with one another. A ruku is a paragraph of the Koran. There are 558 ruku's in the Koran. A ruku is used for a set of verses that forms one coherent unit or thought. Longer chapters in the Koran are usually divided into several ruku's, so that Muslim reciters could identify when to make "a ruku" (a bow down to the ground) in a prayer. The bow in the prayer itself is the second meaning.

- Sira / Seerah / Sirat = the biography on Mohammed known as Sirat Rasul Allah. The Sira is part of the Sunna.

- Hadith = the oral tradition about Mohammed and his followers (collected 250-300 years after Mohammed's death). The Hadith (pl. Ahadith) is part of the Sunna.

- Kitab = book, scripture

- Mosque = a temple for Muslims including their Koran-schools for indoctrination. A mosque, from "masjid", meaning "place of ritual prostration" or "gathering place of peace" is a place of worship for Muslims in which any aggression and fight is strictly forbidden.

- Qibla wall = front wall inside a mosque, similar to the wall behind the altar in synagogues and churches. The Muslim believers have to face this wall when praying. In mosques built after 730 AD, this wall has always been directed towards Mecca. In earlier mosques, however, the qibla walls were directed towards Petra, some towards Jerusalem, and some others towards an imaginary parallel line that runs from Petra to Mecca.

- Madrass = Islamic propaganda institution, better known as Koran school. It is connected and integrated part of a mosque. See Ulama / Mullah. Children are indoctrinated in those institutions from the early age of 3 or 4.

- Hijab = obligatory head scarf or head shawl worn by females. Wearing a hijab is meant as a political statement meaning "I always follow the perfect teachings of Islam first".

- Burka = A kind of obligatory gown that covers the entire body and head of a female. Wearing a burka is meant as a political statement meaning "I always follow the perfect teachings of Islam first".

- Chador (Persian, also variously spelled in English as chadah, chad(d)ar, chader, chud(d)ah, chadur) is an outer obligatory garment or open cloak worn by some women in Iran, Iraq, and some other countries under the Persianate cultural sphere, as well as predominantly Shia areas, i. e., Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Bahrain, Pakistan, India, Kuwait, Lebanon, Syria, Tajikistan, and Turkey, in public spaces or outdoors. A chador is a full-body-length semicircle of fabric that is open down the front. This cloth is tossed over the woman's or girl's head and she holds it closed in the front. The chador has no hand openings, or any buttons, clasps, etc., but rather, it is held closed by her hands or tucked under the wearer's arms. Wearing a chador is meant as a political statement meaning "I always follow the perfect teachings of Islam first".

INTELLECTUAL TERMS:

- Islam = The Submission / Surrender. Islam is a dualistic belief system based solemnly on the sayings and deeds of Mohammed. Its duality is the result of history in which Mohammed was a more or less peaceful preacher in his hometown but became a military warlord and conqueror when he had been forced to leave his hometown. The entire Islamic scripture is based on these two different kinds of events. There are 2 distinct doctrines that have developed from these 2 events, Muslims got the two perceptions: 1. Dar as-Salam (house of peace, areas that have been subjugated under the total rule of Islam and its Sharia law: 2. Dar al-Harb (house of war, all other areas that were left to get conquered by future Muslim generations). More than 50% of all Islamic scripture is concerned with non-Muslims, how to dehumanising them, cursing them, and how to use Sharia in order to wipe them and their civilisation off the face of the earth. Notice that Islamic scripture is not descriptive like the Old Testament but prescriptive. That means, everything Mohammed said and did is understood by Muslims as Precepts and Obligations. Non-Muslims call this concept in their ignorance falsely "Radical Islam" or "Extremist Islam".

- Islamism = wrong word for Political Islam = putting the doctrines of Mohammed, found in the Koran, the Sira and the Hadith, into practice. Clarification: Islamism is not extremist Islam but the real Islam as it follows Mohammed's sayings and deeds to the letter. It is the Islam practised by Wahabists (Saudi-Arabian Muslims), by the Muslim Brotherhood (that organises almost all Muslim student and culture associations throughout the entire world), by Hamas (which is a worldwide organisation of the Muslim Brotherhood preparing to take over non-Islamic states by undermining the entire range of society through spying, deception, and bringing Sharia law into force), and by ISIS, Al Qaeda, Hisbollah, the Mujaheddin, and others. The ultimate goal of Political Islam is, according to Islamic scripture, the total annihilation of all other belief systems, political systems and therefore all non-Muslim civilisations.

- Islamophobia = a propaganda construct developed in the 1990s by The International Institute of Islamic Thought (a Muslim Brotherhood organisation funded by Saudi-Arabia) in order to attach a stigma to anyone who resists Jihad terror by speaking up. The word "Islamophobe" is often used by Muslims and their unaware allies to call anybody names who resists Islam by speaking against it. It is a concept which is used in a deliberately confusing and misleading way to refer to two distinctive things: One of them is terror attacks on innocent people, and everyone should be afraid of these unjustifiable killings because they mean to kill You. At the same time there is THE Islamophobia the western "liberal" media always refer to. Here they refer to the critics of Islam who do analysis by showing in what way Jihadists justify their brutal actions by reciting texts (from the Sira, the Koran, the Hadith, the Sharia, the Tafsir, or other Islamic texts). This (often scientific provable) analysis is also called Islamophobia because the political left-wing establishment and their media wish to silence those critics for the simple reason that those analyses may destroy their globalist and transnationalist dream of Utopia in which everyone should be the same as anyone else.

- Sabr = "endurance" or more accurately "perseverance" and "persistence". The Arabic word root s-b-r as a verb means to bind or restrain. As Islam is a dualistic belief system "sabr" is best characterised as being one of the two parts of (the other being shukr). It teaches to remain spiritually steadfast, and to keep doing good actions in the personal and collective domain, specifically when facing opposition or encountering problems, setbacks, or unexpected and unwanted results. It is patience in face of all unexpected and unwanted outcomes. Sabr is the main doctrine to implement Sharia law in non-Muslim countries step by step relentlessly.

- Shukr is an Arabic term denoting thankfulness, gratitude or acknowledgement by humans, being a highly esteemed virtue in Islam. The term may also be used if the subject is God, in which case it takes the meaning of "divine responsiveness". Shukr is to recognise a blessing and display it. It has been said that it was originally kashr, meaning 'to unveil and expose,' then the first two letters were swapped. Its opposite is "kufir" or "kafir", which is 'to cover, conceal, and forget a blessing.

- Kafir or kufr (Arabic: kafir; plural kafiruna, kuffar or kafarah; feminine kafirah; feminine plural kafirat or kawafir) is an Arabic term (from the root k-f-r "to cover") which is often translated as "infidel". The term refers to a person who rejects or disbelieves in the supreme authority of Allah and his messenger Mohammed. This word however is not a neutral term but an Islamic curse-word that is best translated as "vile infidel / rejector / disbeliever / unbeliever / nonbeliever, etc.

- Riddah / Irtidat = Apostasy or abandonment of Islam by a Muslim in word or through deed. It includes the act of converting to another religion or non-acceptance of any faith to be irreligious. In Islam, it is a crime as well as a sin, an act of treason punishable with the death penalty.

- Sunni Islam = largest denomination of Islam, followed by circa 85% of the world's Muslims. Its name comes from the word sunnah, referring to the behaviour of the Islamic prophet Mohammed.

- Shia / Shiah (from Shi'atu Ali, "adherent of Ali") = branch of Islam which disagreed upon Mohammed's succession. Mohammed designated his cousin and son-in-law Ali ibn Abu Talib as his successor. However, 14 of Mohammed's companions committed a coup d'etat and made Abu Bakr, father-in-law through his daughter Aisha, Caliph of the new Islamic empire.

- Sunna / sunnah / sunnat = body of traditional, social, and legal custom and practice of the Islamic community, based on the verbally transmitted record of the teachings, deeds and sayings, silent permissions (or disapprovals) of the Islamic prophet Mohammed, as well as various reports about Mohammed's companions.

- Hadith = Sunnah = report or recording of the events with and around Mohammed and his laws, ideology, teachings, etc. Sahih al-Bukhari and Sahih al-Muslim.

- Tafsir / Tafseer = Exegesis (from the Greek: "to lead out") is a critical explanation or interpretation of a text, particularly a religious text.

- Sharia / Shariah = "The Path". The Sharia law code reflects everything that Mohammed said, decided and did, recorded in the Sira, the Koran and the Hadith. It has its origin in Jewish jurisprudence (the Jewish 613 Mitzvot), in Islam also known as "shari at Musa" (law of Moses) which itself has its origin in the Law Code of Hammurabi. In contrast to Jewish law, Sharia is brutally repressive and shows no compassion, and this causes therefore an unsolvable conflict between Western law systems and the Sharia itself. About 15% of it deals with the Muslims life and how it should be organised in term of food, drinks, sex, prayers, etc. Around 85%, however, does not deal with religion at all but with politics. Sharia is meant to govern all aspects of Muslim life, so it is a comprehensive, totalitarian, political, military and legal doctrine, largely busy with gaining and keeping political power.

- Bismillah (also: basmala) is an Arabic phrase meaning "In the name of God". It refers to the Koran's opening phrase with which each Koran chapter begins (except Chapter 9); it is also used in official Islamic documents of state. The usual bismillah reads: "In the name of Allah, the Beneficent, the Merciful."

- Dhimmitude = the state of subjugation that refers to a non-Muslim from the "people of the book" (Jews, Gnostics, Mandaeans, Christians, Zoroastrians) who must live as second-class citizens in an Islamic state. They must pay the Jizya which is a protection racket.

- Fiqh = General term. Islamic jurisprudence. Fiqh is often described as the human understanding of the Sharia, that is, human understanding of the divine Islamic law that can be found in the Koran, the Sira, and the Hadith (the teachings and practices of the Islamic prophet Mohammed and his companions).

- Hudna = truce / ceasefire / a truce limited to max. 10 years (even when stated otherwise in writing!) It is not a binding "treaty" in a western sense of meaning. A legal binding treaty with any non-Muslim is forbidden in Islam. Therefore, any Peace treaty between Israel and Islamic Palestinians is wishful thinking due to its impossibility by Sharia law!

- Dawa (also daawa, dawah, daawah or dakwah; Arabic for "invitation") is the proselytising of Islam, that is the attempt to convert people to Islam. Dawa invites the Kafir (non-Muslim) to convert to Islam by peaceful means such as persuasion and includes all steps that precede Jihad. Dawa together with Jihad are the most important tools to suppress non-Muslims or convert them to Islam. Therefore, one of the first requirements of Dawa is to learn as much as possible about the individuals and the community that are targeted to convert to Islam, their strengths and weaknesses, things they fancy and things they do not, their beliefs, traditions and habits. Dawa has a range of tools such as spying, intrigue, lying, deception, money, psychology, blackmail, and the power of language in speaking and writing. Media, education, and establishing Islamic "culture centres" and mosques is a planned strategy of proselytism. If these converting attempts fail, force is used and Jihad begins. Dawa and Jihad also target non-observant Muslims!

- Jihad = (to) struggle, in an Islamic context it means "struggle toward the moral betterment of society" or "struggle against one's evil inclinations", but in particular it emphasises the exertion to convert unbelievers. Jihad is an extension of Dawa and it is one of the most important commandments and therefore makes Islam automatically one of the most intolerant and vile ideologies by nature. The interpretation of Jihad as Holy War or terrorism is wrong. The definition of Dawa and Jihad can be overlapping. Jihad encompasses the struggle for financial organisation, the struggle for propaganda by speaking and writing, the struggle by strategy such as infiltrating the system of political power, by undermining, through Sharia, and hollowing out any social coherence of the targeted society or state. The United States has been at war against Islamic Jihadists since the Declaration of Independence was made public and Jihadist pirates of the Barbary states attacked U.S. merchant ships and turned the ship crews into slaves.

- Jizya / poor-due / poll-tax / dhimmi-tax = a special tax demanded from non-Muslims by authorities of a Muslim state. The Jizya is like the Mafia protection racket or a scheme where criminals (racketeers and Islamic states) demand protection money (from the Muslims themselves) to persons (in Islamic states the non-Muslims, called dhimmi), including their life and properties. For muslim states it was (besides slave trade) often their main source of revenue. A modern source of Jizya is the system of social welfare which the migrants exploit when they come to western countries. The fact that countries such as India or China have no social system to speak of, is one of the reasons why they are unattractive to muslims although they are often geographically closer to a muslim homeland than western Europe.

- Rajm = execution by stoning from the Jewish Mishnah law code. Death penalty and also stoning existed in antique Jewish jurisprudence but as Judaism is deeply uncomfortable with capital punishment, it was hardly ever used. so much so that the rabbis of the erected significant legal bulwark carried out by 23 judges who had to vote unanimously in a complicated voting system that made capital punishment exceedingly rare. The lack of Mohammed's compassion let it become a regular event in Islam.

- Qibla / Qiblah / Kibli = "Direction" (also written Qiblah, Qibleh, Kiblah, Kible or Kibla), is the direction that should be faced when a Muslim performs prayers. It is fixed onto the location of the Kaaba in Mecca. Before c. 725 AD. it was Petra in Jordan.

- Hijra = migration, or to be more precise, the forced migration of Mohammed and all his followers. They had to leave Mohammed's hometown for disobeying the laws of the hometown and causing trouble.

- Dar as-Salam (house / abode of peace) = Dar al-Islam (house / abode of Islam) = Dar al-Tawhid (house / abode of monotheism) = country with Muslim majority and Sharia law. This "house" is at peace because Islam has with its Sharia law the totalitarian upper hand there.

- Dar al-Harb (house / abode of war) country with a majority of non-Muslims and no Sharia law. It is considered by Muslims as "potential warzone because Islam and its Sharia law has not yet been fully established there.

- Nikah = In Islam, marriage is a legal contract between a man and a woman. A formal, binding contract - verbal or on paper - is considered integral to a religiously valid Islamic marriage, and outlines the rights and responsibilities of the groom and bride. It also means "consumation", that is having sex with the wife.

- Jahiliyyah = Ignorance. Islamic concept referring to the period of time and state of affairs in Arabia before the advent of Islam. It is often translated as the "Age of Ignorance" and refers to the "House of War". Meaning: all non-Muslim countries today are in the state of Jahiliyyah and must be freed from it by the supremacy of Islam. This includes also the annihilation and destruction of anything that happened or was made before Islam, such as ancient books and monuments, such as the mass book burning instigated by Caliph Uthman or the destruction of the Buddhas of Bamyana in Afghanistan dynamited by Islamic Jihadists in 2001!

- Taqiyyah = Islamic Sharia law term of the Doctrine of Deception that relates to the general permission (and even the duty) to lie when a Muslim is under duress or another Muslim or the Islamic course is under threat. Taqiyyah is also used to hide a fact when this fact throws unfavourable light on Islam, such as violence from Muslims against non-Muslims. This Macciavellian concept of lie and deception in Islam is another legacy of Mohammed and was developed to perfection by the Shia Muslims who have been persecuted by the Sunni Muslims.

• Fitna (temptation, trial; sedition, civil strife) = civil war, trial, affliction, or distress. A word with important historical implications, it is also widely used in modern Arabic.

• Fatwa = a nonbinding but authoritative legal opinion or recommendation on matters of Islamic law (sharia), issued by a qualified jurist, denoting the status of a person on whom a legal penalty of outlawry has been imposed (similar in meaning to the German term "vogelfrei"). A jurist who issues fatwas is called a mufti and the act of issuing fatwas is called ifta.

• Xenophobia = the fear of anything or anyone foreign or strange. Xenophobia can involve perceptions of a native population towards immigrants and their activities against the natives and the desire to undermine their majority by (demographic) number or new laws. It is therefore the fear of losing national, ethnic or racial identity. The word "Xenophobe" is often used by Muslims and their unaware allies to call somebody names.

• Caliphate = Theocracy or being a theocrat ruler. All the first caliphs died violent deaths by being killed. The Caliphate was abolished by Mustafa Kemal Atatürk in 1924, probably as revenge against his Arab opponents. According to the Sharia law, no-one has the right to abolish the Caliphate. See Muslim Brotherhood.

• Muslim Brotherhood = also known as The Society of the Muslim Brothers, is a transnational Sunni Islamist organisation founded in Egypt by Islamic scholar and teacher Hassan al-Banna in 1928 as a reaction of the abolishment of the Caliphate in Turkey in 1924. Its ultimate goal is: to stop informing the western public about Islam and its goals, to suppress therefore free speech by promoting "hate-speech-laws, the implementation of Sharia law in western countries, and finally the installation of the totalitarian theocracy of Islam. Today, the primary state backers of the Muslim Brotherhood are Saudi-Arabia, Qatar and Turkey.

• Zakat / Zakah / Zakat al-mal = Charity, or more precisely, "zakat on wealth" is an Islamic form of alms-giving treated as religious obligation or tax, which, by Koranic ranking is the third of the so-called 5 Pillars of Islam.

• Tafsir / Tafseer = interpretation or exegesis of the Koran. An author of a tafsir is a mufassir. A tafsir attempts to provide elucidation, explanation, interpretation, context or commentary for the Koran. In short, it deals with the issues of linguistics, jurisprudence, and theology. The 40 volumes of the Tafsir al-Tabari is the most authoritative one.

• Shahada = creed or more precise: the uttered creed. By publically saying the following creed in Arabic, a person declares itself a Muslim: Ash hadu an: "La ilaha ill Allah". Wa ash hadu an: "Mohammedun rasul Allah" (I testify, that: "There is no god but Allah". And I testify, that: "Mohammed is the messenger of Allah".)

• Islamic Creed = The shahada, the two-part statement that "There is no god but God; Mohammed is the messenger of God" is often popularly called "the Islamic creed" and its utterance is one of the so-called "five pillars of Islam" (which cannot all be found in the Koran but in the Sunna.

In Islamic theology, the term most closely corresponding to "creed" is 'aqidah. The first such creed was written as "a short answer to the pressing heresies of the time" is known as Al-Fiqh Al-Akbar and ascribed to Abu Hanifa. Two well known creeds were the Fiqh Akbar II "representative" of the al-Ashari, and Fiqh Akbar III, "representative" of the Ash-Shafil.

• Iman in Islamic theology denotes a believer's religious faith in greater detail. Its most simple definition is the belief in the six articles of faith, known as arkan al-iman.

1. Belief in God (Tawhid)
2. Belief in the Angels (malak; plural: malakah)
3. Belief in Divine Books *
4. Belief in the Prophets (See List of Prophets)
5. Belief in the Day of Judgement (Eschatology)
6. Belief in God's predestination (Eschatology: Qadar and Taqdeer = fate)

• The Divine Books. Islam has a set of books which are recognised as divine or holy books. They are:

A. The Koran (including the Sunnah: the Sira, the Hadith). The Koran is the central religious text of Islam, which Muslims believe to be a revelation from God (Arabic: Allah) to Mohammed. Koran, Sira, Hadith built a Trilogy. See: Chronology of the Koran. Without reading the Sira and Hadith, the Koran cannot be understood as they deliver the context to the Koran. Muslims believe the Koran was verbally revealed by God to Mohammed through the angel Gabriel (Jibril), gradually over a period of approximately 23 years, beginning on 22 December 609 AD, when Mohammed was 40, and concluding in 632, the year of his death. Muslims regard the Koran as the most important miracle of Mohammed, a proof of his prophethood, and the culmination of a series of divine messages that started with the messages revealed to Adam and ended with Mohammed. It is often regarded as the finest work in classical Arabic literature but also as a work of unlimited hatred against Jews, Christians and anyone who is not a Muslim or even not devout. See: Kafir or Kufr.

B. The Tawrat (The Torah): According to the Koran, the Torah was revealed to Moses (Musa). The Koran argues that the current Torah has suffered corruption over the years, and is no longer reliable. (The Qumran Scrolls have revealed that this statement is a blatant lie and is anti-Jewish slander as the Torah has been copied over thousands of years much more perfect than the Koran)

C. The Zabur (The Book of Psalms): The Koran mentions the Zabur, often interpreted as being the Book of Psalms, as being the holy scripture revealed to King David. Koran 21:105 and Psalm 37:29 are direct counterparts.

D. The Injil or The Gospel of Jesus (it is unclear which one of the more than 30 gospels is meant): The Injil was the holy book revealed to Jesus (Isa), according to the Koran. Although many lay Muslims believe the Injil refers to the entire New Testament, scholars assume that it refers to one original Gospel, given to Jesus as the word of God, probably the Gospel of Thomas, the Gospel of the Ebionites or the Gospel of the Hebrews. The current canonical Gospels, in the belief of Muslim scholars, are not divinely revealed but rather are documents of the life of Jesus (Like the Sira about Mohammed), as written by various contemporaries, disciples and companions. These Gospels, in Muslim belief, contain portions of the teachings of Jesus, but neither represent nor contain the original Gospel from God, which has been considered "corrupted" and / or "lost".

E. The Scrolls of Abraham (Arabic: Shuhufi Ibrahim) and/or Arabic: Alsh-Shuhufi I-Ula - "Books of the Earliest Revelation"): The Scrolls of Abraham are believed to have been one of the earliest bodies of scripture, which were given to Abraham (Ibrahīm), and later used by Ishmael (Ismail) and Isaac (Ishaq). Although usually referred to as "scrolls", many translators have translated the Arabic shuhuf as "books". The Scrolls of Abraham are now considered "lost" rather than corrupted, although some scholars have identified them with the "Testament of Abraham" (See: Grand Bible), an apocalyptic piece of literature available in Arabic at the time of Mohammed.

F. The Book of John the Baptist (Kitab Yahya = Book Yohanan): There is an allusion to a Book (Kitab) of John the Baptist (Yahya). It is possible that Muslims refer to the Mandaean scriptures such as the Ginza Rba or the Drasha d-lahia "The Book of John the Baptist". Yahya is revered by the Mandaeans and by the Sabians.

G. The Scrolls of Moses (Arabic: "Shuhufi Musa" and/or Alsh-Shuhufi I-Ula - "Books of the Earliest Revelation"): These scrolls, containing the revelations of Moses, which were perhaps written down later by Moses, Aaron and Joshua, are understood by Muslims to refer not to the Torah but to revelations aside from the Torah. Some scholars have stated that they could possibly refer to the "Book of the Wars of the Lord", a lost text spoken of in the Tanakh or Old Testament in the "Book of Numbers". The verse mentioning the "Scriptures" is in Koran 87:18-19 where they are referred to "Books of the Earliest Revelation". The Book of the Wars of the Lord is one of several non-canonical books referenced in the Bible which have now been completely lost. It is mentioned in Numbers 21:14-15, which reads: "From there they set out and camped on the other side of the Arnon, which is in the desert and bounding the Amorite territory. For Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites. That is why the Book of the Wars of the LORD says: '... Waheb in Suphah and the ravines of Arnon, and at the stream of the ravines that lead to the dwelling of Ar, which lies along the border of Moab.'" A notable reference to an unnamed book is mentioned in Exodus 17:14, where God commanded Moses to inscribe an Israelite military victory over the Amalekites in the book and recount it later in the hearing of his successor Joshua.

• Iman (concept) = faith or belief in Islamic theology denotes a believer's faith in the metaphysical aspects of Islam. Its most simple definition is the belief in the six articles of faith, known as arkan al-iman. The term iman has been delineated in both the Koran and hadith. According to the Koran, iman must be accompanied by righteous deeds and the two together are necessary for entry into Paradise. In the hadith, iman in addition to Islam and ihsan form the three dimensions of the Islamic religion.

There exists a debate both within and outside Islam on the link between faith and reason in religion, and the relative importance of either. Several scholars contend that faith and reason spring from the same source and hence must be harmonious.

The Six Articles of Faith, known as arkan al-iman.

Faith (iman) breaks down into six axioms or postulate:

1. Belief in the existence and oneness of God (Allah).
2. Belief in the existence of Angels.
3. Belief in the existence of the books of which God is the author: the Koran (revealed to Mohammed), the Gospel (revealed to Jesus), the Torah (revealed to Moses), and Psalms (revealed to King David).
4. Belief in the existence of all Prophets: Mohammed being the last of them, Jesus the penultimate, and Moses sent before them.
5. Belief in the existence of the Day of Judgement: in that day, humanity will be divided into two groups: that of paradise and that of hell. These groups are themselves composed of subgroups.
6. Belief in the existence of God's predestination, whether it involves good or bad. Of these, the first five are mentioned together in the Koran and by Mohammed, while including a corollary of belief in Allah – the good and evil of fate ordained by God – has referred to all six together in the following manner in the Hadith of Gabriel: "Iman is that you believe in God and His Angels and His Books and His Messengers and the Hereafter and the good and evil fate [ordained by your God]." Another similar narration ascribed to Mohammed is: Ibn Abbas narrates that the Angel Jibril once asked the Prophet: "Tell me what is Iman?" The Prophet replied: "Iman is to believe in Allah, the Day of Judgement, His (Allah's) Angels, Books and Prophets and to believe in life after death; and to believe in Paradise and the Fire, and the setting up of the Mizan (scales) to weigh the deeds; and to believe in the Divine Decree, the good and the bad of it (all). Jibril then asked him: "If I do all this will I be with Iman?" The Prophet said: "When you have done all of this, you will be having Iman."

- Sawm / Siyam = Fasting, also commonly known as Ruzeh or Rozah (Persian) in some Muslim countries, is the practice of abstaining, usually from food, drink and sex. The observance of Sawm during the Islamic holy month of Ramadan (Ramzan) is the fourth of the Five Pillars of Islam.

- Hajj = annual Islamic pilgrimage to Mecca, Saudi Arabia, the holiest city for Muslims, and a mandatory religious duty for Muslims that must be carried out at least once in their lifetime by all adult Muslims who are physically and financially capable of undertaking the journey, and can support their family during their absence.

- Hijra / Hijrah / Hegra / Hegira (Latin) = important Islamic doctrine and precept based on the migration of the Islamic prophet Mohammed and his followers from Mecca to Yathrib (later renamed by him to Medina) in 622 AD. When Mohammed lived in his hometown, he could not convert more than about 150 people to Islam. He had overwhelming success when he went to Medina as within about ten years after his migration, he had subdued everyone in the Arabian peninsula under the hegemony of Islam. The Hijra as precept of mass migration has therefore become so important to Islam that, with the Hijri year (Anno Hegirae, AH), the entire Islamic calendar is based on this doctrine.

- Umrah = Islamic pilgrimage to Mecca, Hijaz, Saudi Arabia, performed by Muslims that can be undertaken at any time of the year, in contrast to the Hajj which has specific dates according to the Islamic lunar calendar. Umrah means "to visit a populated place." In the Sharia, Umrah means to perform Tawaf, which is a ritual walk round the Kabah for seven times, in an anticlockwise direction.

- Kaaba / Kabah = (meaning: "The Cube"), also called al-Kabah al-Musharrafah (the Holy Kabah), is a building at the centre of the Al-Masjid Al-Haram mosque (The Sacred Mosque), in Mecca, Saudi Arabia. It is the most sacred site in Islam. It is considered by Muslims to be the Bayt Allah ("House of God"), and has a similar role to "The Temple" in ancient Judaism. There were several Kaaba buildings before Islam

- Muhajirun = Emigrants, they were the first converts to Islam and the Islamic Prophet Mohammed's advisors and relatives, who emigrated with him from Mecca to Medina. The event known in Islam as The Hijra. To bring Islam to other countries in order to subjugate all non-Muslims and subsequently to convert all humans on Earth to Islam (by any means necessary) is one of the highest virtues in Islam, following the example of Mohammed himself. Emigration is an important tool to gain back Waqf (former Islamic land).

- Waqf = "Eternal Islamic Land". Every land that once was conquered by Muslims is considered to be "the perpetual, inalienable ownership of real estate by a corporation or legal institution such as Islam itself. In other words: modern countries such as the Iberian peninsula, southern France, southern Italy, Israel, Lebanon, north-western China, northern India, southern Russia, or the Balkans, are still today and for all times considered Islamic! Meaning: Muslims will do everything possible to get it back whatever amount of time or effort it takes!

- Takfir / Takfeer = controversial concept in Islamist discourse, denoting excommunication, as one Muslim declaring another Muslim as a non-believer (kafir). The act which precipitates takfir is termed mukaffir. Contemporary formulation and usage of the term have its roots in the 20th-century Islamist theorist Sayyid Qutb's advocacy of takfirism (doctrine of excommunication) against the state or society deemed jahiliyyah (state of ignorance and disbelief). According to Qutb, violence is required to be sanctioned against corrupt state leaders, on the premise that quietism is not the Islamic prescription against those deemed apostates. This position is widely held and applied by jihadist organizations to varying degrees. At the same time, the concept is opposed by religious establishment as an ostensible reason for violence. They hold that excommunication against those who profess their Islamic faith is not sanctioned by Islam, or an ill-founded takfir accusation is a major forbidden act (haram).

- Haram = forbidden. This may refer to: either something sacred to which access is forbidden to the people who are not in a state of purity or who are not initiated into the sacred knowledge; or to an evil thus "sinful action that is forbidden to be done". The term also denotes something "set aside", thus being the Arabic equivalent of the Hebrew concept "qados", and the concept of sacer (cf. sacred) in Roman law and religion. In Islamic jurisprudence, haram is used to refer to any act that is forbidden by Allah, and is one of five Islamic commandments (al-ahkam al-khamsah) that define the morality of human action.

- Halal (also spelled hallal or halaal) = permissible. It refers to what is permissible or lawful in traditional Islamic law. It is frequently applied to permissible food and drinks. In the Koran, the word halal is contrasted with haram (forbidden). In Islamic jurisprudence, this dualistic concept was elaborated into a more complex classification known as "the five decisions": mandatory, recommended, neutral, reprehensible, and forbidden. Islamic jurists disagree on whether the term halal covers the first three or the first four of these categories.

- Zina = Islamic legal term referring to unlawful sexual intercourse. According to traditional jurisprudence, zina can include adultery (of married parties), fornication (of unmarried parties), prostitution, bestiality, and rape. Classification of homosexual intercourse as zina differs according to legal school. The Koran disapproved of the promiscuity prevailing in Arabia at the time, and several verses refer to unlawful sexual intercourse, including one that prescribes the punishment of 100 lashes for fornicators. Four witnesses are required to prove the offense. Zina is considered to lead to confusion of lineage, leniency in morals, the disconnection among families, and unstable relationships. It is also considered haram (forbidden) to look at members of the opposite sex with desire.

- Shirk = sin of practicing idolatry or polytheism, i.e. the deification or worship of anyone or anything besides the singular God, i.e. Allah. It is the most despicable crime right after apostasy. Literally, it means ascribing or the establishment of "partners" placed beside God. It is the vice that is opposed to the virtue of Tawhid (monotheism). Let us clarify this sin: In Islamic viewpoint, a Christian is "committing shirk" quite simply by identifying Jesus with God, and saying, for example, "Merry Christmas" to a Muslim is understood by that Muslim as a curse against Allah. Those who practice shirk are termed mushrikun. Mushrikun (pl. of mushrik) are those who practice shirk, which literally means "association" and refers to accepting other gods and divinities alongside the god of the Muslims - Allah (as God's "associates"). In Islamic law shirk as a crime, can just be attributed to Muslims, since only a Muslim is legally responsible not to associate any partner to Allah. Within Islam, shirk is an unforgivable crime if it remains unpardoned before death: Allah may forgive any sin if one dies in that state except for committing shirk.

- Rashid / Rachid / Rasheed = the rightly guided. The Rashidun Caliphs (Rightly Guided Caliphs), often simply called, collectively, "the Rashidun", is a term used in Sunni Islam to refer to the 30-year reign of the first four caliphs (successors) following the death of the Islamic prophet Mohammed, namely: Abu Bakr, Umar, Uthman ibn Affan, and Ali of the Rashidun Caliphate, the first caliphate. The 5th caliph, Hassan the grandson of Mohammed, does not belong to them

- AH = Anno Hegirae = Hijri year, meaning the year in which Mohammed was forced by his hometown to migrate. The year 1 AH (1 Muharram) is assumed to be 15 July, 622 AD (known as the Astronomical' or 'Thursday' epoch) or 16 July, 622 AD (the 'civil' or 'Friday' epoch). This date was chosen because it was the beginning of a successful spreading of Islam by violence. Muslims are totally indifferent towards Islamic violence, they see only the victory of Islam, not the suffering which it causes.

- Shura = consultation. The Koran and the Prophet Mohammed encourage Muslims to decide their affairs in consultation with those who will be affected by that decision. Shura is mentioned as a praiseworthy activity often used in organizing the affairs of a mosque, Islamic organisations, and is a common term involved in naming parliaments. Many traditional Sunni Islamic lawyers agree that to be in keeping with Islam, a government should have some form of council of consultation or majlis al-shura, although it must recognise that God and not the people are sovereign. As not the people are sovereign, a shura is therefore not a parliament in its western connotation and value.

ENGLISH WORDS USED BY MOHAMMEDANS:

- Migration / Emigration / Mass-migration = see Hijra. Migration is not an accidental event in Islam but a doctrine which is so important that the entire Islamic calendar is based on it.

- "The Five Pillars of Islam" = 1. Shahada: Faith; 2. Salah: Prayer; 3. Zakat: Charity; 4. Sawm: Fasting; 5. Hajj: pilgrimage to Mecca

- "slander" has in western societies the meaning of gossip which is basically a lie. In Islam it means an uncomfortable statement which can be the truth but Muslims do not want to hear it.

- "revert" is (an Islamic term for) someone who converts from Judaism, Christianity or Zoroastrianism to Islam. This term refers to the Islam belief that those "people of the book" who have originally rejected Islam, which has been in Islamic thinking always the only true religion (even before the Hebrew Bible was written), and later found the "right way back" to Islam.

- "religion of peace" is a term of deception assuming that the listening kafir (non-Muslim) does not know its meaning in Islamic context. The term "Islam is a religion of peace" refers only to the Arabic terms Dar as-Salam (house/abode of Peace) = Dar al-Islam (house/abode of Islam) = Dar al-Tawhid (house/abode of monotheism) = country with Muslim majority and Sharia law. As the Muslims killed or converted everyone in that country to Islam, there is peace.

- "terrorist" (general noun: terrorism) in Islam is someone who supports a non-Islamic religion, such as apologists or polemicists of Christianity, Judaism, Buddhism, Hinduism, etc. To this circle of persons belong also political supporters of: free speech, socialism, communism, nationalism, liberalism, or other ideologies which are not Islamic.

- "peace treaty" is a western term that in reality always refer to the word "hudna" in Islam. A hudna is a truce that can last never more than for ten years. This misconception is the reason why western politicians are always (and always will be) frustrated in their efforts to create a lasting peace treaty with Islamic authorities. Witness to this fact are all the peace treaties that the United States have negotiated with Jihadists of the Barbary states between 1786 and 1816. The cause of the U.S. participation in a war was pirates from the Barbary States seizing American merchant ships and holding the crews for ransom, demanding the U.S. pay tribute (which was seen as Jizya in Islamic view) to the Barbary rulers. United States President Thomas Jefferson refused to pay this tribute. Sweden had been at war with the Tripolitans since 1800. The constant breach of any of those treaties led Thomas Jefferson read the Koran (and as soon he understood its contents) to the decision to create the United States Navy in order to crush the Jihadist Barbary states.

- "slavery" is legitimate in Islam, according to Islamic scripture. Slavery was organised by Islamic slave traders who sold African slaves to Europeans and American throughout many centuries. It is true that American companies bought millions of slaves for their plantations but it is also true that all those slaves were caught and sold by Islamic slave traders. Slavery has never been abolished in Islamic countries but only suspended for the simple reason that slavery is through all Islamic scripture part of the Islamic doctrine.

- "Apologist" is a person who offers a defence by argument. An apologist for Islam is a (non-Islamic or Islamic) person who tries to defend or protect Islam (usually without being aware that Islam is in its main substance not only a religion but in over 80% of its contents a totalitarian, political, and judicial system of doctrines.)

- "blasphemy" is the act of insulting or showing contempt or lack of reverence to a deity, or sacred objects, or toward something considered sacred or inviolable. Some religions consider blasphemy to be a religious crime. As of 2012, anti-blasphemy laws existed in 32 (mostly Islamic) countries, while 87 nations (mostly Western countries that consider themselves to be 'liberal' or 'democratic') had hate speech laws that covered defamation of religion and public expression of hate against a religious group.

- "Abrahamic religion", also collectively referred to as Abrahamism, are a group of Semitic-originated religious communities of faith that claim descent from the Judaism of the ancient Israelites and the worship of the God of Abraham. The Abrahamic religions claim to be "monotheistic", with the term deriving from the patriarch Abraham (a major biblical figure from The Old Testament, which is recognised by Jews, Christians, Muslims, and others). The major Abrahamic religions in chronological order of founding are Judaism (the base of the other two religions) in the 7th century BC, Christianity in the 1st century AD, and Islam in the 7th century AD. Christianity is considered as Abrahamic only because leaders of the early Roman Church insisted to accept the Old Testament as Christian scripture as legitimising factor. Christianity - that is the teachings of Jesus - itself is a Roman religion based on the Roman Imperial Cult, and, as Marcion already pointed out, has nothing to do with the wrathful and vindictive God of the Old Testament.

- "monotheistic religion" or monotheism (as an "inclusive definition") is defined as the belief in the existence of only one god that created the world, is all-powerful and intervenes in the world. A broader (or exclusive) definition of monotheism is the belief in one god. Judaism, Christianity and Islam are considered to be monotheistic although only Judaism could rightfully make that claim. Christianity is not monotheistic at all. Its central figure Jesus Christ (which is not a name but two titles for "saviour" and "messiah" or "anointed one") has been treated as god since the 3rd century AD. Islam criticises Christianity for Jesus' elevation to a god-like figure. Islam, on the other hand does pretty much the same thing by treating Mohammed as god in everything but name. The proof is displayed by the fact that speaking up against Mohammed and his teachings is considered blasphemy by Muslims. In other words: Muslims betray the claimed "monotheistic" nature of their own belief system by including Mohammed into their own perception of blasphemy.

- "ethical monotheism" is a form of exclusive monotheism in which God is the source for one standard of morality, who guides humanity through ethical principles. The concept of ethical monotheism, which holds that morality stems from God alone and that its laws are unchanging, first occurred in Judaism, but is now a core tenet of most modern monotheistic religions, including Zoroastrianism, Christianity, Islam, Sikhism, and Bahai Faith.

- "innocent people" When Muslims talk or write about "innocent people"— then they mean Muslims. As far as non-Muslims are concerned, as they have not accepted Islam and its messenger Mohammed, Mohammedans consider this rejection "a crime against God", and therefore any non-Muslim cannot be considered "innocent" by Muslims. This explains why killing a non-Muslim is not considered a crime in Islamic countries!

- "Clash of Civilisations?" is the title of an essay written by the American Democrat Samuel Huntington. He outlined what consequences Western civilisation will face when they continue to ignore the seriousness of Islamic doctrine.

- "Golden Rule" is the rule of conduct formulated by Jesus the Nazorean: 'Whatsoever ye would that men do to you, do ye even so to them [Matthew 7.12]. The Golden Rule is based on the Ten Commandments and is the main guideline of humanistic ethics in western countries / civilisations. Mohammed knew about it and the Ten Commandments can be found in his Koran too. However, Mohammed split the commandments and spread them all over the Koran as examples and allegories that can be abrogated by other rules. He did not want his political activities tied up by those rules.

- "Abrogation" (Naskh) is to cancel or overwrite a rule by another rule in the Koran (2:106). Abrogation affects the peaceful verses referring to Mohammed's time in Mecca that can be abrogated by violent verses that refer to Mohammed's later life as politician and military commander in Medina. The dualism of Islam is based on these two totally different lives of Mohammed. All verses of the Mecca Koran can be abrogated by verses from the Medina Koran!

- "radical Islam" is the Medinan Islam, meaning the Islam based on violent sayings and deeds of Mohammed in Medina. It is called "radical" (according to the 'roots', Latin: 'radix') because of those Muslims who take every word in the Koran literally. There is no room for interpretation or reform because the Koran is considered "the Perfect Book" by Muslims, just as its origin Mohammed is considered the perfect example of a human being that should be copied.

- "moderate Islam" is the Meccan Islam, meaning the Islam based on peaceful sayings and deeds of Mohammed in Mecca. As the Meccan texts are the earliest Koran texts, they all can be abrogated by later (and therefore 'better') texts from Medina, such as Chapters 9 or 5 which are chronologically the last relevant chapters of the Koran. And they are extremely violent. Moderate Islam is not the Main stream Islam!

- "extremism" in Islam means deviation from the norm. A so-called "moderate Muslim" is an extremist in the Muslim point of view as he or she deviates from the Muslim norm which is nothing else but strictly following Mohammed and the Islamic scripture. A so-called "moderate Muslim" who does not follow the example of Mohammed is therefore considered a traitor to Islam, an apostate. This is the main reason why Muslims kill Muslims.

- "slaves and slavery". Seven separate terms refer to slaves, the most common of which is the phrase "that which your / their right hands own / possess" (ma malakat aymanukum / aymanuhum / aymanuhunna / yaminuka), found in fifteen places in the Koran. This phrase often refers to female sex-slaves (concubines). The use of the phrase ma malakat aymanukum and the cognate term mamluk (possessed) makes it clear that slaves in the Koranic discourse are regarded as property. (Encyclopaedia of the Koran. 5. Brill. pp. 57–58; Wikipedia under "ma malakat aymanukum"). We have to recognise that slavery has NOT been abolished by either any Islamic state or Muslim government - slavery has merely been suspended upon pressure from western countries.

- "what your right hands possess" (Arabic term for slave: ma malakat aymanukum) is a Koranic expression referring to slaves, in particular sex-slaves. It is also rendered as "those whom you own", or "those whom you own as slaves". This expression and its variants are found in 15 passages of the Koran. It is the most common of the seven separate terms used in the Koran to refer to slaves. Slaves are mentioned in at least 29 verses of the Koran, most of these are Medinan and refer to the legal status of slaves.

- tawhid = The central Islamic doctrine that dictates there is no other god but Allah.

- Sufi = A branch of mystical Islam that emphasises self-denial as a means of communion with god.

- Ramadan = The ninth month of the Islamic calendar, during which Muslims fast from sunrise to sunset. It commemorates the transmission of the Koran by the archangel Gabriel to Mohammed.

- "mischief in the land" is an unclear phrase that can be found in many places of the Islamic scripture. This phrase can refer to anything that is wrong in the view of Muslims including "not believing in Allah and his messenger Mohammed", opposing Sharia, or just having a non-Muslim belief or no belief at all.

- "We" appears in the Koran when Allah (or Mohammed) speaks of himself in the 3rd Person Plural (see Allah). This form is called "the royal We".

- "tolerance" = From Latin tolerantia ("endurance") or tolerans, the present participle of Latin tolero ("endure") via Middle French tolerance. Please notice that modern Western people misunderstand this word as "acceptance" in a liberal sense of meaning. Muslims understand the word "tolerance" in its original meaning as "endurance" or "letting it be" for 'the time being' but never as "indefinite acceptance"!

- "human rights" = that is in Muslim mind "everything and everyone that is concerned with Islam"! It does not include any typical western notion of humanism, freedom, free speech, emancipation of women or slaves etc. See: Cairo (Islamic) Declaration of Human Rights which is based on the Sharia only, not on 'Western Values'!

- "fundamental freedoms" = that is in Islam having the right and duty to spread Islam into non-Muslim countries by any means necessary and which follow the sayings and deeds of Mohammed.

- "good governance" = that is in Islamic thoughts always ruling according to the principles laid out by Mohammed.

- "peace" = means to be subjugated under Islamic hegemony. See "Dar as-Salam" and "Dar al-Harb".

- "nation" = Umma. In Muslim thinking, there are only two distinct nations: the Umma, the nation of all Muslims, the other one is all nations of non-Muslims. See "Dar as-Salam" and "Dar al-Harb".

- "humanity" In Muslim thinking, here too, there is no "one humanity" but always either Muslims (the Umma) or non-Muslims (kufare). See "Dar as-Salam" and "Dar al-Harb".

PLACES:

- Mecca = supposed hometown of Mohammed and trade route junction. Archaeological evidence does not confirm Mecca as significant settlement or trade route junction before c. 700 AD. Surveillance photographs from the International Space Station suggests this fact too. See: Petra

- Petra = The capital and main trading hub of the Arab Nabataeans and most probably Mohammed's real hometown as the Qiblas of all early mosques direct to Petra. All geographical descriptions of Mohammed's hometown match exactly with Petra, none with Mecca. Hegra (Medain Saleh) is a similar city about 450 km south-east of Petra.

- Just as 'Allah' and 'Mohammed', 'Mecca' had several different names, and Petra is probably one of them. Petra is listed in Egyptian campaign accounts and the Amarna letters as Pel, Sela or Seir. The name "Mecca" appears only one time in the Koran 48.24. The historian Tovma (or Thomas) Artsruni uses the name Mecca for the ancient City of "Petra" (city of rocks) when he writes about Mohammed: "At that time, in a place of Petrea Arabia Pharan, named Makka - The Mecca - he showed himself to brothers bandits, warriors and band chiefs, who were worshiping in a temple the idols of Ammonites, Samam and Kabar." (Brosset, 1894, Livre II, 4. Pg 89).

The Koran talks about "Becca" as the location of the "first house" in 3.96 and in Psalms 84.6 also appears "Becca" or "Baca": Blessed are they that dwell in thy house: they will be still praising thee. Selah. Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee; in whose heart are the ways of them. Who passing through the valley of Baca make it a well; the rain also filleth the pools..

In Koran Sura 15 we find al-Hijr "The Rock" (Greek: Petra) which also could refer to the neighbour city Madain Saleh, Hegira or Hijra 300 mi / 450km south-east of Petra in Saudi Arabia); the word Hijr is linguistically connected to Hijra (migration) which could have meant 'the stony way'. In Koran 6.22 is the name Umm al-Qura meaning 'mother of settlements', and "Metropolis" is another Greek name for Petra also meaning 'mother of settlements'. In Koran 18.9, Mecca is called al-Raqim and Flavius Josephus used Rakem for Petra: "and among them fell all their kings, five in number, viz. Evi, Zur, Reba, Hur, and Rekem, who was of the same name with a city, the chief and capital of all Arabia, which is still now so called by the whole Arabian nation, Arecem, from the name of the king that built it; but is by the Greeks called—Petra." Today, Arabs call Petra still "Rakmu". Josephus says that Aaron "came to a place which the Arabians esteem their metropolis, which was formerly called Arce, but has now the name of Petra, at this place, which was encompassed with high mountains, Aaron went up one of them in the sight of the whole army..."

• Medinah / Madinah / Maddina / Medain (Arabic: 'the city'; pl. medun) = generally: first place where Mohammed emigrated to, known as Yatrib or Medina al-Nabi (city of the prophet), after he was thrown out of his hometown. See: Petra

• Jerusalem = Yerushalayim, most holy city of Judaism and Christianity. As Islam is thought to have originated in traditions or texts of the ancient Jewish Messianic Movement that had been defeated by the Romans between 66 and 73 AD, Jerusalem is considered the third most important holy city in Islam.

• Damascus = Dimasq, capital of the Arab Umayyad Caliphate or Dynasty

• Baghdad = Bahdad, capital of the Arab Abbasid Caliphate or Dynasty

• Cordoba = capital of the (western) Umayyad Caliphate or Dynasty that ruled in Spain and western North Africa while the rest of the territory conquered by Muslims was ruled by the Abbasid Dynasty.

• Cairo = Al Qahirah, capital of Egypt and of the ancient Arab Fatimid Caliphate or Dynasty.

• Alexandria = Eskenderyah, capital of Egypt, Eastern Roman province capital and place of the largest library in antiquity. The Library of Alexandria was destroyed and all books burned by Muslims in their public bath houses which took about half a year.

• Constantinople (Greek: Constantinopolos, Latin: Byzantium, Turkish: Istanbul (Stambul) = capital of the Roman Empire until it was conquered by the Islamic Turks. Then it was the capital of the Ottoman Caliphate or Dynasty until 1924.

• Roman Empire = Greek: Basileia Rhomaiona; Latin: Imperium Romanum; English: The (Eastern or Greek) Roman Empire. "Byzantine Empire" is a kind of political correctness term created in 1557 by the German historian Hieronymus Wolf in order to obfuscate the shame of western people upon the disastrous defeat of the Roman Empire by Islam in 1453. The name "Byzantine" was created in order to blur its real identity. It was a Christian Empire from the 5th to 15th century. The people of that empire called themselves Romans, never "Byzantines".

• Persian Empire = It was a Zoroastrian and Christian Empire with great Manichaean influence during its final centuries. The Persian Empire under Sassanid rule, its long-lasting culture and its religions was wiped out by the Islamic invaders in 651 AD.

• The Crusades started mainly due to a blockade that Islamic Turks imposed on pilgrims who were heading towards the Holy Land. Judaism, Christianity and Islam had holy sites in the land now called Israel. Jerusalem, Nazareth, Bethlehem and other religious sites belonged to the Roman Empire before they fell under the control of Muslims during the Caliphate of Umar. The crusades were conducted 1096 to 1291 as a late response on the Islamic Conquest. Due to poor organisation and greed, western European crusaders caused the death of hundreds of thousands by pillaging, plundering, famine, epidemics; most of the victims were not Muslims but Christians of the Eastern Roman Empire. Muslim apologists often use the Crusades as an example to show how bad Christianity is, not mentioning that Islam killed over 250 million people.

• Islamic Conquest has been a systematic all out attack on non-Muslims for now 1400 years. Particularly between 622 and 1700, Muslims forced millions of Europeans, Persians, Indians and Africans into slavery. Non-Islamic Civilisations have been systematically annihilated. Death toll: between 200 and 400 million. The Islamic Conquests of Timur (1370–1405) alone cost the lives of 15-20 million Zoroastrians, Jews, Christians, Hindus and Buddhists.

IMPORTANT WARS AND DYNASTIES:

• The Rule of Mohammed, 620-632
 • Wars of Apostasy (Ridda Wars), 632–633
 • War of Succession, 632
 • Arab Rashidun Caliphate, 632–661; It was ruled by Mohammed's five closest followers: 1: Abu Bakr, 2: Umar, 3: Uthman, 4. Ali, 5: Hassan.

• 1st Muslim Civil War, 661; war of succession in the Rashidun Caliphate between Ali and the Umayyads (and Aisha)

• Arab Umayyad Caliphate or Dynasty, 661-750
 • (western) Arab Umayyad Caliphate or Dynasty

• 2nd Islamic Civil War, 680–692; struggle for supremacy inside the Umayyad Dynasty

• 3rd Islamic Civil War, 746–750; It was fought between the Umayyads and the Abbasids.

• Arab Abbasid Caliphate or Dynasty, 750–1258 and 1261–1517

• 4th Islamic Civil War, 811–813/819, provincial turmoil lasting into the 830s

• 5th Islamic Civil War (865–866), between caliphs al-Mu'tazz and al-Mustain

• 6th Islamic Civil War, the Fitna of al-Andalus (1009–1031), within the (western) Umayyad Caliphate of Cordoba. The war ended when the Cordoban elite abolished the caliphate and established an independent state (taifa).

• Kurdish Ayyubid dynasty or Sultanate, 1171-1260; ruled by Saladin

• Turkish Ottoman Caliphate, Sultanate and Dynasty, 1517–1924

• Turkish Republic. It came into being due to disastrous death tolls during World War 1. Of about 20 million Turkish citizens, 800,000 died on the battlefields and circa 4 million from famine and disease, 25% of the population. Mustafa Kemal Atatürk took power to get rid of a defeated, corrupt and rotting state. Ruthlessly and relentlessly, he reformed Turkey into a modern state in order to catch up with the West. In 1924, probably as an act of revenge for the treason of the Arabs during World War I, he abolished the caliphate and the sultanate. This led to the foundation of the Muslim Brotherhood in 1928.

• Modern Islamic Civil War. Starting in 2010 with the so-called "Arab Spring" which is not about "freedom" or "moderates against fundamentalists" but about supremacy within Islam. Basically, the incumbent potentates are fighting against Islamic mainstream (Wahabi radicals, Muslim Brotherhood and their world-wide student organisations) that wants to re-establish the Caliphate in order to achieve hegemony and absolute supremacy of Islam over the entire world. In Islamic view, this war has to go on until all Islamic states are united and all non-Muslim civilisations under the absolute supremacy of the caliphate.

IMPORTANT PEOPLES AND TRIBES

(BANU, BENI OR BANI)

• ibn / bin / ben = 'son of' such as in Zurah ibn Kilab; as short name variation with capital letter: Ibn Ishaq (Son of Isaac) for 'Mohammed ibn Ishaq ibn Yasar ibn Khiyar' in which we find 3 times Ibn'.

• bint = 'daughter of', such as in Atikah bint Murrah

• Bani / Banu / Beni = the 'children of' / 'clan of' / 'tribe of' / 'sons of' / 'house of' as in 'Bani Israel', 'Banu Hashim', or 'Bani Saud', the House of Saud'. Often abbreviated to B.

• Banu Hanifa (of al-Yamama or Yamamah, a Christian branch of the Bani Bakr, lived close to al-Bahrayn; see Ridda Wars)

• Bani Bakr (branch of the Kinana - see Diyarbakir)

• The Anazzah or Anizah, a wide-spread tribe living in the Arabian Peninsula, Iraq, the Levant; related to the Bani Bakr)

• Banu Bakr

• Banu Salih / Saleh

• Banu Judham (Judaist)

• Banu Hashim (Hashemites / Hashimi; named after Mohammed's great-grandfather Hashim ibn Abd Manaf (c.464-497 AD); see Royal House of Jordan.)

• Bani Quraysh or Koreish (branch of the Hashimi.

The name Quraysh is linguistically related to the name Qurayza letting scientists assume that they had to do with one another. The Quraysh might have been a splinter group of the Qurayza). The Quraysh are a mercantile Arab tribe that historically inhabited and controlled the north-western part of Arabia and today's Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan. The Islamic prophet Mohammed was born into the Banu Hashim clan of the Quraysh tribe in a region which in antiquity was known as Nabataea (with Petra as its capital). The Quraysh staunchly opposed Mohammed until converting to Islam en masse in 630 AD by promising them the most powerful and lucrative positions in the Muslim state. Afterward, leadership of the Muslim community traditionally passed to a member of the Quraysh as was the case with the Rashidun, Umayyad, and Abbasid caliphs.

• Banu Qurayza or Koreiza (tribe built by members of the Jewish Messianic Movement that were fighting against Titus Flavius Vespasianus' Roman Legions [66-73 AD] and fled into Arabian territory after they have lost that war. The Jewish Qurayza allied themselves with the Banu Aus and the Banu Khazraj in the Battle of the Trench, most likely due to the high Jizya tax they had to pay to Mohammed's Muslims. After the Battle, Mohammed massacred 600-900 Qurayza warriors and sold their families and the rest of the population into slavery.)

• Banu Aus / Aws (from Yemen; allies of the Qurayza in the Battle of the Trench.)

Mohammed had two different lives: 1st, as a peaceful merchant and preacher married to only one wife called Khadija with 6 children of which the two sons died early. In 619 AD, both, Khadija and Mohammed's protective uncle Abu Talib died, probably from plague. In Mecca, Mohammed could find only 100 followers for his newly created Islam. The peaceful part of the Koran is based on Mohammed's life in Mecca.

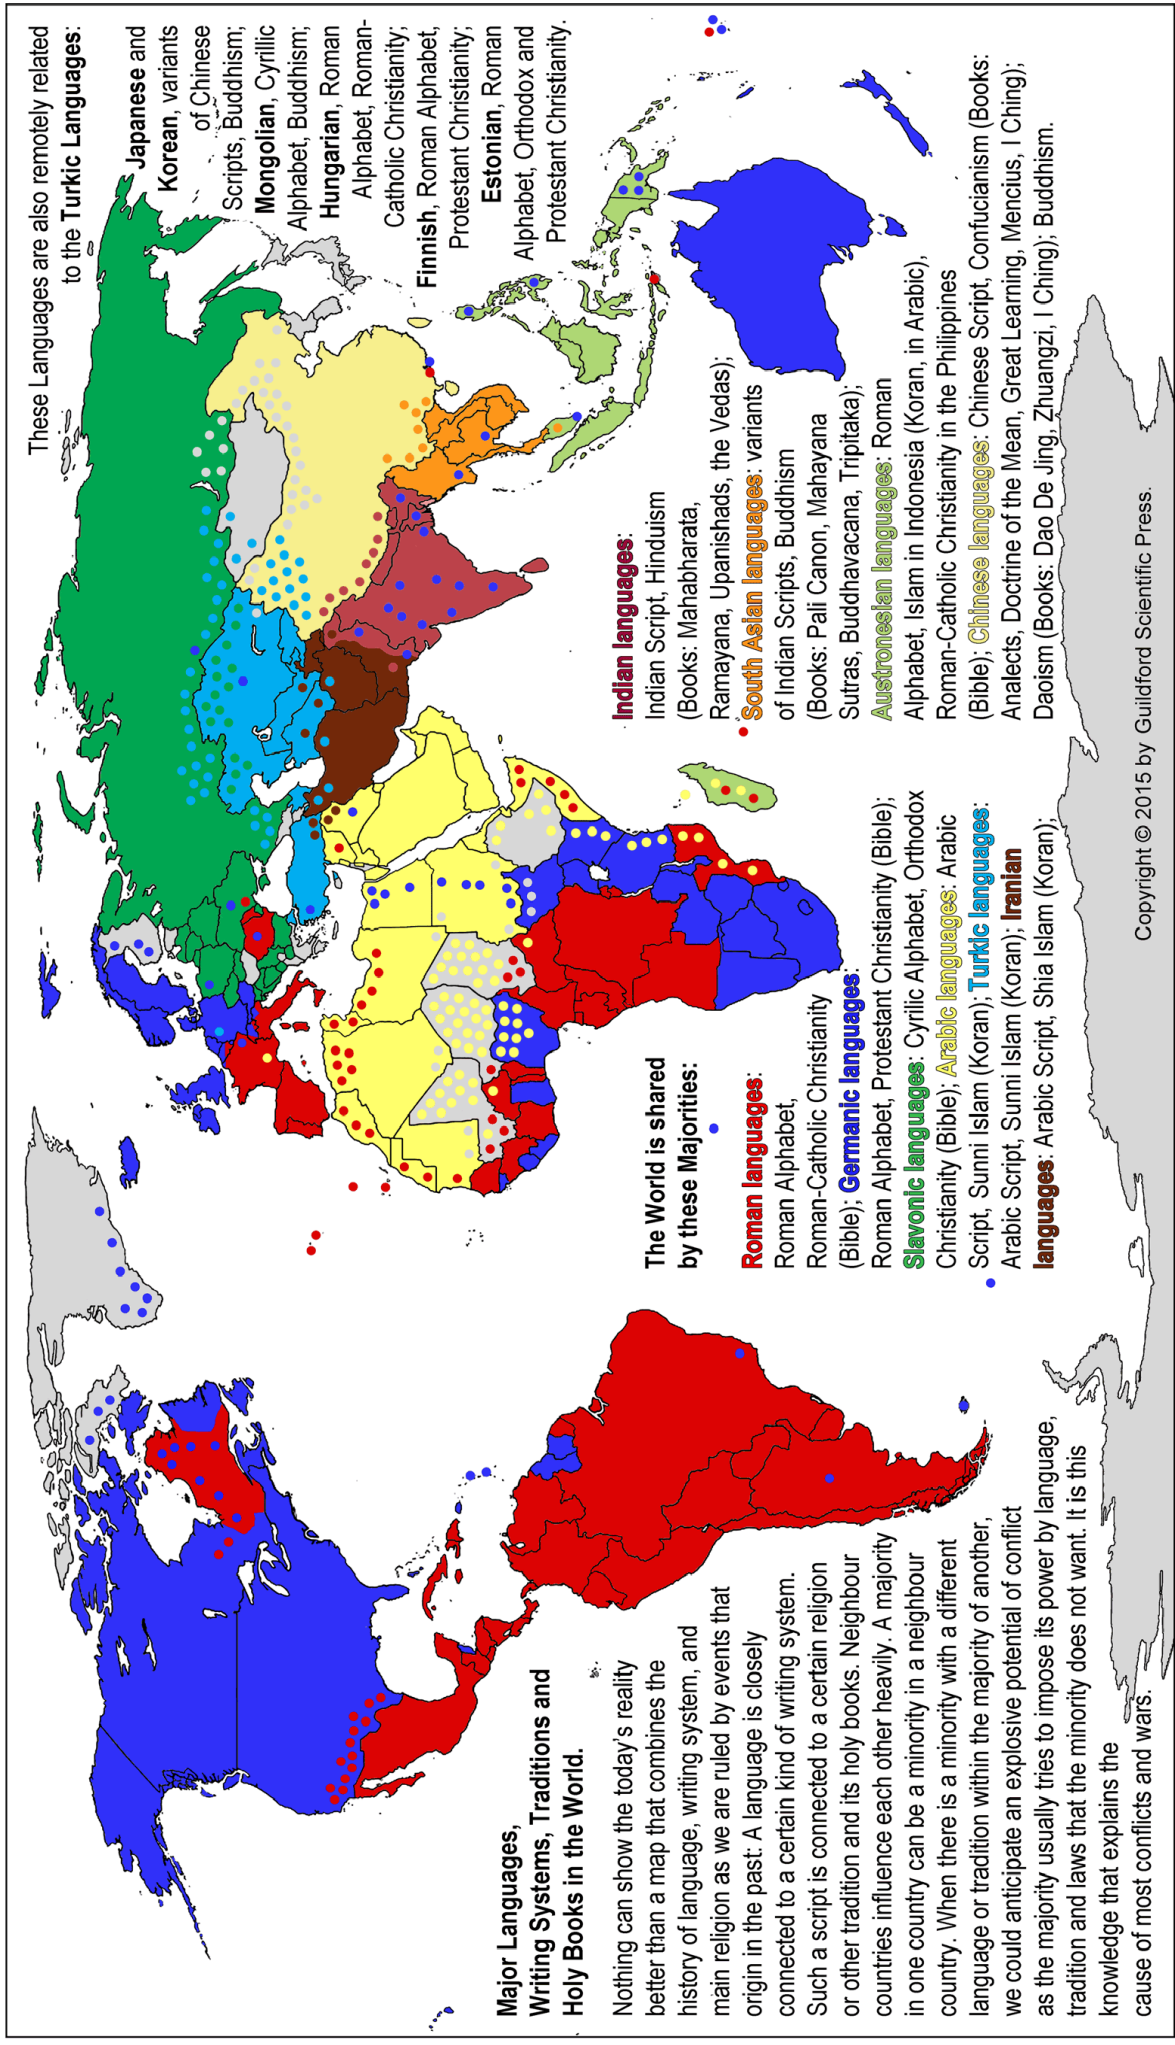

2nd, the devastating loss had a tremendous impact on Mohammed. Within a few month after his loss, he began to build up a gang to rob caravans. He tried to overthrow the city government and turned violent, was then thrown out of Mecca, migrated to Medina, took political power there, and began a ruthless conquest that lasts up to this very day. The violent part of the Koran is based on these ruthless last 10 years of Mohammed's life in Medina. When he died, everyone in Arabia was a Muslim. As only the violent concept of Islam was a great success, the Islamic Hijra calendar is based on it. Hijra (migration and subjugation of the host) became a main doctrine of Islam.

FAMILY TREE OF MOHAMMED

Islam is a generation project and most family members of Mohammed were involved. Mohammed's family, the Hashim, is still active today!

CONSTITUTION OF THE ISLAMIC REPUBLIC OF IRAN 1979 (rev. 1989)

Preamble

In the Name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful

We sent aforetime Our apostles with clear signs, and sent down with them the Book and the Balance that men may uphold justice... (Koran 57:25)

The Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Iran sets forth the cultural, social, political, and economic institutions of Iranian society on the basis of Islamic principles and norms, which represent the earnest aspiration of the Islamic Ummah. This basic aspiration was made explicit by the very nature of the great Islamic Revolution of Iran, as well as the course of the Muslim people's struggle, from its beginning until victory, as reflected in the decisive and forceful slogans raised by all segments of the populations. Now, at the threshold of this great victory, our nation, with all its being, seeks its fulfilment.

The basic characteristic of this revolution, which distinguishes it from other movements that have taken place in Iran during the past hundred years, is its ideological and Islamic nature. After experiencing the anti-despotic constitutional movement and the anticolonialist movement centred on the nationalization of the oil industry, the Muslim people of Iran learned from this costly experience that the obvious and fundamental reason for the failure of those movements was their lack of an ideological basis. Although the Islamic line of thought and the direction provided by militant religious leaders played an essential role in the recent movements, nonetheless, the struggles waged in the course of those movements quickly fell into stagnation due to departure from genuine Islamic positions. Thus it was that the awakened conscience of the nation, under the leadership of the eminent marji' al-taqlid, Ayatullah al-Uzma Imam Khumayni, came to perceive the necessity of pursuing an authentically Islamic and ideological line in its struggles. And this time, the militant Ulama' of the country, who had always been in the forefront of popular movements, together with the committed writers and intellectuals, found new impetus by following his leadership. (The beginning of the most recent movement of the Iranian people is to be put at 1382 of the lunar Islamic calendar, corresponding to 1341 of the solar Islamic calendar [1962 of the Christian calendar]).

1. The Dawn of the Movement

The devastating protest of Imam Khumayni against the American conspiracy known as the "White Revolution", which was a step intended to stabilize the foundations of despotic rule and to reinforce the political, cultural, and economic dependence of Iran on world imperialism, brought into being a united movement of the people and, immediately afterwards, a momentous revolution of the Muslim nation in the month of Khurdad, 1342 [June 1963]. Although this revolution was drowned in blood, in reality it heralded the beginning of the blossoming of a glorious and massive uprising, which confirmed the central role of Imam Khumayni as an Islamic leader. Despite his exile from Iran after his protest against the humiliating law of capitulation (which provided legal immunity for American advisers), the firm bond between the Imam and the people endured, and the Muslim nation, particularly committed intellectuals and militant Ulama', continued their struggle in the face of banishment and imprisonment, torture and execution.

Throughout this time, the conscious and responsible segment of society was bringing enlightenment to the people from the strongholds of the mosques, centres of religious teaching, and universities. Drawing inspiration from the revolutionary and fertile teachings of Islam, they began the unrelenting yet fruitful struggle of raising the level of ideological awareness and revolutionary consciousness of the Muslim people. The despotic regime which had begun the suppression of the Islamic movement with barbaric attacks on the Faydiyah Madrasah, Tehran University, and all other active centres of revolution, in an effort to evade the revolutionary anger of the people, resorted to the most savage and brutal measures. And in these circumstances, execution by firing squads, endurance of medieval tortures, and long terms of imprisonment were the price our Muslim nation had to pay to prove its firm resolve to continue the struggle. The Islamic Revolution of Iran was nurtured by the blood of hundreds of young men and women, infused with faith, who raised their cries of "Allahu Akbar" at daybreak in execution yards, or were gunned down by the enemy in streets and marketplaces. Meanwhile, the continuing declarations and messages of the Imam that were issued on various occasions, extended and deepened the consciousness and determination of the Muslim nation to the utmost.

2. Islamic Government

The plan of the Islamic government based upon wilayat al-faqih, as proposed by Imam Khumayni at the height of the period of repression and strangulation practised by the despotic regime, produced a new specific, and streamlined motive for the Muslim people, opening up before them the true path of Islamic ideological struggle, and giving greater intensity to the struggle of militant and committed Muslims both within the country and abroad.

The movement continued on this course until finally popular dissatisfaction and intense rage of the public caused by the constantly increasing repression at home, and the projection of the struggle at the international level after exposure of the regime by the Ulama' and militant students, shook the foundations of the regime violently. The regime and its sponsors were compelled to decrease the intensity of repression and to "liberalize" the political atmosphere of the country. This, they imagined, will serve as a safety valve, which would prevent their eventual downfall. But the people, aroused, conscious, and resolute under the decisive and unflinching leadership of the Imam, embarked on a triumphant, unified, comprehensive, and countrywide uprising.

3. The Wrath of the People

The publication of an outrageous article meant to malign the revered Ulama' and in particular Imam Khumayni on 15 Day, 1356 [January 7, 1978] by the ruling regime accelerated the revolutionary movement and caused an outburst of popular outrage across the country. The regime attempted to quell the volcano of the people's anger by drowning the protest and uprising in blood, but the bloodshed only quickened the pulse rate of the Revolution. The seventh-day and fortieth-day commemorations of the martyrs of the Revolution, like a series of steady heartbeats, gave greater vitality, intensity, vigour, and solidarity to this movement all over the country. In the course of this popular movement, the employees of all government establishments took an active part in the effort to overthrow the tyrannical regime by calling a general strike and participating in street demonstrations. The widespread solidarity of men and women of all segments of society and of all political and religious factions, played a clearly determining role in the struggle. Especially the women were actively and massively present in a most conspicuous manner at all stages of this great struggle. The common sight of mothers with infants in their arms rushing towards the scene of battle and in front of the barrels of machine-guns indicated the essential and decisive role played by this major segment of society in the struggle.

4. The Price the Nation Paid

After slightly more than a year of continuous and unrelenting struggle, the sapling of the Revolution, watered by the blood of more than 60,000 martyrs and 100,000 wounded and disabled, not to mention billions of tumans' worth of property damage, came to bear fruit amidst the cries of "Independence! Freedom! Islamic government!" This great movement, which attained victory through reliance upon faith, unity, and the decisiveness of its leadership at every critical and sensitive juncture, as well as the self-sacrificing spirit of the people, succeeded in upsetting all the calculations of imperialism and destroying all its connections and institutions, thereby opening a new chapter in the history of all embracing popular revolutions of the world.

Bahman 21 and 22, 1357 [February 12 and 13, 1979] witnessed the collapse of the monarchical regime; domestic tyranny and foreign domination, both of which were based upon it, were shattered. This great success proved to be the vanguard of Islamic government--a long-cherished desire of the Muslim people--and brought with it the glad tidings of final victory.

Unanimously, and with the participation of the maraji' al-taqlid, the Ulama' of Islam, and the leadership, the Iranian people declared their final and firm decision, in the referendum on the Islamic Republic, to bring about a new political system, that of the Islamic Republic. A 98.2% majority of the people voted for this system. The Constitution of the Islamic Republic of Iran, setting forth as it does the political, social, cultural, and economic institutions and their relations that are to exist in society, must now provide for the consolidation of the foundations of Islamic government, and propose the plan of a new system of government to be erected on the ruins of the previous taghuti order.

5. The Form of Government in Islam

In the view of Islam, government does not derive from the interests of a class, nor does it serve the domination of an individual or a group. It represents rather the crystallization of the political ideal of a people who bear a common faith and common outlook, taking an organized form in order to initiate the process of intellectual and ideological evolution towards the final goal, i.e., movement towards Allah. Our nation, in the course of its revolutionary developments, has cleansed itself of the dust and impurities that accumulated during the taghuti past and purged itself of foreign ideological influences, returning to authentic intellectual standpoints and world-view of Islam. It now intends to establish an ideal and model society on the basis of Islamic norms. The mission of the Constitution is to realize the ideological objectives of the movement and to create conditions conducive to the development of man in accordance with the noble and universal values of Islam.

With due attention to the Islamic content of the Iranian Revolution, which has been a movement aimed at the triumph of all the mustadafun over the mustakbirun, the Constitution provides the necessary basis for ensuring the continuation of the Revolution at home and abroad. In particular, in the development of international relations, the Constitution will strive with other Islamic and popular movements to prepare the way for the formation of a single world community (in accordance with the Koranic verse "This your community is a single community, and I am your Lord, so worship Me" [Koran 21:92]), and to assure the continuation of the struggle for the liberation of all deprived and oppressed peoples in the world.

With due attention to the essential character of this great movement, the Constitution guarantees the rejection of all forms of intellectual and social tyranny and economic monopoly, and aims at entrusting the destinies of the people to the people themselves in order to break completely with the system of oppression. (This is in accordance with the Koranic verse "He removes from them their burdens and the fetters that were upon them" [Koran 7:157]).

In creating, on the basis of ideological outlook, the political infrastructures and institutions that are the foundation of society, the righteous will assume the responsibility of governing and administering the country (in accordance with the Koranic verse "Verily My righteous servants shall inherit the earth" [Koran 21:105]). Legislation setting forth regulations for the administration of society will revolve around the Koran and the Sunnah. Accordingly, the exercise of meticulous and earnest supervision by just, pious, and committed scholars of Islam (al-fuqaha' al-Udul) is an absolute necessity. In addition, the aim of government is to foster the growth of man in such a way that he progresses towards the establishment of a Divine order (in accordance with the Koranic phrase "And toward God is the journeying" [Koran 3:28]); and to create favourable conditions for the emergence and blossoming of man's innate capacities, so that the theomorphic dimensions of the human being are manifested (in accordance with the injunction of the Prophet (S), "Mould yourselves according to the Divine morality"); this goal cannot be attained without the active and broad participation of all segments of society in the process of social development.

With due attention to this goal, the Constitution provides the basis of such participation by all members of society at all stages of the political decision-making process on which the destiny of the country depends. In this way, during the course of human development towards perfection, each individual will himself be involved in, and responsible for the growth, advancement, and leadership of society. Precisely in this lies the realization of the government of the mustadafun upon the earth (in accordance with the Koranic verse "And we wish to show favour to those who have been oppressed upon earth, and to make them leaders and the inheritors" [Koran 28:5]).

6. The Wilayah of the Just Faqih

In keeping with the principles of governance [wilayat al-Amr] and the perpetual necessity of leadership [imamah], the Constitution provides for the establishment of leadership by a faqih possessing the necessary qualifications [jami' al-sharait] and recognized as leader by the people (this is in accordance with the hadith "The direction of [public] affairs is in the hands of those who are learned concerning God and are trustworthy in matters pertaining to what He permits and forbids" [Tuhaf al-Uqul, p. 176]). Such leadership will prevent any deviation by the various organs of State from their essential Islamic duties.

7. The Economy is a Means Not an End

In strengthening the foundations of the economy, the fundamental consideration will be fulfillment of the material needs of man in the course of his overall growth and development. This principle contrasts with other economic systems, where the aim is concentration and accumulation of wealth and maximization of profit. In materialist schools of thought, the economy represents an end in itself, so that it comes to be a subversive and corrupting factor in the course of man's development. In Islam, the economy is a means, and all that is required of a means is that it should be an efficient factor contributing to the attainment of the ultimate goal.

From this viewpoint, the economic programme of Islam consists of providing the means needed for the emergence of the various creative capacities of the human being. Accordingly, it is the duty of the Islamic government to furnish all citizens with equal and appropriate opportunities, to provide them with work, and to satisfy their essential needs, so that the course of their progress may be assured.

8. Woman in the Constitution

Through the creation of Islamic social infrastructures, all the elements of humanity that hitherto served the multifaceted foreign exploitation shall regain their true identity and human rights. As a part of this process, it is only natural that women should benefit from a particularly large augmentation of their rights, because of the greater oppression that they suffered under the taghuti regime.

The family is the fundamental unit of society and the main centre for the growth and edification of human being. Compatibility with respect to belief and ideal, which provides the primary basis for man's development and growth, is the main consideration in the establishment of a family. It is the duty of the Islamic government to provide the necessary facilities for the attainment of this goal. This view of the family unit delivers woman from being regarded as an object or as an instrument in the service of promoting consumerism and exploitation. Not only does woman recover thereby her momentous and precious function of motherhood, rearing of ideologically committed human beings, she also assumes a pioneering social role and becomes the fellow struggler of man in all vital areas of life. Given the weighty responsibilities that woman thus assumes, she is accorded in Islam great value and nobility.

9. An Ideological Army

In the formation and equipping of the country's defence forces, due attention must be paid to faith and ideology as the basic criteria. Accordingly, the Army of the Islamic Republic of Iran and the Islamic Revolutionary Guards Corps are to be organized in conformity with this goal, and they will be responsible not only for guarding and preserving the frontiers of the country, but also for fulfilling the ideological mission of jihad in God's way; that is, extending the sovereignty of God's law throughout the world (this is in accordance with the Koranic verse "Prepare against them whatever force you are able to muster, and strings of horses, striking fear into the enemy of God and your enemy, and others besides them" [Koran 8:60]).

10. The Judiciary in the Constitution

The judiciary is of vital importance in the context of safeguarding the rights of the people in accordance with the line followed by the Islamic movement, and the prevention of deviations within the Islamic nation. Provision has therefore been made for the creation of a judicial system based on Islamic justice and operated by just judges with meticulous knowledge of the Islamic laws. This system, because of its essentially sensitive nature and the need for full ideological conformity, must be free from every kind of unhealthy relation and connection (this is in accordance with the Koranic verse "When you judge among the people, judge with justice" [Koran 4:58]).

11. Executive Power

Considering the particular importance of the executive power in implementing the laws and ordinances of Islam for the sake of establishing the rule of just relations over society, and considering, too, its vital role in paving the way for the attainment of the ultimate goal of life, the executive power must work toward the creation of an Islamic society. Consequently, the confinement of the executive power within any kind of complex and inhibiting system that delays or impedes the attainment of this goal is rejected by Islam. Therefore, the system of bureaucracy, the result and product of taghuti forms of government, will be firmly cast away, so that an executive system that functions efficiently and swiftly in the fulfilment of its administrative commitments comes into existence.

12. Mass-Communication Media

The mass-communication media, radio and television, must serve the diffusion of Islamic culture in pursuit of the evolutionary course of the Islamic Revolution. To this end, the media should be used as a forum for healthy encounter of different ideas, but they must strictly refrain from diffusion and propagation of destructive and anti-Islamic practices. It is incumbent on all to adhere to the principles of this Constitution, for it regards as its highest aim the freedom and dignity of the human race and provides for the growth and development of the human being. It is also necessary that the Muslim people should participate actively in the construction of Islamic society by selecting competent and believing [mu'min] officials and keeping close and constant watch on their performance. They may then hope for success in building an ideal Islamic society that can be a model for all people of the world and a witness to its perfection (in accordance with the Koranic verse "Thus We made you a median community, that you might be witnesses to men" [2:143]).

13. Representatives

The Assembly of Experts, composed of representatives of the people, completed its task of framing the Constitution, on the basis of the draft proposed by the government as well as all the proposals received from different groups of the people, in one hundred and seventy-five articles arranged in twelve chapters, on the eve of the fifteenth century after the migration of the Holy Prophet (peace and blessings be upon him and his Family), the founder of the redeeming school of Islam, and in accordance with the aims and aspirations set out above, with the hope that this century will witness the establishment of a universal government of the mustadAfun and the downfall of all the mustakbirun.

CHAPTER I. General Principles

Article 1: The form of government of Iran is that of an Islamic Republic, endorsed by the people of Iran on the basis of their longstanding belief in the sovereignty of truth and Koranic justice, in the referendum of Farwardin 9 and 10 in the year 1358 of the solar Islamic calendar, corresponding to Jamadial-Awwal 1 and 2 in the year 1399 of the lunar Islamic calendar [March 29 and 30, 1979], through the affirmative vote of a majority of 98.2% of eligible voters, held after the victorious Islamic Revolution led by the eminent marji' altaqlid, Ayatullah al-Uzma Imam Khomeini.

Article 2: The Islamic Republic is a system based on belief in:

1. the One God (as stated in the phrase "There is no god except Allah"), His exclusive sovereignty and the right to legislate, and the necessity of submission to His commands;

3. the return to God in the Hereafter, and the constructive role of this belief in the course of man's ascent towards God;
4. the justice of God in creation and legislation;
5. continuous leadership (imamah) and perpetual guidance, and its fundamental role in ensuring the uninterrupted process of the revolution of Islam;
6. the exalted dignity and value of man, and his freedom coupled with responsibility before God;
 - in which equity, justice, political, economic, social, and cultural independence, and national solidarity are secured by recourse to:
 - a. continuous ijtiḥād of the fuqaha' possessing necessary qualifications, exercised on the basis of the Koran and the Sunnah of the Ma'sumun, upon all of whom be peace;
 - b. sciences and arts and the most advanced results of human experience, together with the effort to advance them further;

15. the expansion and strengthening of Islamic brotherhood and public cooperation among all the people;

16. framing the foreign policy of the country on the basis of Islamic criteria, fraternal commitment to all Muslims, and unsparing support to the mustadAfun of the world.

Article 4: All civil, penal, financial, economic, administrative, cultural, military, political, and other laws and regulations must be based on Islamic criteria. This principle applies absolutely and generally to all articles of the Constitution as well as to all other laws and regulations, and the fuqaha' of the Guardian Council are judges in this matter.

Article 5: During the Occultation of the Walial-Asr (may God hasten his reappearance), the wilayah and leadership of the Ummah devolve upon the just [Adil] and pious [muttaqi] faqih, who is fully aware of the circumstances of his age; courageous, resourceful, and possessed of administrative ability, will assume the responsibilities of this office in accordance with Article 107.

Article 6: In the Islamic Republic of Iran, the affairs of the country must be administered on the basis of public opinion expressed by the means of elections, including the election of the President, the representatives of the Islamic Consultative Assembly, and the members of councils, or by means of referenda in matters specified in other articles of this Constitution.

The nature of each of these councils, together with the manner of their formation, their jurisdiction, and scope of their duties and functions, is determined by the Constitution and laws derived from it.

Article 8: In the Islamic Republic of Iran, al-Amr bilma'ruf wa al-nahy An al-munkar is a universal and reciprocal duty that must be fulfilled by the people with respect to one another, by the government with respect to the people, and by the people with respect to the government. The conditions, limits, and nature of this duty will be specified by law. (This is in accordance with the Koranic verse: "The believers, men and women, are guardians of one another, they enjoin the good and forbid the evil" [9:71]).

Article 9: In the Islamic Republic of Iran, the freedom, independence, unity, and territorial integrity of the country are inseparable from one another, and their preservation is the duty of the government and all individual citizens. No individual, group, or authority, has the right to infringe in the slightest way upon the political, cultural, economic, and military independence or the territorial integrity of Iran under the pretext of exercising freedom. Similarly, no authority has the right to abrogate legitimate freedoms, not even by enacting laws and regulations for that purpose, under the pretext of preserving the independence and territorial integrity of the country.

These schools enjoy official status in matters pertaining to religious education, affairs of personal status (marriage, divorce, inheritance, and wills) and related litigation in courts of law. In regions of the country where Muslims following any one of these schools of fiqh constitute the majority, local regulations, within the bounds of the jurisdiction of local councils, are to be in accordance with the respective school of fiqh, without infringing upon the rights of the followers of other schools.

Article 13: Zoroastrian, Jewish, and Christian Iranians are the only recognized religious minorities, who, within the limits of the law (see: Edict of Umar), are free to perform their religious rites and ceremonies, and to act according to their own canon in matters of personal affairs and religious education.

Article 14: In accordance with the sacred verse ("God does not forbid you to deal kindly and justly with those who have not fought against you because of your religion and who have not expelled you from your homes" [60:8]), the government of the Islamic Republic of Iran and all Muslims are duty-bound to treat non-Muslims in conformity with ethical norms and the principles of Islamic justice and equity, and to respect their human rights. HAMAS COVENANT 1988

The Covenant of the Islamic Resistance Movement,
18 August 1988

(We want to turn your attention to the following facts: The Hamas, as its mother organisation "The Muslim Brotherhood", is neither a terror organisation nor a bunch of mad extremists. All these organisations can be called radical (from the Latin word radix = root, meaning here: back to the roots!) and fundamentalistic, but this notion may also apply to the Roman-Catholic Church and other denominations.

Being fundamentalistic means that the Hamas does not deviate from the norm, but rather that the Hamas follows exactly what Mohammed said and did, written down in the Koran, the Sira, the Hadith, and the Sharia law. In Islam, the contents of this Covenant are absolutely legal and in accordance with all what Islamic jurisprudence is based on! In the viewpoint of a true Muslim, all those who plea for a so-called "moderate Islam" are extremists and heretics.)

Hamas, the Palestinian wing of the Muslim Brotherhood:

The Hamas Covenant or Hamas Charter, formally known in English as the Covenant of the Islamic Resistance Movement, was originally issued on 18 August 1988 and outlines the founding identity, stand, and aims of Hamas (the Islamic Resistance Movement). A new charter was issued by Hamas leader Khaled Mashal on 1 May 2017 in Doha.

The original Charter identified Hamas as the Muslim Brotherhood in Palestine and declares its members to be Muslims who "fear God and raise the banner of Jihad in the face of the oppressors." The charter states that "our struggle against the Jews is very great and very serious" and calls for the eventual creation of an Islamic state in Palestine, in place of Israel and the Palestinian Territories, and the obliteration or dissolution of Israel. It emphasizes the importance of jihad, stating in article 13, "There is no solution for the Palestinian question except through Jihad. Initiatives, proposals and international conferences are all a waste of time and vain endeavors." The charter also states that Hamas is humanistic, and tolerant of other religions as long as they "stop disputing the sovereignty of Islam in this region". The Charter adds that "renouncing any part of Palestine means renouncing part of the religion" of Islam.

In 2008, the Hamas leader in Gaza, Ismail Haniyeh, stated that Hamas would agree to accept a Palestinian state along the 1967 borders, and to offer a long-term truce with Israel. In contrast to this, Hamas leader Mahmoud al-Zahar stated that any talk of the 1967 lines is "just a phase" until Hamas has a chance to "regain the land...even if we [Hamas] have to do so inch by inch." Other Hamas leaders, including Ismail Haniyeh and Khaled Meshaal, have also stated repeatedly that "Palestine – from the [Jordan] River to the [Mediterranean] Sea, from its north to its south – is our land, our right, and our homeland. There will be no relinquishing or forsaking even an inch or small part of it," and that "we shall not relinquish the Islamic waqf on the land of Palestine, and Jerusalem shall not be divided into Western and Eastern Jerusalem. Jerusalem is a single united city, and Palestine stretches from the Mediterranean Sea to the Jordan River, and from Naqoura [Rosh Ha-Niqra] to Umm Al-Rashrash [Eilat] in the south."

After a new charter was scheduled to be issued in May 2017, Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office issued a statement in which it accused Hamas of trying to fool the world and also asked it to stop its terror activities for a true change.

The 2017 charter accepted for the first time the idea of a Palestinian state within the borders that existed before 1967 and rejects recognition of Israel which it terms as the "Zionist enemy". It advocates such a state as transitional but also advocates "liberation of all of Palestine". The new document also states that the group doesn't seek war with the Jewish people but only against Zionism which it holds responsible for "occupation of Palestine". Mashal also stated that Hamas was ending its association with the Muslim Brotherhood.)

In The Name Of The Most Merciful Allah

"Ye are the best nation that hath been raised up unto mankind: ye command that which is just, and ye forbid that which is unjust, and ye believe in Allah. And if they who have received the scriptures had believed, it had surely been the better for them: there are believers among them, but the greater part of them are transgressors. They shall not hurt you, unless with a slight hurt; and if they fight against you, they shall turn their backs to you, and they shall not be helped. They are smitten with vileness wheresoever they are found; unless they obtain security by entering into a treaty with Allah, and a treaty with men; and they draw on themselves indignation from Allah, and they are afflicted with poverty. This they suffer, because they disbelieved the signs of Allah, and slew the prophets unjustly; this, because they were rebellious, and transgressed." (Al-Imran - verses 109-111).

Israel will exist and will continue to exist until Islam will obliterate it, just as it obliterated others before it" (The Martyr, Imam Hassan al-Banna, of blessed memory).

"The Islamic world is on fire. Each of us should pour some water, no matter how little, to extinguish whatever one can without waiting for the others." (Sheikh Amjad al-Zahawi, of blessed memory).

In The Name Of The Most Merciful Allah

Introduction

Praise be unto Allah, to whom we resort for help, and whose forgiveness, guidance and support we seek; Allah bless the Prophet and grant him salvation, his companions and supporters, and to those who carried out his message and adopted his laws - everlasting prayers and salvation as long as the earth and heaven will last. Hereafter:

O People:

Out of the midst of troubles and the sea of suffering, out of the palpitations of faithful hearts and cleansed arms; out of the sense of duty, and in response to Allah's command, the call has gone out rallying people together and making them follow the ways of Allah, leading them to have determined will in order to fulfill their role in life, to overcome all obstacles, and surmount the difficulties on the way. Constant preparation has continued and so has the readiness to sacrifice life and all that is precious for the sake of Allah.

Thus it was that the nucleus (of the movement) was formed and started to pave its way through the tempestuous sea of hopes and expectations, of wishes and yearnings, of troubles and obstacles, of pain and challenges, both inside and outside.

When the idea was ripe, the seed grew and the plant struck root in the soil of reality, away from passing emotions, and hateful haste. The Islamic Resistance Movement emerged to carry out its role through striving for the sake of its Creator, its arms intertwined with those of all the fighters for the liberation of Palestine. The spirits of its fighters meet with the spirits of all the fighters who have sacrificed their lives on the soil of Palestine, ever since it was conquered by the companions of the Prophet, Allah bless him and grant him salvation, and until this day.

This Covenant of the Islamic Resistance Movement (HAMAS), clarifies its picture, reveals its identity, outlines its stand, explains its aims, speaks about its hopes, and calls for its support, adoption and joining its ranks. Our struggle against the Jews is very great and very serious. It needs all sincere efforts. It is a step that inevitably should be followed by other steps. The Movement is but one squadron that should be supported by more and more squadrons from this vast Arab and Islamic world, until the enemy is vanquished and Allah's victory is realised.

Thus we see them coming on the horizon "and you shall learn about it hereafter" "Allah hath written, Verily I will prevail, and my apostles: for Allah is strong and mighty." (The Dispute - verse 21).

"Say to them, This is my way: I invite you to Allah, by an evident demonstration; both I and he who followeth me; and, praise be unto Allah! I am not an idolator." (Joseph - verse 107).

Hamas (means) strength and bravery -(according to) Al-Mua'jam al-Wasit: c1.

DEFINITION OF THE MOVEMENT

Ideological Starting-Points

ARTICLE 1: The Islamic Resistance Movement: The Movement's programme is Islam. From it, it draws its ideas, ways of thinking and understanding of the universe, life and man. It resorts to it for judgement in all its conduct, and it is inspired by it for guidance of its steps.

The Islamic Resistance Movement's Relation With the Moslem Brotherhood Group:

ARTICLE 2: The Islamic Resistance Movement is one of the wings of Moslem Brotherhood in Palestine. Moslem Brotherhood Movement is a universal Organisation which constitutes the largest Islamic movement in modern times. It is characterised by its deep understanding, accurate comprehension and its complete embrace of all Islamic concepts of all aspects of life, culture, creed, politics, economics, education, society, justice and judgement, the spreading of Islam, education, art, information, science of the occult and conversion to Islam.

Structure and Formation

ARTICLE 3: The basic structure of the Islamic Resistance Movement consists of Moslems who have given their allegiance to Allah whom they truly worship, - "I have created the jinn and humans only for the purpose of worshipping" - who know their duty towards themselves, their families and country. In all that, they fear Allah and raise the banner of Jihad in the face of the oppressors, so that they would rid the land and the people of their uncleanness, vileness and evils.

"But we will oppose truth to vanity, and it shall confound the same; and behold, it shall vanish away." (Prophets - verse 18).

ARTICLE 4: The Islamic Resistance Movement welcomes every Moslem who embraces its faith, ideology, follows its programme, keeps its secrets, and wants to belong to its ranks and carry out the duty. Allah will certainly reward such one.

Time and Place Extent of the Islamic Resistance Movement:

ARTICLE 5: Time extent of the Islamic Resistance Movement: By adopting Islam as its way of life, the Movement goes back to the time of the birth of the Islamic message, of the righteous ancestor, for Allah is its target, the Prophet is its example and the Koran is its constitution. Its extent in place is anywhere that there are Moslems who embrace Islam as their way of life everywhere in the globe. This being so, it extends to the depth of the earth and reaches out to the heaven.

"Dost thou not see how Allah putteth forth a parable; representing a good word, as a good tree, whose root is firmly fixed in the earth, and whose branches reach unto heaven; which bringeth forth its fruit in all seasons, by the will of its Lord? Allah propoundeth parables unto men, that they may be instructed." (Abraham - verses 24-25).

Characteristics and Independence:

ARTICLE 6: The Islamic Resistance Movement is a distinguished Palestinian movement, whose allegiance is to Allah, and whose way of life is Islam. It strives to raise the banner of Allah over every inch of Palestine, for under the wing of Islam followers of all religions can coexist in security and safety where their lives, possessions and rights are concerned. In the absence of Islam, strife will be rife, oppression spreads, evil prevails and schisms and wars will break out.

How excellent was the Moslem poet, Mohamed Ikbal, when he wrote:

"If faith is lost, there is no security and there is no life for him who does not adhere to religion. He who accepts life without religion, has taken annihilation as his companion for life."

The Universality of the Islamic Resistance Movement:

ARTICLE 7: As a result of the fact that those Moslems who adhere to the ways of the Islamic Resistance Movement spread all over the world, rally support for it and its stands, strive towards enhancing its struggle, the Movement is a universal one. It is well-equipped for that because of the clarity of its ideology, the nobility of its aim and the loftiness of its objectives.

On this basis, the Movement should be viewed and evaluated, and its role be recognised. He who denies its right, evades supporting it and turns a blind eye to facts, whether intentionally or unintentionally, would awaken to see that events have overtaken him and with no logic to justify his attitude. One should certainly learn from past examples.

The injustice of next-of-kin is harder to bear than the smite of the (sharp) Indian sword.

"We have also sent down unto thee the book of the Koran with truth, confirming that scripture which was revealed before it; and preserving the same safe from corruption. Judge therefore between them according to that which Allah hath revealed; and follow not their desires, by swerving from the truth which hath come unto thee. Unto every of you have we given a law, and an open path; and if Allah had pleased, he had surely made you one people; but he hath thought it fit to give you different laws, that he might try you in that which he hath given you respectively. Therefore strive to excel each other in good works; unto Allah shall ye all return, and then will he declare unto you that concerning which ye have disagreed." (The Table, verse 48).

The Islamic Resistance Movement is one of the links in the chain of the struggle against the Zionist invaders. It goes back to 1939, to the emergence of the martyr Izz al-Din al-Kissam and his brethren the fighters, members of Moslem Brotherhood. It goes on to reach out and become one with another chain that includes the struggle of the Palestinians and Moslem Brotherhood in the 1948 war and the Jihad operations of the Moslem Brotherhood in 1968 and after.

Moreover, if the links have been distant from each other and if obstacles, placed by those who are the lackeys of Zionism in the way of the fighters obstructed the continuation of the struggle, the Islamic Resistance Movement aspires to the realisation of Allah's promise, no matter how long that should take. The Prophet, Allah bless him and grant him salvation, has said:

"The Day of Judgement will not come about until Moslems fight the Jews (killing the Jews), when the Jew will hide behind stones and trees. The stones and trees will say O Moslems, O Abdulla, there is a Jew behind me, come and kill him (conduct genocide, a holocaust, which only the Jews and some educated people are aware of!). Only the Gharkad tree, (evidently a certain kind of tree) would not do that because it is one of the trees of the Jews." (related by al-Bukhari and Moslem).

The Slogan of the Islamic Resistance Movement:

ARTICLE 8: Allah is its target, the Prophet is its model, the Koran its constitution: Jihad is its path and death for the sake of Allah is the loftiest of its wishes.

OBJECTIVES

Incentives and Objectives:

ARTICLE 9: The Islamic Resistance Movement found itself at a time when Islam has disappeared from life. Thus rules shook, concepts were upset, values changed and evil people took control, oppression and darkness prevailed, cowards became like tigers: homelands were usurped, people were scattered and were caused to wander all over the world, the state of justice disappeared and the state of falsehood replaced it. Nothing remained in its right place. Thus, when Islam is absent from the arena, everything changes. From this state of affairs the incentives are drawn.

As for the objectives: They are the fighting against the false, defeating it and vanquishing it so that justice could prevail, homelands be retrieved and from its mosques would the voice of the muAzen emerge declaring the establishment of the state of Islam, so that people and things would return each to their right places and Allah is our helper.

"...and if Allah had not prevented men, the one by the other, verily the earth had been corrupted: but Allah is beneficent towards his creatures." (Koran: The Cow - verse 251).

ARTICLE 10: As the Islamic Resistance Movement paves its way, it will back the oppressed and support the wronged with all its might. It will spare no effort to bring about justice and defeat injustice, in word and deed, in this place and everywhere it can reach and have influence therein.

Strategies and Methods

Strategies of the Islamic Resistance Movement: Palestine Is Islamic Waqf (that is: land that once was property of Islam, such as also the Iberian peninsula, southern France, southern Italy, Israel, Lebanon, north-western China, northern India, southern Russia, or the Balkans, is still considered, today and for all eternity, Islamic land!):

ARTICLE 11: The Islamic Resistance Movement believes that the land of Palestine is an Islamic Waqf consecrated for future Moslem generations until "Judgement Day" (= for all eternity). It, or any part of it, should not be squandered: it, or any part of it, should not be given up. Neither a single Arab country nor all Arab countries, neither any king or president, nor all the kings and presidents, neither any Organisation nor all of them, be they Palestinian or Arab, possess the right to do that. Palestine is an Islamic Waqf land consecrated for Moslem generations until Judgement Day. This being so, who could claim to have the right to represent Moslem generations till Judgement Day?

This is the law governing the land of Palestine in the Islamic Sharia (law) and the same goes for any land the Moslems have conquered by force, because during the times of (Islamic) conquests, the Moslems consecrated these lands to Moslem generations till the Day of Judgement.

It happened like this: When the leaders of the Islamic armies conquered Syria and Iraq, they sent to the Caliph of the Moslems, Umar bin-el-Khatib, asking for his advice concerning the conquered land - whether they should divide it among the soldiers, or leave it for its owners, or what? After consultations and discussions between the Caliph of the Moslems, Umar bin-el-Khatib and companions of the Prophet, Allah bless him and grant him salvation, it was decided that the land should be left with its owners who could benefit by its fruit. As for the real ownership of the land and the land itself, it should be consecrated for Moslem generations till Judgement Day. Those who are on the land, are there only to benefit from its fruit. This Waqf remains as long as earth and heaven remain. Any procedure in contradiction to Islamic Sharia, where Palestine is concerned, is null and void.

"Verily, this is a certain truth. Wherefore praise the name of thy Lord, the great Allah." (The Inevitable - verse 95).

Homeland and Nationalism from the Point of View of the Islamic Resistance Movement in Palestine:

ARTICLE 12: Nationalism, from the point of view of the Islamic Resistance Movement, is part of the religious creed. Nothing in nationalism is more significant or deeper than in the case when an enemy should tread Moslem land. Resisting and quelling the enemy become the individual duty of every Moslem, male or female. A woman can go out to fight the enemy without her husband's permission, and so does the slave: without his master's permission.

Nothing of the sort is to be found in any other regime. This is an undisputed fact. If other nationalist movements are connected with materialistic, human or regional causes, nationalism of the Islamic Resistance Movement has all these elements as well as the more important elements that give it soul and life. It is connected to the source of spirit and the granter of life, hoisting in the sky of the homeland the heavenly banner that joins earth and heaven with a strong bond.

If Moses comes and throws his staff, both witch and magic are annulled.

"Now is the right direction manifestly distinguished from deceit: whoever therefore shall deny Tagut, and believe in Allah, he shall surely take hold with a strong handle, which shall not be broken; Allah is he who heareth and seeth." (The Cow - Verse 256).

Peaceful Solutions, Initiatives and International Conferences:

ARTICLE 13: Initiatives, and so-called peaceful solutions and international conferences, are in contradiction to the principles of the Islamic Resistance Movement. Abusing any part of Palestine is abuse directed against part of religion. Nationalism of the Islamic Resistance Movement is part of its religion. Its members have been fed on that. For the sake of hoisting the banner of Allah over their homeland they fight. "Allah will be prominent, but most people do not know."

Now and then the call goes out for the convening of an international conference to look for ways of solving the (Palestinian) question. Some accept, others reject the idea, for this or other reason, with one stipulation or more for consent to convening the conference and participating in it. Knowing the parties constituting the conference, their past and present attitudes towards Moslem problems, the Islamic Resistance Movement does not consider these conferences capable of realising the demands, restoring the rights or doing justice to the oppressed. These conferences are only ways of setting the infidels in the land of the Moslems as arbitrators. When did the infidels do justice to the believers?

"But the Jews will not be pleased with thee, neither the Christians, until thou follow their religion; say, The direction of Allah is the true direction. And verily if thou follow their desires, after the knowledge which hath been given thee, thou shalt find no patron or protector against Allah." (The Cow - verse 120).

There is no solution for the Palestinian question except through Jihad. Initiatives, proposals and international conferences are all a waste of time and vain endeavors. The Palestinian people know better than to consent to having their future, rights and fate toyed with. As in said in the honourable Hadith:

"The people of Syria are Allah's lash in His land. He wreaks His vengeance through them against whomsoever He wishes among His slaves. It is unthinkable that those who are double-faced among them should prosper over the faithful. They will certainly die out of grief and desperation."

The Three Circles:

ARTICLE 14: The question of the liberation of Palestine is bound to three circles: the Palestinian circle, the Arab circle and the Islamic circle. Each of these circles has its role in the struggle against Zionism. Each has its duties, and it is a horrible mistake and a sign of deep ignorance to overlook any of these circles. Palestine is an Islamic land which has the first of the two kiblahs (direction to which Moslems turn in praying), the third of the holy (Islamic) sanctuaries, and the point of departure for Mohamed's midnight journey to the seven heavens (i.e. Jerusalem).

"Praise be unto him who transported his servant by night, from the sacred temple of Mecca to the farther temple of Jerusalem, the circuit of which we have blessed, that we might show him some of our signs; for Allah is he who heareth, and seeth." (The Night-Journey - verse 1).

Since this is the case, liberation of Palestine is then an individual duty for every Moslem wherever he may be. On this basis, the problem should be viewed. This should be realised by every Moslem.

The day the problem is dealt with on this basis, when the three circles mobilize their capabilities, the present state of affairs will change and the day of liberation will come nearer.

"Verily ye are stronger than they, by reason of the terror cast into their breasts from Allah. This, because they are not people of prudence." (The Emigration - verse 13).

The Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine is an Individual Duty:

ARTICLE 15: The day that enemies usurp part of Moslem land, Jihad becomes the individual duty of every Moslem. In face of the Jews' usurpation of Palestine, it is compulsory that the banner of Jihad be raised. To do this requires the diffusion of Islamic consciousness among the masses, both on the regional, Arab and Islamic levels. It is necessary to instill the spirit of Jihad in the heart of the nation so that they would confront the enemies and join the ranks of the fighters.

It is necessary that scientists, educators and teachers, information and media people, as well as the educated masses, especially the youth and sheikhs of the Islamic movements, should take part in the operation of awakening (the masses). It is important that basic changes be made in the school curriculum, to cleanse it of the traces of ideological invasion that affected it as a result of the orientalist and missionaries who infiltrated the region following the defeat of the Crusaders at the hands of Salah el-Din (Saladin). The Crusaders realised that it was impossible to defeat the Moslems without first having ideological invasion pave the way by upsetting their thoughts, disfiguring their heritage and violating their ideals. Only then could they invade with soldiers. This, in its turn, paved the way for the imperialistic invasion that made Allenby declare on entering Jerusalem: "Only now have the Crusades ended." General Guru stood at Salah el-Din's grave and said: "We have returned, O Salah el-Din." Imperialism has helped towards the strengthening of ideological invasion, deepening, and still does, its roots. All this has paved the way towards the loss of Palestine.

It is necessary to instill in the minds of the Moslem generations that the Palestinian problem is a religious problem, and should be dealt with on this basis. Palestine contains Islamic holy sites. In it there is al-Aqsa Mosque which is bound to the great Mosque in Mecca in an inseparable bond as long as heaven and earth speak of Isra' (Mohammed's midnight journey to the seven heavens) and Mi'raj (Mohammed's ascension to the seven heavens from Jerusalem).

"The bond of one day for the sake of Allah is better than the world and whatever there is on it. The place of one's whip in Paradise is far better than the world and whatever there is on it. A worshipper's going and coming in the service of Allah is better than the world and whatever there is on it." (As related by al-Bukhari, Moslem, al-Tarmidhi and Ibn Maja).

"I swear by the holder of Mohammed's soul that I would like to invade and be killed for the sake of Allah, then invade and be killed, and then invade again and be killed." (As related by al-Bukhari and Moslem).

The Education of the Generations:

ARTICLE 16: It is necessary to follow Islamic orientation in educating the Islamic generations in our region by teaching the religious duties, comprehensive study of the Koran, the study of the Prophet's Sunna (his sayings and doings), and learning about Islamic history and heritage from their authentic sources. This should be done by specialised and learned people, using a curriculum that would healthily form the thoughts and faith of the Moslem student. Side by side with this, a comprehensive study of the enemy, his human and financial capabilities, learning about his points of weakness and strength, and getting to know the forces supporting and helping him, should also be included. Also, it is important to be acquainted with the current events, to follow what is new and to study the analysis and commentaries made of these events. Planning for the present and future, studying every trend appearing, is a must so that the fighting Moslem would live knowing his aim, objective and his way in the midst of what is going on around him.

"O my son, verily every matter, whether good or bad, though it be the weight of a grain of mustard-seed, and be hidden in a rock, or in the heavens, or in the earth, Allah will bring the same to light; for Allah is clear-sighted and knowing. O my son, be constant at prayer, and command that which is just, and forbid that which is evil: and be patient under the afflictions which shall befall thee; for this is a duty absolutely incumbent on all men. Distort not thy face out of contempt to men, neither walk in the earth with insolence; for Allah loveth no arrogant, vain-glorious person." (Lokman - verses 16-18).

The Role of the Moslem Woman:

ARTICLE 17: The Moslem woman has a role no less important than that of the moslem man in the battle of liberation. She is the maker of men. Her role in guiding and educating the new generations is great. The enemies have realised the importance of her role. They consider that if they are able to direct and bring her up they way they wish, far from Islam, they would have won the battle. That is why you find them giving these attempts constant attention through information campaigns, films, and the school curriculum, using for that purpose their lackeys who are infiltrated through Zionist Organisations under various names and shapes, such as Freemasons, Rotary Clubs, espionage groups and others, which are all nothing more than cells of subversion and saboteurs. These Organisations have ample resources that enable them to play their role in societies for the purpose of achieving the Zionist targets and to deepen the concepts that would serve the enemy. These Organisations operate in the absence of Islam and its estrangement among its people. The Islamic peoples should perform their role in confronting the conspiracies of these saboteurs. The day Islam is in control of guiding the affairs of life, these Organisations, hostile to humanity and Islam, will be obliterated.

ARTICLE 18: Woman in the home of the fighting family, whether she is a mother or a sister, plays the most important role in looking after the family, rearing the children and imbuing them with moral values and thoughts derived from Islam. She has to teach them to perform the religious duties in preparation for the role of fighting awaiting them. That is why it is necessary to pay great attention to schools and the curriculum followed in educating Moslem girls, so that they would grow up to be good mothers, aware of their role in the battle of liberation.

She has to be of sufficient knowledge and understanding where the performance of housekeeping matters are concerned, because economy and avoidance of waste of the family budget, is one of the requirements for the ability to continue moving forward in the difficult conditions surrounding us. She should put before her eyes the fact that the money available to her is just like blood which should never flow except through the veins so that both children and grown-ups could continue to live.

"Verily, the Moslems of either sex, and the true believers of either sex, and the devout men, and the devout women, and the men of veracity, and the women of veracity, and the patient men, and the patient women, and the humble men, and the humble women, and the alms-givers of either sex who remember Allah frequently; for them hath Allah prepared forgiveness and a great reward." (The Confederates - verse 25).

The Role of Islamic Art in the Battle of Liberation:

ARTICLE 19: Art has regulations and measures by which it can be determined whether it is Islamic or pre-Islamic (Jahili) art. The issues of Islamic liberation are in need of Islamic art that would take the spirit high, without raising one side of human nature above the other, but rather raise all of them harmoniously in an equilibrium.

Man is a unique and wonderful creature, made out of a handful of clay and a breath from Allah. Islamic art addresses man on this basis, while pre-Islamic art addresses the body giving preference to the clay component in it.

The book, the article, the bulletin, the sermon, the thesis, the popular poem, the poetic ode, the song, the play and others, contain the characteristics of Islamic art, then these are among the requirements of ideological mobilization, renewed food for the journey and recreation for the soul. The road is long and suffering is plenty. The soul will be bored, but Islamic art renews the energies, resurrects the movement, arousing in them lofty meanings and proper conduct. "Nothing can improve the self if it is in retreat except shifting from one mood to another."

All this is utterly serious and no jest, for those who are fighters do not jest.

Social Mutual Responsibility:

ARTICLE 20: Moslem society is a mutually responsible society. The Prophet, prayers and greetings be unto him, said: "Blessed are the generous, whether they were in town or on a journey, who have collected all that they had and shared it equally among themselves."

The Islamic spirit is what should prevail in every Moslem society. The society that confronts a vicious enemy which acts in a way similar to Nazism, making no differentiation between man and woman, between children and old people - such a society is entitled to this Islamic spirit. Our enemy relies on the methods of collective punishment. He has deprived people of their homeland and properties, pursued them in their places of exile and gathering, breaking bones, shooting at women, children and old people, with or without a reason. The enemy has opened detention camps where thousands and thousands of people are thrown and kept under sub-human conditions. Added to this, are the demolition of houses, rendering children orphans, meting cruel sentences against thousands of young people, and causing them to spend the best years of their lives in the dungeons of prisons.

In their Nazi treatment, the Jews made no exception for women or children. Their policy of striking fear in the heart is meant for all. They attack people where their breadwinning is concerned, extorting their money and threatening their honour. They deal with people as if they were the worst war criminals. Deportation from the homeland is a kind of murder.

To counter these deeds, it is necessary that social mutual responsibility should prevail among the people. The enemy should be faced by the people as a single body which if one member of it should complain, the rest of the body would respond by feeling the same pains.

ARTICLE 21: Mutual social responsibility means extending assistance, financial or moral, to all those who are in need and joining in the execution of some of the work. Members of the Islamic Resistance Movement should consider the interests of the masses as their own personal interests. They must spare no effort in achieving and preserving them. They must prevent any foul play with the future of the upcoming generations and anything that could cause loss to society. The masses are part of them and they are part of the masses. Their strength is theirs, and their future is theirs. Members of the Islamic Resistance Movement should share the people's joy and grief, adopt the demands of the public and whatever means by which they could be realised. The day that such a spirit prevails, brotherliness would deepen, cooperation, sympathy and unity will be enhanced and the ranks will be solidified to confront the enemies.

Supportive Forces Behind the Enemy:

ARTICLE 22: For a long time, the enemies have been planning, skillfully and with precision, for the achievement of what they have attained. They took into consideration the causes affecting the current of events. They strived to amass great and substantive material wealth which they devoted to the realisation of their dream. With their money, they took control of the world media, news agencies, the press, publishing houses, broadcasting stations, and others. With their money they stirred revolutions in various parts of the world with the purpose of achieving their interests and reaping the fruit therein. They were behind the French Revolution, the Communist revolution and most of the revolutions we heard and hear about, here and there. With their money they formed secret societies, such as Freemasons, Rotary Clubs, the Lions and others in different parts of the world for the purpose of sabotaging societies and achieving Zionist interests. With their money they were able to control imperialistic countries and instigate them to colonize many countries in order to enable them to exploit their resources and spread corruption there.

You may speak as much as you want about regional and world wars. They were behind World War I, when they were able to destroy the Islamic Caliphate, making financial gains and controlling resources. They obtained the Balfour Declaration, formed the League of Nations through which they could rule the world. They were behind World War II, through which they made huge financial gains by trading in armaments, and paved the way for the establishment of their state. It was they who instigated the replacement of the League of Nations with the United Nations and the Security Council to enable them to rule the world through them. There is no war going on anywhere, without having their finger in it.

"So often as they shall kindle a fire for war, Allah shall extinguish it; and they shall set their minds to act corruptly in the earth, but Allah loveth not the corrupt doers." (The Table - verse 64).

The imperialistic forces in the Capitalist West and Communist East, support the enemy with all their might, in money and in men. These forces take turns in doing that. The day Islam appears, the forces of infidelity would unite to challenge it, for the infidels are of one nation.

"O true believers, contract not an intimate friendship with any besides yourselves: they will not fail to corrupt you. They wish for that which may cause you to perish: their hatred hath already appeared from out of their mouths; but what their breasts conceal is yet more inveterate. We have already shown you signs of their ill will towards you, if ye understand." (The Family of Imran - verse 118).

It is not in vain that the verse is ended with Allah's words "if ye understand."

OUR ATTITUDES TOWARDS:

A.) Islamic Movements:

ARTICLE 23: The Islamic Resistance Movement views other Islamic movements with respect and appreciation. If it were at variance with them on one point or opinion, it is in agreement with them on other points and understandings. It considers these movements, if they reveal good intentions and dedication to Allah, that they fall into the category of those who are trying hard since they act within the Islamic circle. Each active person has his share.

The Islamic Resistance Movement considers all these movements as a fund for itself. It prays to Allah for guidance and directions for all and it spares no effort to keep the banner of unity raised, ever striving for its realisation in accordance with the Koran and the Prophet's directives.

"And cleave all of you unto the covenant of Allah, and depart not from it, and remember the favour of Allah towards you: since ye were enemies, and he reconciled your hearts, and ye became companions and brethren by his favour: and ye were on the brink of a pit of fire, and he delivered you thence. Allah declareth unto you his signs, that ye may be directed." (The Family of Imran - Verse 102).

ARTICLE 24: The Islamic Resistance Movement does not allow slandering or speaking ill of individuals or groups, for the believer does not indulge in such malpractices. It is necessary to differentiate between this behaviour and the stands taken by certain individuals and groups. Whenever those stands are erroneous, the Islamic Resistance Movement preserves the right to expound the error and to warn against it. It will strive to show the right path and to judge the case in question with objectivity. Wise conduct is indeed the target of the believer who follows it wherever he discerns it.

"Allah loveth not the speaking ill of anyone in public, unless he who is injured call for assistance: and Allah heareth and knoweth: whether ye publish a good action, or conceal it, or forgive evil, verily Allah is gracious and powerful." (Women - verses 147-148).

B.) Nationalist Movements in the Palestinian Arena:

ARTICLE 25: The Islamic Resistance Movement respects these movements and appreciates their circumstances and the conditions surrounding and affecting them. It encourages them as long as they do not give their allegiance to the Communist East or the Crusading West. It confirms to all those who are integrated in it, or sympathetic towards it, that the Islamic Resistance Movement is a fighting movement that has a moral and enlightened look of life and the way it should cooperate with the other (movements). It detests opportunism and desires only the good of people, individuals and groups alike. It does not seek material gains, personal fame, nor does it look for a reward from others. It works with its own resources and whatever is at its disposal "and prepare for them whatever force you can", for the fulfilment of the duty, and the earning of Allah's favour. It has no other desire than that.

The Movement assures all the nationalist trends operating in the Palestinian arena for the liberation of Palestine, that it is there for their support and assistance. It will never be more than that, both in words and deeds, now and in the future. It is there to bring together and not to divide, to preserve and not to squander, to unify and not to throw asunder. It evaluates every good word, sincere effort and good offices. It closes the door in the face of side disagreements and does not lend an ear to rumours and slanders, while at the same time fully realising the right for self-defence.

Anything contrary or contradictory to these trends, is a lie disseminated by enemies or their lackeys for the purpose of sowing confusion, disrupting the ranks and occupy them with side issues.

"O true believers, if a wicked man come unto you with a tale, inquire strictly into the truth thereof; lest ye hurt people through ignorance, and afterwards repent of what ye have done." (The Inner Apartments - verse 6).

ARTICLE 26: In viewing the Palestinian nationalist movements that give allegiance neither to the East nor the West, in this positive way, the Islamic Resistance Movement does not refrain from discussing new situations on the regional or international levels where the Palestinian question is concerned. It does that in such an objective manner revealing the extent of how much it is in harmony or contradiction with the national interests in the light of the Islamic point of view.

C.) The Palestinian Liberation Organisation:

ARTICLE 27: The Palestinian Liberation Organisation is the closest to the heart of the Islamic Resistance Movement. It contains the father and the brother, the next of kin and the friend. The Moslem does not estrange himself from his father, brother, next of kin or friend. Our homeland is one, our situation is one, our fate is one and the enemy is a joint enemy to all of us.

Because of the situations surrounding the formation of the Organisation, of the ideological confusion prevailing in the Arab world as a result of the ideological invasion under whose influence the Arab world has fallen since the defeat of the Crusaders and which was, and still is, intensified through orientalist, missionaries and imperialists, the Organisation adopted the idea of the secular state. And that it how we view it.

Secularism completely contradicts religious ideology. Attitudes, conduct and decisions stem from ideologies.

That is why, with all our appreciation for The Palestinian Liberation Organisation - and what it can develop into - and without belittling its role in the Arab-Israeli conflict, we are unable to exchange the present or future Islamic Palestine with the secular idea. The Islamic nature of Palestine is part of our religion and whoever takes his religion lightly is a loser.

"Who will be adverse to the religion of Abraham, but he whose mind is infatuated? (The Cow - verse 130).

The day The Palestinian Liberation Organisation adopts Islam as its way of life, we will become its soldiers, and fuel for its fire that will burn the enemies.

Until such a day, and we pray to Allah that it will be soon, the Islamic Resistance Movement's stand towards the PLO is that of the son towards his father, the brother towards his brother, and the relative to relative, suffers his pain and supports him in confronting the enemies, wishing him to be wise and well-guided.

"Stand by your brother, for he who is brotherless is like the fighter who goes to battle without arms. One's cousin is the wing one flies with - could the bird fly without wings?"

D.) Arab and Islamic Countries:

ARTICLE 28: The Zionist invasion is a vicious invasion. It does not refrain from resorting to all methods, using all evil and contemptible ways to achieve its end. It relies greatly in its infiltration and espionage operations on the secret Organisations it gave rise to, such as the Freemasons, The Rotary and Lions clubs, and other sabotage groups. All these Organisations, whether secret or open, work in the interest of Zionism and according to its instructions. They aim at undermining societies, destroying values, corrupting consciences, deteriorating character and annihilating Islam. It is behind the drug trade and alcoholism in all its kinds so as to facilitate its control and expansion.

Arab countries surrounding Israel are asked to open their borders before the fighters from among the Arab and Islamic nations so that they could consolidate their efforts with those of their Moslem brethren in Palestine.

As for the other Arab and Islamic countries, they are asked to facilitate the movement of the fighters from and to it, and this is the least thing they could do.

We should not forget to remind every Moslem that when the Jews conquered the Holy City in 1967, they stood on the threshold of the Aqsa Mosque and proclaimed that "Mohammed is dead, and his descendants are all women."

Israel, Judaism and Jews challenge Islam and the Moslem people. "May the cowards never sleep."

E.) Nationalist and Religious Groupings, Institutions, Intellectuals, The Arab and Islamic World:

ARTICLE 29: The Islamic Resistance Movement hopes that all these groupings will side with it in all spheres, would support it, adopt its stand and solidify its activities and moves, work towards rallying support for it so that the Islamic people will be a base and a stay for it, supplying it with strategic depth an all human material and informative spheres, in time and in place. This should be done through the convening of solidarity conferences, the issuing of explanatory bulletins, favourable articles and booklets, enlightening the masses regarding the Palestinian issue, clarifying what confronts it and the conspiracies woven around it. They should mobilize the Islamic nations, ideologically, educationally and culturally, so that these peoples would be equipped to perform their role in the decisive battle of liberation, just as they did when they vanquished the Crusaders and the Tatars and saved human civilization. Indeed, that is not difficult for Allah.

"Allah hath written, Verily I will prevail, and my apostles: for Allah is strong and mighty." (The Dispute - verse 21).

ARTICLE 30: Writers, intellectuals, media people, orators, educators and teachers, and all the various sectors in the Arab and Islamic world - all of them are called upon to perform their role, and to fulfill their duty, because of the ferocity of the Zionist offensive and the Zionist influence in many countries exercised through financial and media control, as well as the consequences that all this lead to in the greater part of the world.

Jihad is not confined to the carrying of arms and the confrontation of the enemy. The effective word, the good article, the useful book, support and solidarity - together with the presence of sincere purpose for the hoisting of Allah's banner higher and higher - all these are elements of the Jihad for Allah's sake.

"Whosoever mobilises a fighter for the sake of Allah is himself a fighter. Whosoever supports the relatives of a fighter, he himself is a fighter." (related by al-Bukhari, Moslem, Abu-Dawood and al-Tarmadhi).

F. Followers of Other Religions: The Islamic Resistance Movement Is A Humanistic Movement:

ARTICLE 31: The Islamic Resistance Movement is a humanistic movement. It takes care of human rights and is guided by Islamic tolerance when dealing with the followers of other religions. It does not antagonize anyone of them except if it is antagonized by it or stands in its way to hamper its moves and waste its efforts.

Under the wing of Islam, it is possible for the followers of the three religions - Islam, Christianity and Judaism - to coexist in peace and quiet with each other. Peace and quiet would not be possible except under the wing of Islam. Past and present history are the best witness to that.

It is the duty of the followers of other religions to stop disputing the sovereignty of Islam in this region, because the day these followers should take over there will be nothing but carnage, displacement and terror. Everyone of them is at variance with his fellow-religionists, not to speak about followers of other religionists. Past and present history are full of examples to prove this fact.

"They will not fight against you in a body, except in fenced towns, or from behind walls. Their strength in war among themselves is great: thou thinkest them to be united; but their hearts are divided. This, because they are people who do not understand." (The Emigration - verse 14).

Islam confers upon everyone his legitimate rights. Islam prevents the incursion on other people's rights. The Zionist Nazi activities against our people will not last for long. "For the state of injustice lasts but one day, while the state of justice lasts till Doomsday."

"As to those who have not borne arms against you on account of religion, nor turned you out of your dwellings, Allah forbiddeth you not to deal kindly with them, and to behave justly towards them; for Allah loveth those who act justly." (The Tried - verse 8).

The Attempt to Isolate the Palestinian People:

ARTICLE 32: World Zionism, together with imperialistic powers, try through a studied plan and an intelligent strategy to remove one Arab state after another from the circle of struggle against Zionism, in order to have it finally face the Palestinian people only. Egypt was, to a great extent, removed from the circle of the struggle, through the treacherous Camp David Agreement. They are trying to draw other Arab countries into similar agreements and to bring them outside the circle of struggle.

The Islamic Resistance Movement calls on Arab and Islamic nations to take up the line of serious and persevering action to prevent the success of this horrendous plan, to warn the people of the danger emanating from leaving the circle of struggle against Zionism. Today it is Palestine, tomorrow it will be one country or another. The Zionist plan is limitless. After Palestine, the Zionists aspire to expand from the Nile to the Euphrates. When they will have digested the region they overtook, they will aspire to further expansion, and so on. Their plan is embodied in the "Protocols of the Elders of Zion", and their present conduct is the best proof of what we are saying.

Leaving the circle of struggle with Zionism is high treason, and cursed be he who does that. "for whoso shall turn his back unto them on that day, unless he turneth aside to fight, or retreateth to another party of the faithful, shall draw on himself the indignation of Allah, and his abode shall be hell; an ill journey shall it be thither." (The Spoils - verse 16). There is no way out except by concentrating all powers and energies to face this Nazi, vicious Tatar invasion. The alternative is loss of one's country, the dispersion of citizens, the spread of vice on earth and the destruction of religious values. Let every person know that he is responsible before Allah, for "the doer of the slightest good deed is rewarded in like, and the doer of the slightest evil deed is also rewarded in like."

The Islamic Resistance Movement consider itself to be the spearhead of the circle of struggle with world Zionism and a step on the road. The Movement adds its efforts to the efforts of all those who are active in the Palestinian arena. Arab and Islamic Peoples should augment by further steps on their part; Islamic groupings all over the Arab world should also do the same, since all of these are the best-equipped for the future role in the fight with the warmongering Jews.

"...and we have put enmity and hatred between them, until the day of resurrection. So often as they shall kindle a fire of war, Allah shall extinguish it; and they shall set their minds to act corruptly in the earth, but Allah loveth not the corrupt doers." (The Table - verse 64).

ARTICLE 33: The Islamic Resistance Movement, being based on the common coordinated and interdependent conceptions of the laws of the universe, and flowing in the stream of destiny in confronting and fighting the enemies in defence of the Moslems and Islamic civilization and sacred sites, the first among which is the Aqsa Mosque, urges the Arab and Islamic peoples, their governments, popular and official groupings, to fear Allah where their view of the Islamic Resistance Movement and their dealings with it are concerned. They should back and support it, as Allah wants them to, extending to it more and more funds till Allah's purpose is achieved when ranks will close up, fighters join other fighters and masses everywhere in the Islamic world will come forward in response to the call of duty while loudly proclaiming: Hail to Jihad. Their cry will reach the heavens and will go on being resounded until liberation is achieved, the invaders vanquished and Allah's victory comes about.

"And Allah will certainly assist him who shall be on his side: for Allah is strong and mighty." (The Pilgrimage - verse 40).

THE TESTIMONY OF HISTORY

Across History in Confronting the Invaders:

ARTICLE 34: Palestine is the navel of the globe and the crossroad of the continents. Since the dawn of history, it has been the target of expansionists. The Prophet, Allah bless him and grant him salvation, had himself pointed to this fact in the noble Hadith in which he called on his honourable companion, MaAdh ben-Jabal, saying: O MaAth, Allah throw open before you, when I am gone, Syria, from Al-Arish to the Euphrates. Its men, women and slaves will stay firmly there till the Day of Judgement. Whoever of you should choose one of the Syrian shores, or the Holy Land, he will be in constant struggle till the Day of Judgement."

Expansionists have more than once put their eye on Palestine which they attacked with their armies to fulfill their designs on it. Thus it was that the Crusaders came with their armies, bringing with them their creed and carrying their Cross. They were able to defeat the Moslems for a while, but the Moslems were able to retrieve the land only when they stood under the wing of their religious banner, united their word, hallowed the name of Allah and surged out fighting under the leadership of Salah ed-Din al-Ayyubi. They fought for almost twenty years and at the end the Crusaders were defeated and Palestine was liberated.

"Say unto those who believe not, Ye shall be overcome, and thrown together into hell; an unhappy couch it shall be." (The Family of Imran - verse 12).

This is the only way to liberate Palestine. There is no doubt about the testimony of history. It is one of the laws of the universe and one of the rules of existence. Nothing can overcome iron except iron. Their false futile creed can only be defeated by the righteous Islamic creed. A creed could not be fought except by a creed, and in the last analysis, victory is for the just, for justice is certainly victorious.

"Our word hath formerly been given unto our servants the apostles; that they should certainly be assisted against the infidels, and that our armies should surely be the conquerors." (Those Who Rank Themselves - verses 171-172).

ARTICLE 35: The Islamic Resistance Movement views seriously the defeat of the Crusaders at the hands of Salah ed-Din al-Ayyubi and the rescuing of Palestine from their hands, as well as the defeat of the Tatars at Ein Galot, breaking their power at the hands of Qataz and Al-Dhaher Bivers and saving the Arab world from the Tatar onslaught which aimed at the destruction of every meaning of human civilization. The Movement draws lessons and examples from all this. The present Zionist onslaught has also been preceded by Crusading raids from the West and other Tatar raids from the East. Just as the Moslems faced those raids and planned fighting and defeating them, they should be able to confront the Zionist invasion and defeat it. This is indeed no problem for the Almighty Allah, provided that the intentions are pure, the determination is true and that Moslems have benefited from past experiences, rid themselves of the effects of ideological invasion and followed the customs of their ancestors.

The Islamic Resistance Movement is Composed of Soldiers:

ARTICLE 36: While paving its way, the Islamic Resistance Movement, emphasizes time and again to all the sons of our people, to the Arab and Islamic nations, that it does not seek personal fame, material gain, or social prominence. It does not aim to compete against any one from among our people, or take his place. Nothing of the sort at all. It will not act against any of the sons of Moslems or those who are peaceful towards it from among non-Moslems, be they here or anywhere else. It will only serve as a support for all groupings and Organisations operating against the Zionist enemy and its lackeys.

The Islamic Resistance Movement adopts Islam as its way of life. Islam is its creed and religion. Whoever takes Islam as his way of life, be it an Organisation, a grouping, a country or any other body, the Islamic Resistance Movement considers itself as their soldiers and nothing more.

We ask Allah to show us the right course, to make us an example to others and to judge between us and our people with truth. "O Lord, do thou judge between us and our nation with truth; for thou art the best judge." (Al Araf - Verse 89).

The last of our prayers will be praise to Allah, the Master of the Universe.

HAMAS CHARTER 2017

(Hamis is the Palestinian wing of the Muslim Brotherhood)

Official translation of the 2017 Charter:

In the Name of Allah Most Gracious Most Merciful
The Islamic Resistance Movement "Hamis"

A Document of General Principles and Policies

Praise be to Allah, the Lord of all worlds. May the peace and blessings of Allah be upon Muhammad, the Master of Messengers and the Leader of the mujahidin, and upon his household and all his companions.

PREAMBLE:

Palestine is the land of the Arab Palestinian people, from it they originate, to it they adhere and belong, and about it they reach out and communicate.

Palestine is a land whose status has been elevated by Islam, a faith that holds it in high esteem, that breathes through it its spirit and just values and that lays the foundation for the doctrine of defending and protecting it.

Palestine is the cause of a people who have been let down by a world that fails to secure their rights and restore to them what has been usurped from them, a people whose land continues to suffer one of the worst types of occupation in this world.

Palestine is a land that was seized by a racist, anti-human and colonial Zionist project that was founded on a false promise (the Balfour Declaration), on recognition of a usurping entity and on imposing a fait accompli by force.

Palestine symbolizes the resistance that shall continue until liberation is accomplished, until the return is fulfilled and until a fully sovereign state is established with Jerusalem as its capital.

Palestine is the true partnership among Palestinians of all affiliations for the sublime objective of liberation.

Palestine is the spirit of the Ummah and its central cause; it is the soul of humanity and its living conscience.

This document is the product of deep deliberations that led us to a strong consensus. As a movement, we agree about both the theory and the practice of the vision that is outlined in the pages that follow. It is a vision that stands on solid grounds and on well-established principles. This document unveils the goals, the milestones and the way in which national unity can be enforced. It also establishes our common understanding of the Palestinian cause, the working principles which we use to further it, and the limits of flexibility used to interpret it.

THE MOVEMENT:

1. The Islamic Resistance Movement "Hamis" is a Palestinian Islamic national liberation and resistance movement. Its goal is to liberate Palestine and confront the Zionist project. Its frame of reference is Islam, which determines its principles, objectives and means.

THE LAND OF PALESTINE:

2. Palestine, which extends from the River Jordan in the east to the Mediterranean in the west and from Ras Al-Naqrurah in the north to Umm Al-Rashrash in the south, is an integral territorial unit. It is the land and the home of the Palestinian people. The expulsion and banishment of the Palestinian people from their land and the establishment of the Zionist entity therein do not annul the right of the Palestinian people to their entire land and do not entrench any rights therein for the usurping Zionist entity.

3. Palestine is an Arab Islamic land. It is a blessed sacred land that has a special place in the heart of every Arab and every Muslim.

THE PALESTINIAN PEOPLE:

4. The Palestinians are the Arabs who lived in Palestine until 1947, irrespective of whether they were expelled from it, or stayed in it; and every person that was born to an Arab Palestinian father after that date, whether inside or outside Palestine, is a Palestinian.

5. The Palestinian identity is authentic and timeless; it is passed from generation to generation. The catastrophes that have befallen the Palestinian people, as a consequence of the Zionist occupation and its policy of displacement, cannot erase the identity of the Palestinian people nor can they negate it. A Palestinian shall not lose his or her national identity or rights by acquiring a second nationality.

6. The Palestinian people are one people, made up of all Palestinians, inside and outside of Palestine, irrespective of their religion, culture or political affiliation.

ISLAM AND PALESTINE:

7. Palestine is at the heart of the Arab and Islamic Ummah and enjoys a special status. Within Palestine there exists Jerusalem, whose precincts are blessed by Allah. Palestine is the Holy Land, which Allah has blessed for humanity. It is the Muslims' first Qiblah and the destination of the journey performed at night by Prophet Muhammad, peace be upon him. It is the location from where he ascended to the upper heavens. It is the birthplace of Jesus Christ, peace be upon him. Its soil contains the remains of thousands of Prophets, Companions and Mujahidin. It is the land of people who are determined to defend the truth – within Jerusalem and its surroundings – who are not deterred or intimidated by those who oppose them and by those who betray them, and they will continue their mission until the Promise of Allah is fulfilled.

8. By virtue of its justly balanced middle way and moderate spirit, Islam – for Hamas – provides a comprehensive way of life and an order that is fit for purpose at all times and in all places. Islam is a religion of peace and tolerance. It provides an umbrella for the followers of other creeds and religions who can practice their beliefs in security and safety. Hamas also believes that Palestine has always been and will always be a model of coexistence, tolerance and civilizational innovation.

9. Hamas believes that the message of Islam upholds the values of truth, justice, freedom and dignity and prohibits all forms of injustice and incriminates oppressors irrespective of their religion, race, gender or nationality. Islam is against all forms of religious, ethnic or sectarian extremism and bigotry. It is the religion that inculcates in its followers the value of standing up to aggression and of supporting the oppressed; it motivates them to give generously and make sacrifices in defence of their dignity, their land, their peoples and their holy places.

JERUSALEM:

10. Jerusalem is the capital of Palestine. Its religious, historic and civilizational status is fundamental to the Arabs, Muslims and the world at large. Its Islamic and Christian holy places belong exclusively to the Palestinian people and to the Arab and Islamic Ummah. Not one stone of Jerusalem can be surrendered or relinquished. The measures undertaken by the occupiers in Jerusalem, such as Judaization, settlement building, and establishing facts on the ground are fundamentally null and void.

11. The blessed Al-Aqsa Mosque belongs exclusively to our people and our Ummah, and the occupation has no right to it whatsoever. The occupation's plots, measures and attempts to Judaize Al-Aqsa and divide it are null, void and illegitimate.

THE REFUGEES AND THE RIGHT OF RETURN:

12. The Palestinian cause in its essence is a cause of an occupied land and a displaced people. The right of the Palestinian refugees and the displaced to return to their homes from which they were banished or were banned from returning to – whether in the lands occupied in 1948 or in 1967 (that is the whole of Palestine), is a natural right, both individual and collective. This right is confirmed by all divine laws as well as by the basic principles of human rights and international law. It is an inalienable right and cannot be dispensed with by any party, whether Palestinian, Arab or international.

13. Hamas rejects all attempts to erase the rights of the refugees, including the attempts to settle them outside Palestine and through the projects of the alternative homeland. Compensation to the Palestinian refugees for the harm they have suffered as a consequence of banishing them and occupying their land is an absolute right that goes hand in hand with their right to return. They are to receive compensation upon their return and this does not negate or diminish their right to return.

THE ZIONIST PROJECT:

14. The Zionist project is a racist, aggressive, colonial and expansionist project based on seizing the properties of others; it is hostile to the Palestinian people and to their aspiration for freedom, liberation, return and self-determination. The Israeli entity is the plaything of the Zionist project and its base of aggression.

15. The Zionist project does not target the Palestinian people alone; it is the enemy of the Arab and Islamic Ummah posing a grave threat to its security and interests. It is also hostile to the Ummah's aspirations for unity, renaissance and liberation and has been the major source of its troubles. The Zionist project also poses a danger to international security and peace and to mankind and its interests and stability.

16. Hamas affirms that its conflict is with the Zionist project not with the Jews because of their religion. Hamas does not wage a struggle against the Jews because they are Jewish but wages a struggle against the Zionists who occupy Palestine. Yet, it is the Zionists who constantly identify Judaism and the Jews with their own colonial project and illegal entity.

17. Hamas rejects the persecution of any human being or the undermining of his or her rights on nationalist, religious or sectarian grounds. Hamas is of the view that the Jewish problem, anti-Semitism and the persecution of the Jews are phenomena fundamentally linked to European history and not to the history of the Arabs and the Muslims or to their heritage. The Zionist movement, which was able with the help of Western powers to occupy Palestine, is the most dangerous form of settlement occupation which has already disappeared from much of the world and must disappear from Palestine.

THE POSITION TOWARD OCCUPATION AND POLITICAL SOLUTIONS:

18. The following are considered null and void: the Balfour Declaration, the British Mandate Document, the UN Palestine Partition Resolution, and whatever resolutions and measures that derive from them or are similar to them. The establishment of "Israel" is entirely illegal and contravenes the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people and goes against their will and the will of the Ummah; it is also in violation of human rights that are guaranteed by international conventions, foremost among them is the right to self-determination.

19. There shall be no recognition of the legitimacy of the Zionist entity. Whatever has befallen the land of Palestine in terms of occupation, settlement building, Judaization or changes to its features or falsification of facts is illegitimate. Rights never lapse.

20. Hamas believes that no part of the land of Palestine shall be compromised or conceded, irrespective of the causes, the circumstances and the pressures and no matter how long the occupation lasts. Hamas rejects any alternative to the full and complete liberation of Palestine, from the river to the sea. However, without compromising its rejection of the Zionist entity and without relinquishing any Palestinian rights, Hamas considers the establishment of a fully sovereign and independent Palestinian state, with Jerusalem as its capital along the lines of the 4th of June 1967, with the return of the refugees and the displaced to their homes from which they were expelled, to be a formula of national consensus.

21. Hamas affirms that the Oslo Accords and their addenda contravene the governing rules of international law in that they generate commitments that violate the inalienable rights of the Palestinian people. Therefore, the Movement rejects these agreements and all that flows from them, such as the obligations that are detrimental to the interests of our people, especially security coordination (collaboration).

22. Hamas rejects all the agreements, initiatives and settlement projects that are aimed at undermining the Palestinian cause and the rights of our Palestinian people. In this regard, any stance, initiative or political programme must not in any way violate these rights and should not contravene them or contradict them.

23. Hamas stresses that transgression against the Palestinian people, usurping their land and banishing them from their homeland cannot be called peace. Any settlements reached on this basis will not lead to peace. Resistance and jihad for the liberation of Palestine will remain a legitimate right, a duty and an honour for all the sons and daughters of our people and our Ummah.

RESISTANCE AND LIBERATION:

24. The liberation of Palestine is the duty of the Palestinian people in particular and the duty of the Arab and Islamic Ummah in general. It is also a humanitarian obligation as necessitated by the dictates of truth and justice. The agencies working for Palestine, whether national, Arab, Islamic or humanitarian, complement each other and are harmonious and not in conflict with each other.

25. Resisting the occupation with all means and methods is a legitimate right guaranteed by divine laws and by international norms and laws. At the heart of these lies armed resistance, which is regarded as the strategic choice for protecting the principles and the rights of the Palestinian people.

26. Hamas rejects any attempt to undermine the resistance and its arms. It also affirms the right of our people to develop the means and mechanisms of resistance. Managing resistance, in terms of escalation or de-escalation, or in terms of diversifying the means and methods, is an integral part of the process of managing the conflict and should not be at the expense of the principle of resistance.

THE PALESTINIAN POLITICAL SYSTEM:

27. A real state of Palestine is a state that has been liberated. There is no alternative to a fully sovereign Palestinian State on the entire national Palestinian soil, with Jerusalem as its capital.

28. Hamas believes in, and adheres to, managing its Palestinian relations on the basis of pluralism, democracy, national partnership, acceptance of the other and the adoption of dialogue. The aim is to bolster the unity of ranks and joint action for the purpose of accomplishing national goals and fulfilling the aspirations of the Palestinian people.

29. The PLO is a national framework for the Palestinian people inside and outside of Palestine. It should therefore be preserved, developed and rebuilt on democratic foundations so as to secure the participation of all the constituents and forces of the Palestinian people, in a manner that safeguards Palestinian rights.

30. Hamas stresses the necessity of building Palestinian national institutions on sound democratic principles, foremost among them are free and fair elections. Such process should be on the basis of national partnership and in accordance with a clear programme and a clear strategy that adhere to the rights, including the right of resistance, and which fulfil the aspirations of the Palestinian people.

31. Hamas affirms that the role of the Palestinian Authority should be to serve the Palestinian people and safeguard their security, their rights and their national project.

32. Hamas stresses the necessity of maintaining the independence of Palestinian national decision-making. Outside forces should not be allowed to intervene. At the same time, Hamas affirms the responsibility of the Arabs and the Muslims and their duty and role in the liberation of Palestine from Zionist occupation.

33. Palestinian society is enriched by its prominent personalities, figures, dignitaries, civil society institutions, and youth, students, trade unionist and women's groups who together work for the achievement of national goals and societal building, pursue resistance, and achieve liberation.

34. The role of Palestinian women is fundamental in the process of building the present and the future, just as it has always been in the process of making Palestinian history. It is a pivotal role in the project of resistance, liberation and building the political system.

THE ARAB AND ISLAMIC UMMAH:

35. Hamas believes that the Palestinian issue is the central cause for the Arab and Islamic Ummah.

36. Hamas believes in the unity of the Ummah with all its diverse constituents and is aware of the need to avoid anything that could fragment the Ummah and undermine its unity.

37. Hamas believes in cooperating with all states that support the rights of the Palestinian people. It opposes intervention in the internal affairs of any country. It also refuses to be drawn into disputes and conflicts that take place among different countries. Hamas adopts the policy of opening up to different states in the world, especially the Arab and Islamic states. It endeavours to establish balanced relations on the basis of combining the requirements of the Palestinian cause and the Palestinian people's interests on the one hand with the interests of the Ummah, its renaissance and its security on the other.

THE HUMANITARIAN AND INTERNATIONAL ASPECT:

38. The Palestinian issue is one that has major humanitarian and international dimensions. Supporting and backing this cause is a humanitarian and civilizational task that is required by the prerequisites of truth, justice and common humanitarian values.

39. From a legal and humanitarian perspective, the liberation of Palestine is a legitimate activity, it is an act of self-defence, and it is the expression of the natural right of all peoples to self-determination.

40. In its relations with world nations and peoples, Hamas believes in the values of cooperation, justice, freedom and respect of the will of the people.

41. Hamas welcomes the stances of states, organisations and institutions that support the rights of the Palestinian people. It salutes the free peoples of the world who support the Palestinian cause. At the same time, it denounces the support granted by any party to the Zionist entity or the attempts to cover up its crimes and aggression against the Palestinians and calls for the prosecution of Zionist war criminals.

42. Hamas rejects the attempts to impose hegemony on the Arab and Islamic Ummah just as it rejects the attempts to impose hegemony on the rest of the world's nations and peoples. Hamas also condemns all forms of colonialism, occupation, discrimination, oppression and aggression in the world.

THE ISLAMIC DECLARATION ON HUMAN RIGHTS, 1990 or: The Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam or: The Declaration of Sharia Rights for the World

(ATTENTION: This Declaration reflects what Mohammed said and did, written down in the Koran, the Sira, the Hadith, and the Sharia law. In Islam, the contents of this Declaration are legal and in accordance with all what Islamic jurisprudence is based on! Some of the parts of this Declaration are debated by radical Muslims as they might view them as "too lenient and concessional to non-Muslims". In the viewpoint of a true Muslim, all those who plea for a so-called "moderate Islam" are extremists and heretics.)

(On 5 August 1990, 45 foreign ministers of the "Organisation of Islamic Cooperation" adopted the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam (Cairo Declaration) to serve as a guidance for the member states in the matters of human rights in as much as they are compatible with the Koranic Sharia Law.

This declaration is widely acknowledged as an Islamic response to the United Nations's Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UN Declaration), adopted in 1948. Various Muslim countries had criticised the 1948 Universal Declaration of Human Rights for its failure to take into account the cultural and religious context of non-Western countries.

It guarantees many of the same rights as the UN Declaration and serves as a living document of human rights guidelines prescribed for all members of the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation to follow, but restricts them explicitly to the limits set by the Sharia. Because of this limit, the Cairo Declaration has been criticised by the so-called "liberal" elite of western countries as an attempt to shield Organisation of Islamic Cooperation member states from international criticism for human rights violations, as well as for failing to guarantee freedom of religion, justifying corporal punishment and allowing discrimination against non-Muslims and women. As usual, the thinking of that elite is wrong for the reason that their arrogance prevents them to study the Koran, the Sira, the Hadith and the Sharia. If they had done so, they would have known that the Islamic states had no other option than creating their own Cairo Declaration. In 1981, Said Rajaie-Khorassani—the Iranian representative to the UN—made the Islamic position clear by saying that the UN Declaration was a relativistic secular understanding of the Judeo-Christian tradition, which could not be implemented by Muslims without trespassing Islamic law.

The Cairo Declaration failed to give women equal rights but only affords women "equal human dignity", "own rights to enjoy", "duties to perform", "own civil entity", "financial independence", and the "right to retain her name and lineage". Both men and women are given the "right to marriage" regardless of their race, colour, or nationality. The Declaration makes it incumbent upon both parents to protect the child, both before and after birth, while stressing that the husband is responsible for the social and financial protection of his family, including any children and other "wives".

Article 10 of the Declaration states: "Islam is the religion of unspoiled nature. It is prohibited to exercise any form of compulsion on man or to exploit his poverty or ignorance in order to convert him to another religion or to atheism." Since in Islamic society all reasons for conversion away from Islam are considered to be essentially either compulsion or ignorance, this effectively forbids conversion away from Islam.

Article 19 stipulates that there are no other crimes or punishments than those mentioned in the Sharia. Sharia allows corporal punishment (whipping, amputation) and capital punishment by stoning or decapitation. The right to hold public office can only be exercised in accordance with the sharia, meaning that any non-Muslims have no right to rule over Muslims.

The Organisation of Islamic Cooperation is the driving force behind all this. According to its charter, it aims to preserve Islamic social and economic values; promote solidarity amongst member states; increase cooperation in social, economic, cultural, scientific, and political areas; uphold international peace and security; and advance education, particularly in the fields of science and technology.

The collapse of the Ottoman Empire after World War I and the abolishment of the Caliphate by Mustafa Kemal Atatürk in 1924 left a vacuum. Muslims have craved for a pan-Islamic institution that would serve the common political, economic, and social interests of the Umma (the world-wide community of all Muslims) ever since. The foundation of the Muslim Brotherhood in 1928 and of the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation in 1969 were the answers to that vacuum. The Organisation of Islamic Cooperation consists of 57 member states, with a collective population of over 1.8 billion as of 2015 today, with 53 countries being Muslim-majority countries. The organisation states that it is "the collective voice of the Muslim world" (meaning: it is the largest voting block in the United Nations Organisation) and works to "safeguard and protect the interests of the Muslim world in the spirit of promoting international peace and harmony" (meaning: establishing the Sharia law where ever possible in order to build the Dar as-Salam, the "House of Peace").

In March 2008, the Organisation of Islamic Cooperation conducted a formal revision of its charter. The revised charter set out to promote human rights, fundamental freedoms, and good governance in all member states. The revisions also removed any mention of the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam. Within the revised charter, the OIC has chosen to support the Charter of the United Nations and international law, without mentioning the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.)

The Organisation of the Islamic Conference

ANNEX TO RES. No. 49/19 – P

THE CAIRO DECLARATION ON HUMAN RIGHTS IN ISLAM

The Member States of the Organisation of the Islamic Conference,

Reaffirming the civilizing and historical role of the Islamic Ummah which God made the best nation that has given mankind a universal and well-balanced civilization in which harmony is established between this life and the hereafter and knowledge is combined with faith; and the role that this Ummah should play to guide a humanity confused by competing trends and ideologies and to prove solutions to the chronic problems of this materialistic civilization.

Wishing to contribute to the efforts of mankind to assert human rights, to protect man from exploitation and persecution, and to affirm his freedom and right to a dignified life in accordance with the Islamic Sharia

Convinced that mankind which has reached an advanced stage in materialistic science is still, and shall remain, in dire need of faith to support its civilization and of a self motivating force to guard its rights;

Believing that fundamental rights and universal freedoms in Islam are an integral part of the Islamic religion and that no one as a matter of principle has the right to suspend them either in whole or in part or violate or ignore them in as much as they are binding divine commandments, which are contained in the Revealed Books of God and were sent through the last of His Prophets to complete the preceding divine messages and thereby making their observance an act of worship and their neglect or violation an abominable sin, and accordingly every person is individually responsible - and the Ummah collectively responsible - for their safeguard.

ARAB CHARTER ON HUMAN RIGHTS, 2004
League of Arab States,
Arab Charter on Human Rights, May 22, 2004, reprinted in 12 Int'l Hum. Rts. Rep. 893 (2005), entered into force March 15, 2008.

(The Arab Charter on Human Rights (ACHR), adopted by the Council of the League of Arab States on 22 May 2004, affirms the principles contained in the UN Charter, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenants on Human Rights and the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam. It provides for a number of traditional human rights, including the right to liberty and security of persons, equality of persons before the law, protection of persons from torture, the right to own private property, freedom to practice religious observance and freedom of peaceful assembly and association. The Charter also provides for the election of a seven-person Committee of Experts on Human Rights to consider states' reports.

A first version of the Charter was created on 15 September 1994, but no state ratified it. The updated (2004) version of the Charter came into force in 2008 after seven of the members of the League of Arab States had ratified it.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

On 24 January 2008, then UN High Commissioner for Human Rights Louise Arbour said the Arab charter was incompatible with the UN's understanding of universal human rights, including with respect to women's rights and capital punishment for children, in addition to other provisions in the Charter. The charter is listed on the website of her office, among texts adopted by international groups aimed at promoting and consolidating democracy.

As of November 2013 the Charter had been ratified by Algeria, Bahrain, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Palestine, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syria, the UAE and Yemen.

In 2014 Arab League states elaborated an additional treaty - the Statute of the Arab Court of Human Rights, - to allow inter-state litigation concerning violations of the Charter. The statute will enter into force after 7 ratifications. The first country to ratify it was Saudi Arabia in 2016.)

Arab Charter on Human Rights, Text:

Based on the faith of the Arab nation in the dignity of the human person whom God has exalted ever since the beginning of creation and in the fact that the Arab homeland is the cradle of religions and civilizations whose lofty human values affirm the human right to a decent life based on freedom, justice and equality,

In furtherance of the eternal principles of fraternity, equality and tolerance among human beings consecrated by the noble Islamic religion and the other divinely-revealed religions,

Being proud of the humanitarian values and principles that the Arab nation has established throughout its long history, which have played a major role in spreading knowledge between East and West, so making the region a point of reference for the whole world and a destination for seekers of knowledge and wisdom,

Believing in the unity of the Arab nation, which struggles for its freedom and defends the right of nations to self-determination, to the preservation of their wealth and to development; believing in the sovereignty of the law and its contribution to the protection of universal and interrelated human rights and convinced that the human person's enjoyment of freedom, justice and equality of opportunity is a fundamental measure of the value of any society,

Rejecting all forms of racism and Zionism, which constitute a violation of human rights and a threat to international peace and security, recognizing the close link that exists between human rights and international peace and security, reaffirming the principles of the Charter of the United Nations, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the provisions of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and having regard to the Cairo Declaration on Human Rights in Islam,

3. To prepare the new generations in Arab States for a free and responsible life in a civil society that is characterized by solidarity, founded on a balance between awareness of rights and respect for obligations, and governed by the values of equality, tolerance and moderation.

4. All peoples have the right to resist foreign occupation.

ARTICLE 3: 1. Each State party to the present Charter undertakes to ensure to all individuals subject to its jurisdiction the right to enjoy the rights and freedoms set forth herein, without distinction on grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religious belief, opinion, thought, national or social origin, wealth, birth or physical or mental disability.

2. The States parties to the present Charter shall take the requisite measures to guarantee effective equality in the enjoyment of all the rights and freedoms enshrined in the present Charter in order to ensure protection against all forms of discrimination based on any of the grounds mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

Men and women are equal in respect of human dignity, rights and obligations within the framework of the positive discrimination established in favour of women by the Islamic Shariah, other divine laws and by applicable laws and legal instruments. Accordingly, each State party pledges to take all the requisite measures to guarantee equal opportunities and effective equality between men and women in the enjoyment of all the rights set out in this Charter.

ARTICLE 4: 1. In exceptional situations of emergency which threaten the life of the nation and the existence of which is officially proclaimed, the States parties to the present Charter may take measures derogating from their obligations under the present Charter, to the extent strictly required by the exigencies of the situation, provided that such measures are not inconsistent with their other obligations under international law and do not involve discrimination solely on the grounds of race, colour, sex, language, religion or social origin.

2. In exceptional situations of emergency, no derogation shall be made from the following articles: article 5, article 8, article 9, article 10, article 13, article 14, paragraph 6, article 15, article 18, article 19, article 20, article 22, article 27, article 28, article 29 and article 30. In addition, the judicial guarantees required for the protection of the aforementioned rights may not be suspended.

3. Any State party to the present Charter availing itself of the right of derogation shall immediately inform the other States parties, through the intermediary of the Secretary-General of the League of Arab States, of the provisions from which it has derogated and of the reasons by which it was actuated.

A further communication shall be made, through the same intermediary, on the date on which it terminates such derogation.

ARTICLE 5: 1. Every human being has the inherent right to life.

2. This right shall be protected by law. No one shall be arbitrarily deprived of his life.

ARTICLE 6: Sentence of death may be imposed only for the most serious crimes in accordance with the laws in force at the time of commission of the crime and pursuant to a final judgement rendered by a competent court. Anyone sentenced to death shall have the right to seek pardon or commutation of the sentence.

2. The death penalty shall not be inflicted on a pregnant woman prior to her delivery or on a nursing mother within two years from the date of her delivery; in all cases, the best interests of the infant shall be the primary consideration.

ARTICLE 8: 1. No one shall be subjected to physical or psychological torture or to cruel, degrading, humiliating or inhuman treatment.

2. Each State party shall protect every individual subject to its jurisdiction from such practices and shall take effective measures to prevent them. The commission of, or participation in, such acts shall be regarded as crimes that are punishable by law and not subject to any statute of limitations. Each State party shall guarantee in its legal system redress for any victim of torture and the right to rehabilitation and compensation.

ARTICLE 9: No one shall be subjected to medical or scientific experimentation or to the use of his organs without his free consent and full awareness of the consequences and provided that ethical, humanitarian and professional rules are followed and medical procedures are observed to ensure his personal safety pursuant to the relevant domestic laws in force in each State party. Trafficking in human organs is prohibited in all circumstances.

Original title: "An Explanatory Memorandum On The General Strategic Goal For The Group In North America: 5/22/1991" Government Exhibit 003-0085 3:04-CR-240-G U.S. v. HLF, et al.
Original language and script: Arabic

(This document does not bear the title "manifesto" but "memorandum" as it is not meant to be published because it displays very bluntly what the entire Islamic movement really is about: The destruction of any civilisation which is not Islamic. The intended destruction includes in particular: law, belief system, liberty of free speech, and any other foundation of non-Islamic civilisations.

The Muslim Brotherhood's strategic plan for North America was a closely-held secret until the FBI discovered it during a raid of a house in Annandale, Virginia, in August, 2004. Agents discovered a secret basement, a hidden sub-basement; containing over 80 file storage boxes of the archives of the Muslim Brotherhood in North America. Among the internal Ikhwan [Muslim Brotherhood] files was a document called "An Explanatory Memorandum: On the General Strategic Goal for the Group." It turned out to be a strategic plan created to eliminate non-Islamic states and societies, and it was written by a member of the Board of Directors for the Muslim Brotherhood in North America and senior Hamas leader named Mohammed Akram, and was approved by the Muslim Brotherhood's "Shura Council" and Organisational Conference in 1987. Similar papers have been issued to Muslim communities and their mosques throughout the world. The memorandum constitutes a blueprint for Islamic organisations such as the Muslim Brotherhood, their goals, modus operandi and infrastructure in non-Muslim countries. It is arguably the single most important vehicle for understanding a secretive Islamic organisation and should, therefore, be considered required reading for policy-makers and the public, alike. To point it out: This paper is not made by "extremists" but by mainstream Muslims according to the Sira, the Koran, the Hadith, and the Sharia, such as the Edict of Umar.)

An Explanatory Memorandum On The General Strategic Goal For The Group In North America: 5/22/1991

In the name of God, the Beneficent, the Merciful
Thanks be to God, Lord of the Two Worlds [Dar as-Salam / House of Peace = Muslim territory) and Dar al-Harb / House of War = non-Muslim territory] And Blessed are the Pious [devout Muslim]

The beloved brother/The General Masul, may God keep him

The beloved brother/secretary of the Shura Council, may God keep him

The beloved brothers/Members of the Shura Council, may God keep them

God's peace, mercy and blessings be upon you. ... To proceed,

I ask Almighty God that you, your families and those whom you love around you are in the best of conditions, pleasing to God, glorified His name be.

I send this letter of mine to you hoping that it would seize your attention and receive your good care as you are the people of responsibility and those to whom trust is given. Between your hands is an "Explanatory Memorandum" which I put effort in writing down so that it is not locked in the chest and the mind, and so that I can share with you a portion of the responsibility in leading the Group in this country.

What might have encouraged me to submit the memorandum in this time in particular is my feeling of a "glimpse of hope" and the beginning of good tidings which bring the good news that we have embarked on a new stage of Islamic activism stages in this continent.

The papers which are between your hands are not abundant extravagance, imaginations or hallucinations which passed in the mind of one of your brothers, but they are rather hopes, ambitions and challenges that I hope that you share some or most of which with me. I do not claim their infallibility or absolute correctness, but they are an attempt which requires study, outlook, detailing and rooting from you.

My request to my brothers is to read the memorandum and to write what they wanted of comments and corrections, keeping in mind that what is between your hands is not strange or a new submission without a root, but rather an attempt to interpret and explain some of what came in the long-term plan which we approved and adopted in our council and our conference in the year (1987).

So, my honorable brother, do not rush to throw these papers away due to your many occupations and worries, All what I'm asking of you is to read them and to comment on them hoping that we might continue together the project of our plan and our Islamic work in this part of the world. Should you do that, I would be thankful and grateful to you.

I also ask my honorable brother, the Secretary of the Council, to add the subject of the memorandum on the Council agenda in its coming meeting.

May God reward you good and keep you for His DawA [tool of Islam to turn non-Muslims into Muslims]

Your brother Mohamed Akram

In the name of God, the Beneficent, the Merciful
Thanks be to God, Lord of the Two Worlds And Blessed are the Pious

Subject: A project for an explanatory memorandum for the General Strategic goal for the Group in North America mentioned in the longterm plan

ONE: THE MEMORANDUM IS DERIVED FROM:

1. The general strategic goal of the Group in America which was approved by the Shura Council and the Organizational Conference for the year [1987] is "Enablement of Islam in North America, meaning: establishing an effective and a stable Islamic Movement led by the Muslim Brotherhood which adopts Muslims' causes domestically and globally, and which works to expand the observant Muslim base, aims at unifying and directing Muslims' efforts, presents Islam as a civilization alternative, and supports the global Islamic State wherever it is".

2. The priority that is approved by the Shura Council for the work of the Group in its current and former session which is "Settlement".

3. The positive development with the brothers in the Islamic Circle in an attempt to reach a unity of merger.

4. The constant need for thinking and future planning, an attempt to read it and working to "shape" the present to comply and suit the needs and challenges of the future.

5. The paper of his eminence, the General Masul, may God keep him, which he recently sent to the members of the Council.

TWO: AN INTRODUCTION TO THE EXPLANATORY MEMORANDUM:

In order to begin with the explanation, we must "summon" the following question and place it in front of our eyes as its relationship is important and necessary with the strategic goal and the explanation project we are embarking on. The question we are facing is: "How do you like to see the Islam Movement in North America in ten years?", or "taking along" the following sentence when planning and working, "Islamic Work in North America in the year (2000): A Strategic Vision".

Also, we must summon and take along "elements" of the general strategic goal of the Group in North America and I will intentionally repeat them in numbers. They are:

[1. Establishing an effective and stable Islamic Movement led by the Muslim Brotherhood.

2. Adopting Muslims' causes domestically and globally.

3. Expanding the observant Muslim base.

4. Unifying and directing Muslims' efforts.

5. Presenting Islam as a civilization alternative

6. Supporting the establishment of the global Islamic State wherever it is].

• It must be stressed that it has become clear and emphatically known that all is in agreement that we must "settle" or "enable" Islam and its Movement in this part of the world.

• Therefore, a joint understanding of the meaning of settlement or enablement must be adopted, through which and on whose basis we explain the general strategic goal with its six elements for the Group in North America.

THREE: THE CONCEPT OF SETTLEMENT:

This term was mentioned in the Group's "dictionary" and documents with various meanings in spite of the fact that everyone meant one thing with it. We believe that the understanding of the essence is the same and we will attempt here to give the word and its "meanings" a practical explanation with a practical Movement tone, and not a philosophical linguistic explanation, while stressing that this explanation of ours is not complete until our explanation of "the process" of settlement itself is understood which is mentioned in the following paragraph. We briefly say the following:

Settlement: "That Islam and its Movement become a part of the homeland it lives in".

Establishment: "That Islam turns into firmly-rooted organizations on whose bases civilization, structure and testimony are built".

Stability: "That Islam is stable in the land on which its people move".

Enablement: "That Islam is enabled within the souls, minds and the lives of the people of the country in which it moves".

Rooting: "That Islam is resident and not a passing thing, or rooted "entrenched" in the soil of the spot where it moves and not a strange plant to it".

FOUR: THE PROCESS OF SETTLEMENT:

• In order for Islam and its Movement to become "a part of the homeland" in which it lives, "stable" in its land, "rooted" in the spirits and minds of its people, "enabled" in the live of its society and has firmly-established "organizations" on which the Islamic structure is built and with which the testimony of civilization is achieved, the Movement must plan and struggle to obtain "the keys" and the tools of this process in carry out this grand mission as a "Civilization Jihadist" responsibility which lies on the shoulders of Muslims and - on top of them - the Muslim Brotherhood in this country. Among these keys and tools are the following:

1. Adopting the concept of settlement and understanding its practical meanings:

The Explanatory Memorandum focused on the Movement and the realistic dimension of the process of settlement and its practical meanings without paying attention to the difference in understanding between the resident and the non-resident, or who is the settled and the non-settled and we believe that what was mentioned in the long-term plan in that regards suffices.

2. Making a fundamental shift in our thinking and mentality in order to suit the challenges of the settlement mission.

What is meant with the shift - which is a positive expression - is responding to the grand challenges of the settlement issues. We believe that any transforming response begins with the method of thinking and its center, the brain, first. In order to clarify what is meant with the shift as a key to qualify us to enter the field of settlement, we say very briefly that the following must be accomplished:

• A shift from the "amputated" partial thinking mentality to the "continuous" comprehensive mentality.

• A shift from the mentality of caution and reservation to the mentality of risk and controlled liberation.

• A shift from the mentality of the elite Movement to the mentality of the popular Movement.

• A shift from the mentality of preaching and guidance to the mentality of building and testimony

• A shift from the single opinion mentality to the multiple opinion mentality.

• A shift from the collision mentality to the absorption mentality.

• A shift from the individual mentality to the team mentality.

• A shift from the anticipation mentality to the initiative mentality.

• A shift from the hesitation mentality to the decisiveness mentality.

• A shift from the principles mentality to the programs mentality.

• A shift from the abstract ideas mentality the true organizations mentality [This is the core point and the essence of the memorandum].

3. Understanding the historical stages in which the Islamic Ikhwani activism went through in this country:

The writer of the memorandum believes that understanding and comprehending the historical stages of the Islamic activism which was led and being led by the Muslim Brotherhood in this continent is a very important key in working towards settlement, through which the Group observes its march, the direction of its movement and the curves and turns of its road. We will suffice here with mentioning the title for each of these stages [The title expresses the prevalent characteristic of the stage] [Details maybe mentioned in another future study]. Most likely, the stages are:

A.) The stage of searching for self and determining the identity.

B.) The stage of inner build-up and tightening the organization.

C.) The stage of mosques and the Islamic centers.

D.) The stage of building the Islamic organizations - the first phase.

E.) The stage of building the Islamic schools - the first phase.

F.) The stage of thinking about the overt Islamic Movement - the first phase.

G.) The stage of openness to the other Islamic movements and attempting to reach a formula for dealing with them - the first phase.

H.) The stage of reviving and establishing the Islamic organizations - the second phase. We believe that the Group is embarking on this stage in its second phase as it has to open the door and enter as it did the first time.

4. Understanding the role of the Muslim Brother in North America:

The process of settlement is a "Civilization-Jihadist Process" with all the word means. The Ikhwan must understand that their work in America is a kind of grand Jihad in eliminating and destroying the Western civilization from within and "sabotaging" its miserable house by their hands and the hands of the believers so that it is eliminated and God's religion is made victorious over all other religions. Without this level of understanding, we are not up to this challenge and have not prepared ourselves for Jihad yet. It is a Muslim's destiny to perform Jihad and work wherever he is and wherever he lands until the final hour comes, and there is no escape from that destiny except for those who chose to slack. But, would the slackers and the Mujahedeen be equal.

5. Understanding that we cannot perform the settlement mission by ourselves or away from people:

A mission as significant and as huge as the settlement mission needs magnificent and exhausting efforts. With their capabilities, human, financial and scientific resources, the Ikhwan will not be able to carry out this mission alone or away from people and he who believes that is wrong, and God knows best. As for the role of the Ikhwan, it is the initiative, pioneering, leadership, raising the banner and pushing people in that direction. They are then to work to employ, direct and unify Muslims' efforts and powers for this process. In order to do that, we must possess a mastery of the art of "coalitions", the art of "absorption" and the principles of "cooperation".

6. The necessity of achieving a union and balanced gradual merger between private work and public work:

We believe that what was written about this subject is many and is enough. But, it needs a time and a practical frame so that what is needed is achieved in a gradual and a balanced way that is compatible with the process of settlement.

7. The conviction that the success of the settlement of Islam and its Movement in this country is a success to the global Islamic Movement and a true support for the sought-after state, God willing:

There is a conviction - with which this memorandum disagrees - that our focus in attempting to settle Islam in this country will lead to negligence in our duty towards the global Islamic Movement in supporting its project to establish the state. We believe that the reply is in two segments: One - The success of the Movement in America in establishing an observant Islamic base with power and effectiveness will be the best support and aid to the global Movement project.

And the second - is the global Movement has not succeeded yet in "distributing roles" to its branches, stating what is the needed from them as one of the participants or contributors to the project to establish the global Islamic state. The day this happens, the children of the American Ikhwan branch will have far-reaching impact and positions that make the ancestors proud.

8. Absorbing Muslims and winning them with all of their factions and colors in America and Canada for the settlement project, and making it their cause, future and the basis of their Islamic life in this part of the world:

This issues requires from us to learn "the art of dealing with the others", as people are different and people in many colors. We need to adopt the principle which says, "Take from people ... the best they have", their best specializations, experiences, arts, energies and abilities. By people here we mean those within or without the ranks of individuals and organizations. The policy of "taking" should be with what achieves the strategic goal and the settlement process. But the big challenge in front of us is: how to connect them all in "the orbit" of our plan and "the circle" of our Movement in order to achieve "the core" of our interest. To me, there is no choice for us other than alliance and mutual understanding of those who desire from our religion and those who agree from our belief in work. And the U.S. Islamic arena is full of those waiting..., the pioneers.

What matters is bringing people to the level of comprehension of the challenge that is facing us as Muslims in this country, conviction of our settlement project, and understanding the benefit of agreement, cooperation and alliance. At that time, if we ask for money, a lot of it would come, and if we ask for men, they would come in lines,

What matters is that our plan is "the criterion and the balance" in our relationship with others.

Here, two points must be noted; the first one: we need to comprehend and understand the balance of the Islamic powers in the U.S. arena [and this might be the subject of a future study]. The second point: what we reached with the brothers in "ICNA" is considered a step in the right direction, the beginning of good and the first drop that requires growing and guidance.

9. Re-examining our organizational and administrative bodies, the type of leadership and the method of selecting it with what suits the challenges of the settlement mission: The memorandum will be silent about details regarding this item even though it is logical and there is a lot to be said about it.

10. Growing and developing our resources and capabilities, our financial and human resources with what suits the magnitude of the grand mission: If we examined the human and the financial resources the Ikhwan alone own in this country, we and others would feel proud and glorious. And if we add to them the resources of our friends and allies, those who circle in our orbit and those waiting on our banner, we would realize that we are able to open the door to settlement and walk through it seeking to make Almighty God's word the highest.

11. Utilizing the scientific method in planning, thinking and preparation of studies needed for the process of settlement: Yes, we need this method, and we need many studies which aid in this civilization Jihadist operation. We will mention some of them briefly:

- The history of the Islamic presence in America.
- The history of the Islamic Ikhwan presence in America.
- Islamic movements, organizations and organizations: analysis and criticism.
- The phenomenon of the Islamic centers and schools: challenges, needs and statistics.
- Islamic minorities.
- Muslim and Arab communities.
- The U.S. society: make-up and politics.
- The U.S. society's view of Islam and Muslims ...

And many other studies which we can direct our brothers and allies to prepare, either through their academic studies or through their educational centers or organizational tasking. What is important is that we start.

12. Agreeing on a flexible, balanced and a clear "mechanism" to implement the process of settlement within a specific, gradual and balanced "time frame" that is in-line with the demands and challenges of the process of settlement.

13. Understanding the U.S. society from its different aspects an understanding that "qualifies" us to perform the mission of settling our Dawa' in this country "and growing it" on its land.

14. Adopting a written "jurisprudence" that includes legal and movement bases, principles, policies and interpretations which are suitable for the needs and challenges of the process of settlement.

15. Agreeing on "criteria" and balances to be a sort of "antennas" or "the watch tower" in order to make sure that all of our priorities, plans, programs, bodies, leadership, monies and activities march towards the process of the settlement.

16. Adopting a practical, flexible formula through which our central work complements our domestic work. [Items 12 through 16 will be detailed later].

17. Understanding the role and the nature of work of "The Islamic Center" in every city with what achieves the goal of the process of settlement:

The center we seek is the one which constitutes the "axis" of our Movement, the "perimeter" of the circle of our work, our "balance center", the "base" for our rise and our "Dar al-Arqam" to educate us, prepare us and supply our battalions in addition to being the "niche" of our prayers.

This is in order for the Islamic center to turn - in action not in words - into a seed "for a small Islamic society" which is a reflection and a mirror to our central organizations. The center ought to turn into a "beehive" which produces sweet honey. Thus, the Islamic center would turn into a place for study, family, battalion, course, seminar, visit, sport, school, social club, women gathering, kindergarten for male and female youngsters, the office of the domestic political resolution, and the center for distributing our newspapers, magazines, books and our audio and visual tapes.

In brief we say: we would like for the Islamic center to become "The House of Dawa'" and "the general center" in deeds first before name. As much as we own and direct these centers at the continent level, we can say we are marching successfully towards the settlement of Dawa' in this country.

Meaning that the "center's" role should be the same as the "mosque's" role during the time of God's prophet, God's prayers and peace be upon him, when he marched to "settle" the Dawa' in its first generation in Madina. from the mosque, he drew the Islamic life and provided to the world the most magnificent and fabulous civilization humanity knew.

This mandates that, eventually, the region, the branch and the Usra turn into "operations rooms" for planning, direction, monitoring and leadership for the Islamic center in order to be a role model to be followed.

18. Adopting a system that is based on "selecting" workers, "role distribution" and "assigning" positions and responsibilities is based on specialization, desire and need with what achieves the process of settlement and contributes to its success.

19. Turning the principle of dedication for the Masuls of main positions within the Group into a rule, a basis and a policy in work. Without it, the process of settlement might be stalled [Talking about this point requires more details and discussion].

20. Understanding the importance of the "Organizational" shift in our Movement work, and doing Jihad in order to achieve it in the real world with what serves the process of settlement and expedites its results, God Almighty's willing:

The reason this paragraph was delayed is to stress its utmost importance as it constitutes the heart and the core of this memorandum.

It also constitutes the practical aspect and the true measure of our success or failure in our march towards settlement. The talk about the organizations and the "organizational" mentality or phenomenon does not require much details. It suffices to say that the first pioneer of this phenomenon was our prophet Mohamed, God's peace, mercy and blessings be upon him, as he placed the foundation for the first civilized organization which is the mosque, which truly became "the comprehensive organization". And this was done by the pioneer of the contemporary Islamic Dawa', Imam martyr Hasan al-Banna, may God have mercy on him, when he and his brothers felt the need to "re-establish" Islam and its movement anew, leading him to establish organizations with all their kinds: economic, social, media, scouting, professional and even the military ones. We must say that we are in a country which understands no language other than the language of the organizations, and one which does not respect or give weight to any group without effective, functional and strong organizations.

It is good fortune that there are brothers among us who have this "trend", mentality or inclination to build the organizations who have beat us by action and words which leads us to dare say honestly what Sadat in Egypt once said, "We want to build a country of organizations"

- a word of right he meant wrong with. I say to my brothers, let us raise the banner of truth to establish right "We want to establish the Group of organizations", as without it we will not be able to put our feet on the true path.

- And in order for the process of settlement to be completed, we must plan and work from now to equip and prepare ourselves, our brothers, our apparatuses, our sections and our committees in order to turn into comprehensive organizations in a gradual and balanced way that is suitable with the need and the reality. What encourages us to do that - in addition to the aforementioned - is that we possess "seeds" for each organization from the organization we call for [See attachment number (1)].

- All we need is to tweak them, coordinate their work, collect their elements and merge their efforts with others and then connect them with the comprehensive plan we seek. For instance, We have a seed for a "comprehensive media and art" organization: we own a print + advanced typesetting machine + audio and visual center + art production office + magazines in Arabic and English [The Horizons, The Hope, The Politicians, Ila Falastine, Press Clips, al-Zaytouna, Palestine Monitor, Social Sciences Magazines...] + art band + photographers + producers + programs anchors +journalists + in addition to other media and art experiences".

Another example:

We have a seed for a "comprehensive DawA' educational" organization:

We have the DawA section in ISNA + Dr. Jamal Badawi Foundation + the center run by brother Harned al-Ghazali + the DawA' center the DawA' Committee and brother Shaker al-Sayyed are seeking to establish now + in addition to other DawA efforts here and there..."

And this applies to all the organizations we call on establishing.

- The big challenge that is ahead of us is how to turn these seeds or "scattered" elements into comprehensive, stable, "settled" organizations that are connected with our Movement and which fly in our orbit and take orders from our guidance. This does not prevent - but calls for - each central organization to have its local branches but its connection with the Islamic center in the city is a must.

- What is needed is to seek to prepare the atmosphere and the means to achieve "the merger" so that the sections, the committees, the regions, the branches and the Usras are eventually the heart and the core of these organizations.

Or, for the shift and the change to occur as follows:

1. The Movement Department + The Secretariat Department - The Organizational & Administrative Organization - The General Center

2. Education Department + DawA Com. - DawA' and Educational Organization

3. Sisters Department - The Women's Organization

4. The Financial Department + Investment Committee + The Endowment - The Economic Organization

5. Youth Department + Youths Organizations Department - Youth Organizations

6. The Social Committee + Matrimony Committee + Mercy Foundation - The Social Organization

7. The Security Committee - The Security Organization

8. The Political Depart. + Palestine Com. - The Political Organization

9. The Group's Court + The Legal Com. - The Judicial Organization

10. Domestic Work Department Its work is to be distributed to the rest of the organizations

11. Our magazines + the print + our art band - The Media and Art Organization

12. The Studies Association + The Publication House + Dar al-Kitab - The Intellectual & Cultural Organization

13. Scientific and Medial societies - Scientific, Educational & Professional Organization

14. The Organizational Conference - The Islamic-American Founding Conference

15. The Shura Council + Planning Com. - The Shura Council for the Islamic-American Movement

16. The Executive Office - The Executive Office of the Islamic-American Movement

17. The General Masul - Chairman of the Islamic Movement and its official Spokesman

18. The regions, branches & Usras - Field leaders of organizations & Islamic centers

FIVE: COMPREHENSIVE SETTLEMENT ORGANIZATION:

- We would then seek and struggle in order to make each one of these above-mentioned organizations a "comprehensive organization" throughout the days and the years, and as long as we are destined to be in this country.

What is important is that we put the foundation and we will be followed by peoples and generations that would finish the march and the road but with a clearly-defined guidance. [ANALYSIS: The "Explanatory Memorandum On The General Strategic Goal For The Group In North America: 5/22/1991" specifies the five phases of the Muslim Brotherhood Movement in North America. The process is a Jihadist Process against every non-Muslim country, and by all available means: by immigration, implementing the Sharia step-by-step, by finance, propaganda in speaking and writing, by undermining the media and public schools first, by influencing the creation of school textbooks (tuning them "muslim-friendly"), by spying on government and all related institutions such as the legislative, executive, jurisprudence, police, secret service, prisons, and companies. Have you ever noticed how many muslims are in our prisons? (their main duty is to convert fellow prisoners to Islam by intimidation.) The entire process of transforming our society is meticulously planned (modeled directly after Sayyid Qutb's Milestones and the shariah doctrine of progressive revelation) for reaching each goal as easy as possible, just like this:

PHASE ONE: Phase of discreet and secret establishment of leadership.

PHASE TWO: Phase of gradual appearance on the public scene and exercising and utilising various public activities (It greatly succeeded in implementing this stage). It also succeeded in achieving a great deal of its important goals, such as infiltrating various sectors of the Government. Gaining religious institutions and embracing senior scholars. Gaining public support and sympathy. Establishing a shadow government (secret) within the Government.

PHASE THREE: Escalation phase, prior to conflict and confrontation with the rulers, through utilizing mass media. Currently in progress.

PHASE FOUR: Open public confrontation with the Government through exercising the The Elbarasse archives and close observation of the Brotherhood's operations reveal the following as the most important of the techniques employed by the Ikhwan in America to achieve the seditious goals of its civilisation jihad:

- Expanding the Muslim presence by birth rate, immigration, and refusal to assimilate (meaning: Muslims emigrate to western so-called "social net countries" bleeding out the host countries financial resources by claiming "childrens' benefits", pension money, etc.);

- Occupying and expanding domination of physical spaces (by buying properties and land and populate it immediately with Muslims);

- Ensuring the "Muslim Community" knows and follows Muslim Brotherhood doctrine (as outlined in the "Covenant of Hamas" which is a legal organisation under Islamic Sharia Law and branch of the "Muslim Brotherhood");

- Controlling the language we use in describing the enemy (such as saying "Look, we are all on the same side!, All religions are the same, You do not understand the Koran, you must read it in Arabic, no translation can say what the Koran is really about; not talking about uncomfortable issues such womens' equal rights; etc.);

- Ensuring we do not study their doctrine (particularly the Sharia and the Edict of Umar);

- Co-opting key leadership (which means: a Muslim to becoming a member of parliament or even the government in order to undermine the entire political and democratical system, pretty much like Hitlers Nazi Party who undermined the system in order to kill it off);

- Forcing compliance with Sharia at local levels (by building Sharia Courts or Mediation Centres, trying to enforce "political correctness", making westerners behave Islamic by wearing headscarfs, etc.);

- Fighting all counterterrorism efforts (which means to resist anything that collects data of Islamic organisations or personal particulars of Muslims, so-called "data protectionism");

- Subverting religious organisations (by building a "fifth column" in religious and political organisations);

- Employing lawfare – the offensive use of lawsuits and threats of lawsuits (by creating so-called "anti-hate speech laws" such as "The Racial and Religious Tolerance Act", Victoria (Australia, 2001) or "Charter of Human Rights and Responsibilities", Victoria (Australia, 2006);

- Claiming victimisation (such as "we poor Muslims are always the victims!" / demanding accommodations, halal food and special prayer places in companies first, then particularly mosques, Koran schools, etc.);

- Condemning "slander" against Islam (that means talking against anything that comes from Islam, such as uncomfortable truths);

Political pressure approach. It is aggressively implementing the above-mentioned approach. Training on the use of weapons domestically and overseas in anticipation of zero-hour. It has noticeable activities in this regard.

PHASE FIVE: Seizing power to establish their Islamic Nation under which all parties and Islamic groups are united. This document offers a chilling operational insight into the mindset, planning, and vision of the Islamic movement in North America.

The Implementation of Sharia by the Muslim Brotherhood

- Subverting the U.S. education system, in particular, infiltrating and dominating U.S. Middle East studies programs;

- Demanding the right to practice shariah in segregated Muslim enclaves;

- Demanding recognition of shariah in non-Muslim spheres;

- Confronting and denouncing Western society, laws, and traditions; and

- Demanding that sharia replace Western law. Note that many of the foregoing techniques entail, in one way or another, influencing and neutralising the American government at all levels.]

DECLARATION

AND PROGRAMME OF ACTION, 2002

(The "Shut-up-Programme of the Globalists")

World Conference Against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance

Published by the United Nations

Department of Public Information New York, 2002

(Although the declaration begins so promising by saying "that the Holocaust must never be forgotten", it pretty soon slides down into obfuscation by calling people names instead of addressing their concerns. It obviously has been decided that total egalitarianism is the programme of the day, of course, without examining the facts, the why's, the what's, and where the citizens' feelings come from. What we find is a dull repetition of words such as Racism, Xenophobia (which stands obviously also for Islamophobia), Discrimination, Intolerance, and so on and so forth. Each of these words have been here repeated several hundred times, hoping they become more true by constant repetition. Remember: Hitler already made this repetition-tool respectable in socialist society. We would expect a better approach from a document like this!

The word "Traveller" in Art. 68 refers obviously to "migrant", a word which the authors here desparately wanted to avoid for the reason that it might steer unwanted attention to the Islamic precept of migration prescribed in Islamic scripture (see Sira, Koran, Hadith, Sharia).

The contents of Article 71-74 convince us that the authors have no idea of the Islamic scripture and the subsequent Sharia law, because what the authors demand here is no less than implementing Sharia law in our western societies. There are only two possibilities why the authors suggest and urge countries to follow this document: They are either totally ignorant of the facts, or they deliberately want to persuade western civilians to commit an act of treason against their own home country.

This paper is assuming that anyone who is concerned about their home country's populace, its social and religious composition, and its inherited culture, is a Nazi or fascist. It has neither care nor pity for patriotic citizens who do not want globalisation at any cost, at least not at the cost for giving up their own culture, and the to it connected system of values and virtues that have grown over many centuries. The Creators of this declaration are the ones who drive concerned citizen straight into the arms of precisely those fascists they want to get rid of. They seem to have the desire to make every place on earth look like any other place on earth. It is the ignorance of long-standing achievements, and the will of the internationalistic globalists to distroy everything which makes a nation feel home, that causes alert citizens to speak up!

After the examination of this declaration, there is no other summary possible than naming it "Shut-up-Programme of the Globalists" as it is very obviously the most imbalanced and hypocritical declaration that has ever been composed. The, by our constitution guaranteed, liberty of free speech should be undermined by this document for the simple reason that religious feelings have become more important than speaking out what our citizens believe to be the truth or the right thing to say. Speaking out, and listening to it, is uncomfortable.

The declaration shunnes intolerance but is in itself the most intolerat declaration ever created by the United Nations Organisation. This "shut-up programme" has now become a blueprint for lawsuits in some Western countries such as UK, Germany, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and many others, leading those nations on a path on self-inflicted annihilation of their very own civilisation. Look up for:)

FOREWORD

Member States of the United Nations adopted these texts at the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held from 31 August to 8 September 2001 in Durban, South Africa.

They represent the hard-won results of a landmark occasion. The terrible attacks in the United States just three days later, with their aftermath of rising fear and xenophobia, make these anti-discrimination texts all the more relevant.

They consist of a Declaration and Programme of Action. The Declaration represents the commitments arising from the complex global dialogue which took place. It addresses past manifestations as well as contemporary forms of racial discrimination. The Programme of Action is a road-map illustrating how the international community will follow up on these commitments. It indicates the steps to be taken to put an end to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and to prevent their future occurrence.

If pursued with energy and goodwill by all actors – States, the United Nations, national institutions, intergovernmental organisations, and non-governmental organisations – this anti-discrimination agenda can bring new hope and change to the lives of the millions of human beings the world over who are victims of racial discrimination and intolerance.

Mary Robinson,
 United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and Secretary-General of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance

INTRODUCTION

Although the standard of non-discrimination has been established as a bedrock principle of international law, the persistence of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance clearly demonstrates the need to look for new ways to address this problem with more resolve, with more humanity and with greater efficiency. The World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, held in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, helped focus the international community's thinking about where action to date has been insufficient, and in what areas and in what ways we can do more to create just and fair societies free of racial discrimination.

The Conference involved nine days of intensive and frequently difficult negotiation. Nevertheless, despite all of the obstacles that had to be overcome, the Conference was ultimately successful in negotiating a Declaration and Programme of Action by consensus.

The documents adopted at the Conference address a wide range of subjects. Concerning the past, the language adopted was historic. The Conference agreed that slavery and the slave trade are a crime against humanity, and should have always been so. It was further agreed that slavery and the slave trade, including the transatlantic slave trade, were appalling tragedies in the history of humanity, especially in their negation of the essence of the victims. The Conference also recognised that colonialism had led to racism and caused suffering and that its consequences persist to this day.

Concerning the Middle East and related issues, the Conference expressed concern about the plight of the Palestinian people under foreign occupation and recognised the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and the right to an independent state. The Conference also recognised the right to security for all States in the region, including Israel, and called upon all States to support the peace process and bring it to an early conclusion.

The Conference also recalled that the Holocaust must never be forgotten.

Agreement was reached on the need for national action plans, tougher national legislation and more legal assistance to victims of racial discrimination. Improvement in the administration of justice and the reinforcement of national institutions to combat racial discrimination were also emphasised. In this regard, the importance of appropriate remedies and positive action for victims of racial discrimination was underlined.

A wide variety of educational and awareness-raising measures were adopted. Measures were also included to ensure equality in the fields of employment, health and the environment. The need to have accurate data collection and research was identified as an important prerequisite for taking corrective measures. Measures to counter racism in the media, including on the Internet, were also included in the documents adopted.

The documents adopted specified that a victim-oriented approach was an important tool to eliminate racial discrimination.

Specific reference was made to Africans and persons of African descent, Asians and persons of Asian descent, indigenous peoples, migrants, refugees, minorities, the Roma and others. Durban also put the gender dimension of racial discrimination on the map, as well as the more general question of multiple discrimination. In addition, the importance of involving not only States, but a wide variety of actors including civil society, NGOs and youth, in the implementation of the Durban commitments was emphasised.

In reflecting on the World Conference, it is important to note that the Declaration and Programme of Action adopted in Durban are both historic and forward-looking.

They provide a new and innovative anti-discrimination agenda, and, as such, constitute an essential element of an emerging global dialogue on how to eliminate the scourge of racial discrimination from our world.

People in all parts of the world continue to suffer daily from racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. They are looking to the United Nations and its Member States to lead the way forward and help them to have the conditions for a better life, a decent life, and one free of discrimination.

Durban should be seen as a beginning and not an end.

The key to responding to the hopes and aspirations of those who continue to suffer from discrimination is to ensure effective implementation of the commitments made at this landmark Conference. There is an enormous consensus around the world, amongst peoples and Governments alike, on the need to do more to implement the principles of equality and nondiscrimination.

The Declaration and Programme of Action adopted at the Conference gave the international community the tools to do this. But the best tools are only of value if they are put to use.

DECLARATION

Having met in Durban, South Africa, from 31 August to 8 September 2001, Expressing deep appreciation to the Government of South Africa for hosting this World Conference,

Drawing inspiration from the heroic struggle of the people of South Africa against the institutionalised system of apartheid, as well as for equality and justice under democracy, development, the rule of law and respect for human rights, recalling in this context the important contribution to that struggle of the international community and, in particular, the pivotal role of the people and Governments of Africa, and noting the important role that different actors of civil society, including non-governmental organizations, played in that struggle and in ongoing efforts to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling that the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action, adopted by the World Conference on Human Rights in June 1993, calls for the speedy and comprehensive elimination of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling Commission on Human Rights resolution 1997/74 of 18 April 1997, General Assembly resolution 52/111 of 12 December 1997 and subsequent resolutions of those bodies concerning the convening of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance and recalling also the two World Conferences to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination, held in Geneva in 1978 and 1983, respectively,

Noting with grave concern that despite the efforts of the international community, the principal objectives of the three Decades to Combat Racism and Racial Discrimination have not been attained and that countless human beings continue to the present day to be victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recalling that the year 2001 is the International Year of Mobilisation against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, aimed at drawing the world's attention to the objectives of the World Conference and giving new momentum to the political commitment to eliminate all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Welcoming the decision of the General Assembly to proclaim the year 2001 as the United Nations Year of Dialogue among Civilisations, which underlines tolerance and respect for diversity and the need to seek common ground among and within civilisations in order to address common challenges to humanity that threaten shared values, universal human rights and the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, through cooperation, partnership and inclusion,

Welcoming also the proclamation by the General Assembly of the period 2001-2010 as the Decade for a Culture of Peace and Non-Violence for Children of the World, as well as the adoption by the General Assembly of the Declaration and Plan of Action on a Culture of Peace,

Recognising that the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, in conjunction with the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People, presents a unique opportunity to consider the invaluable contributions of indigenous peoples to political, economic, social, cultural and spiritual development throughout the world to our societies, as well as the challenges faced by them, including racism and racial discrimination,

Recalling the United Nations Declaration on the Granting of Independence to Colonial Countries and Peoples of 1960,

Reaffirming our commitment to the purposes and principles contained in the Charter of the United Nations and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, Affirming that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance constitute a negation of the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

Reaffirming the principles of equality and non-discrimination in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and encouraging respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all without distinction of any kind such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status,

Convinced of the fundamental importance of universal accession to or ratification of and full implementation of our obligations arising under the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination as the principal international instrument to eliminate racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Recognising the fundamental importance for States, in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia, and related intolerance, to consider signing, ratifying or acceding to all relevant international human rights instruments, with a view to universal adherence,

Having taken note of the reports of the regional conferences organised at Strasbourg, Santiago, Dakar

and Tehran and other inputs from States, as well as the reports of expert seminars, non-governmental organization regional meetings and other meetings organised in preparation for the World Conference,

Noting with appreciation the Vision Statement launched by President Thabo Mbeki of South Africa under the patronage of The Honourable Nelson Mandela, first President of the new South Africa, and at the initiative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights and Secretary-General of the World Conference, and signed by seventy-four heads of State, heads of Government and dignitaries,

Reaffirming that cultural diversity is a cherished asset for the advancement and welfare of humanity at large and should be valued, enjoyed, genuinely accepted and embraced as a permanent feature which enriches our societies,

Acknowledging that no derogation from the prohibition of racial discrimination, genocide, the crime of apartheid and slavery is permitted, as defined in the obligations under the relevant human rights instruments,

Having listened to the peoples of the world and recognising their aspirations to justice, to equality of opportunity for all and everyone, to the enjoyment of their human rights, including the right to development, to live in peace and freedom and to equal participation without discrimination in economic, social, cultural, civil and political life,

Recognising that the equal participation of all individuals and peoples in the formation of just, equitable, democratic and inclusive societies can contribute to a world free from racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Emphasising the importance of the equitable participation of all, without any discrimination, in domestic as well as global decision-making,

Affirming that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, where they amount to racism and racial discrimination, constitute serious violations of and obstacles to the full enjoyment of all human rights and deny the self-evident truth that all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights, are an obstacle to friendly and peaceful relations among peoples and nations, and are among the root causes of many internal and international conflicts, including armed conflicts, and the consequent forced displacement of populations,

Recognising that national and international actions are required to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in order to ensure the full enjoyment of all human rights, economic, social, cultural, civil and political, which are universal, indivisible, interdependent and interrelated, and to improve the living conditions of men, women and children of all nations,

Reaffirming the importance of the enhancement of international cooperation for the promotion and protection of human rights and for the achievement of the objectives of the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Acknowledging that xenophobia, in its different manifestations, is one of the main contemporary sources and forms of discrimination and conflict, combating which requires urgent attention and prompt action by States, as well as by the international community,

Fully aware that, despite efforts undertaken by the international community, Governments and local authorities, the scourge of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance persists and continues to result in violations of human rights, suffering, disadvantage and violence, which must be combated by all available and appropriate means and as a matter of the highest priority, preferably in cooperation with affected communities,

Noting with concern the continued and violent occurrence of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and that theories of superiority of certain races and cultures over others, promoted and practised during the colonial era, continue to be propounded in one form or another even today,

Alarmed by the emergence and continued occurrence of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in their more subtle and contemporary forms and manifestations, as well as by other ideologies and practices based on racial or ethnic discrimination or superiority,

Strongly rejecting any doctrine of racial superiority, along with theories which attempt to determine the existence of so-called distinct human races,

Recognising that failure to combat and denounce racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance by all, especially by public authorities and politicians at all levels, is a factor encouraging their perpetuation,

Reaffirming that States have the duty to protect and promote the human rights and fundamental freedoms of all victims, and that they should apply a gender perspective, recognising the multiple forms of discrimination which women can face, and that the enjoyment of their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights is essential for the development of societies throughout the world, Recognizing both the challenges and opportunities presented by an increasingly globalised world in relation to the struggle to eradicate racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

1. For the purpose of this Declaration and Programme of Action, it was understood that the term "gender" refers to the two sexes, male and female, within the context of society. The term "gender" does not indicate any meaning different from the above.

Determined, in an era when globalization and technology have contributed considerably to bringing people together, to materialise the notion of a human family based on equality, dignity and solidarity, and to make the twenty-first century a century of human rights, the eradication of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the realisation of genuine equality of opportunity and treatment for all individuals and peoples,

Reaffirming the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and recalling that all individuals are born equal in dignity and rights, stressing that such equality must be protected as a matter of the highest priority and recognising the duty of States to take prompt, decisive and appropriate measures with a view to eliminating all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance,

Dedicating ourselves to combating the scourge of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance fully and effectively as a matter of priority, while drawing lessons from manifestations and past experiences of racism in all parts of the world with a view to avoiding their recurrence,

Joining together in a spirit of renewed political will and commitment to universal equality, justice and dignity, we salute the memory of all victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance all over the world and solemnly adopt the Durban Declaration and Programme of Action,

2. Reference should be made to chapter VII of the report of the Conference (A/CONF. 189/12), which lists all the reservations to and statements on the Declaration and the Programme of Action.

GENERAL ISSUES

1. We declare that for the purpose of the present Declaration and Programme of Action, the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance are individuals or groups of individuals who are or have been negatively affected by, subjected to, or targets of these scourges;

2. We recognise that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance occur on the grounds of race, colour, descent or national or ethnic origin and that victims can suffer multiple or aggravated forms of discrimination based on other related grounds such as sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, social origin, property, birth or other status;

3. We recognise and affirm that, at the outset of the third millennium, a global fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and all their abhorrent and evolving forms and manifestations is a matter of priority for the international community, and that this Conference offers a unique and historic opportunity for assessing and identifying all dimensions of those devastating evils of humanity with a view to their total elimination through, inter alia, the initiation of innovative and holistic approaches and the strengthening and enhancement of practical and effective measures at the national, regional and international levels;

4. We express our solidarity with the people of Africa in their continuing struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and recognize the sacrifices made by them, as well as their efforts in raising international public awareness of these inhuman tragedies;

5. We also affirm the great importance we attach to the values of solidarity, respect, tolerance and multiculturalism, which constitute the moral ground and inspiration for our worldwide struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, inhuman tragedies which have affected people throughout the world, especially in Africa, for too long;

6. We further affirm that all peoples and individuals constitute one human family, rich in diversity. They have contributed to the progress of civilizations and cultures that form the common heritage of humanity. Preservation and promotion of tolerance, pluralism and respect for diversity can produce more inclusive societies;

7. We declare that all human beings are born free, equal in dignity and rights and have the potential to contribute constructively to the development and well-being of their societies. Any doctrine of racial superiority is scientifically false, morally condemnable, socially unjust and dangerous, and must be rejected along with theories which attempt to determine the existence of separate human races;

8. We recognise that religion, spirituality and belief play a central role in the lives of millions of women and men, and in the way they live and treat other persons. Religion, spirituality and belief may and can contribute to the promotion of the inherent dignity and worth of the human person and to the eradication of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

9. We note with concern that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance may be aggravated by, inter alia, inequitable distribution of wealth, marginalisation and social exclusion;

10. We reaffirm that everyone is entitled to a social and international order in which all human rights can be fully realised for all, without any discrimination;

11. We note that the process of globalization constitutes a powerful and dynamic force which should be harnessed for the benefit, development and prosperity of all countries, without exclusion. We recognize that developing countries face special difficulties in responding to this central challenge.

While globalisation offers great opportunities, at present its benefits are very unevenly shared, while its costs are unevenly distributed. We thus express our determination to prevent and mitigate the negative effects of globalization. These effects could aggravate, inter alia, poverty, underdevelopment, marginalisation, social exclusion, cultural homogenisation and economic disparities which may occur along racial lines, within and between States, and have an adverse impact. We further express our determination to maximise the benefits of globalization through, inter alia, the strengthening and enhancement of international cooperation to increase equality of opportunities for trade, economic growth and sustainable development, global communications through the use of new technologies and increased intercultural exchange through the preservation and promotion of cultural diversity, which can contribute to the eradication of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. Only through broad and sustained efforts to create a shared future based upon our common humanity, and all its diversity, can globalisation be made fully inclusive and equitable;

12. We recognise that interregional and intraregional migration has increased as a result of globalisation, in particular from the South to the North, and stress that policies towards migration should not be based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

Sources, Causes, Forms And Contemporary Manifestations Of Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia And Related Intolerance

13. We acknowledge that slavery and the slave trade, including the transatlantic slave trade, were appalling tragedies in the history of humanity not only because of their abhorrent barbarism but also in terms of their magnitude, organised nature and especially their negation of the essence of the victims, and further acknowledge that slavery and the slave trade are a crime against humanity and should always have been so, especially the transatlantic slave trade, and are among the major sources and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and that Africans and people of African descent, Asians and people of Asian descent and indigenous peoples were victims of these acts and continue to be victims of their consequences;

14. We recognise that colonialism has led to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and that Africans and people of African descent, and people of Asian descent and indigenous peoples were victims of colonialism and continue to be victims of its consequences. We acknowledge the suffering caused by colonialism and affirm that, wherever and whenever it occurred, it must be condemned and its reoccurrence prevented. We further regret that the effects and persistence of these structures and practices have been among the factors contributing to lasting social and economic inequalities in many parts of the world today;

15. We recognise that apartheid and genocide in terms of international law constitute crimes against humanity and are major sources and manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and acknowledge the untold evil and suffering caused by these acts and affirm that wherever and whenever they occurred, they must be condemned and their recurrence prevented;

16. We recognise that xenophobia against non-nationals, particularly migrants, refugees and asylum-seekers, constitutes one of the main sources of contemporary racism and that human rights violations against members of such groups occur widely in the context of discriminatory, xenophobic and racist practices;

17. We note the importance of paying special attention to new manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance to which youth and other vulnerable groups might be exposed;

18. We emphasise that poverty, underdevelopment, marginalisation, social exclusion and economic disparities are closely associated with racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and contribute to the persistence of racist attitudes and practices which in turn generate more poverty;

19. We recognise the negative economic, social and cultural consequences of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, which have contributed significantly to the underdevelopment of developing countries and, in particular, of Africa and resolve to free every man, woman and child from the abject and dehumanizing conditions of extreme poverty to which more than one billion of them are currently subjected, to make the right to development a reality for everyone and to free the entire human race from want;

20. We recognise that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance are among the root causes of armed conflict and very often one of its consequences and recall that non-discrimination is a fundamental principle of international humanitarian law. We underscore the need for all parties to armed conflicts to abide scrupulously by this principle and for States and the international community to remain especially vigilant during periods of armed conflict and continue to combat all forms of racial discrimination;

21. We express our deep concern that socio-economic development is being hampered by widespread internal conflicts which are due, among other causes, to gross violations of human rights, including those arising from racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and from lack of democratic, inclusive and participatory governance;

22. We express our concern that in some States political and legal structures or institutions, some of which were inherited and persist today, do not correspond to the multi-ethnic, pluricultural and plurilingual characteristics of the population and, in many cases, constitute an important factor of discrimination in the exclusion of indigenous peoples;

23. We fully recognize the rights of indigenous peoples consistent with the principles of sovereignty and territorial integrity of States, and therefore stress the need to adopt the appropriate constitutional, administrative, legislative and judicial measures, including those derived from applicable international instruments;

24. We declare that the use of the term "indigenous peoples" in the Declaration and Programme of Action of the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance is in the context of, and without prejudice to the outcome of, ongoing international negotiations on texts that specifically deal with this issue, and cannot be construed as having any implications as to rights under international law;

25. We express our profound repudiation of the racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance that persist in some States in the functioning of the penal systems and in the application of the law, as well as in the actions and attitudes of institutions and individuals responsible for law enforcement, especially where this has contributed to certain groups being over-represented among persons under detention or imprisoned;

26. We affirm the need to put an end to impunity for violations of the human rights and fundamental freedoms of individuals and groups of individuals who are victimized by racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

27. We express our concern that, beyond the fact that racism is gaining ground, contemporary forms and manifestations of racism and xenophobia are striving to regain political, moral and even legal recognition in many ways, including through the platforms of some political parties and organisations and the dissemination through modern communication technologies of ideas based on the notion of racial superiority;

28. We recall that persecution against any identifiable group, collectivity or community on racial, national, ethnic or other grounds that are universally recognized as impermissible under international law, as well as the crime of apartheid, constitute serious violations of human rights and, in some cases, qualify as crimes against humanity;

29. We strongly condemn the fact that slavery and slavery-like practices still exist today in parts of the world and urge States to take immediate measures as a matter of priority to end such practices, which constitute flagrant violations of human rights;

30. We affirm the urgent need to prevent, combat and eliminate all forms of trafficking in persons, in particular women and children, and recognize that victims of trafficking are particularly exposed to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

Victims Of Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia And Related Intolerance

31. We also express our deep concern whenever indicators in the fields of, inter alia, education, employment, health, housing, infant mortality and life expectancy for many peoples show a situation of disadvantage, particularly where the contributing factors include racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

32. We recognise the value and diversity of the cultural heritage of Africans and people of African descent and affirm the importance and necessity of ensuring their full integration into social, economic and political life with a view to facilitating their full participation at all levels in the decision-making process;

33. We consider it essential for all countries in the region of the Americas and all other areas of the African Diaspora to recognise the existence of their population of African descent and the cultural, economic, political and scientific contributions made by that population, and recognise the persistence of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance that specifically affect them, and recognise that, in many countries, their long-standing inequality in terms of access to, inter alia, education, health care and housing has been a profound cause of the socio-economic disparities that affect them;

34. We recognise that people of African descent have for centuries been victims of racism, racial discrimination and enslavement and of the denial by history of many of their rights, and assert that they should be treated with fairness and respect for their dignity and should not suffer discrimination of any kind. Recognition should therefore be given to their rights to culture and their own identity; to participate freely and in equal conditions in political, social, economic and cultural life; to development in the context of their own aspirations and customs; to keep, maintain and foster their own forms of organisation, their mode of life, culture, traditions and religious expressions; to maintain and use their own languages; to the protection of their traditional knowledge and their cultural and artistic heritage; to the use, enjoyment and conservation of the natural renewable resources of their habitat and to active participation in the design, implementation and development of educational systems and programmes, including those of a specific and characteristic nature; and where applicable to their ancestrally inhabited land;

35. We recognise that in many parts of the world, Africans and people of African descent face barriers as a result of social biases and discrimination prevailing in public and private institutions and express our commitment to work towards the eradication of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance faced by Africans and people of African descent;

36. We recognise that in many parts of the world, Asians and people of Asian descent face barriers as a result of social biases and discrimination prevailing in public and private institutions and express our commitment to work towards the eradication of all forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance faced by Asians and people of Asian descent;

37. We note with appreciation that despite the racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance faced by them for centuries, people of Asian descent have contributed and continue to contribute significantly to the economic, social, political, scientific and cultural life of the countries where they live;

38. We call upon all States to review and, where necessary, revise any immigration policies which are inconsistent with international human rights instruments, with a view to eliminating all discriminatory policies and practices against migrants, including Asians and people of Asian descent;

39. We recognise that the indigenous peoples have been victims of discrimination for centuries and affirm that they are free and equal in dignity and rights and should not suffer any discrimination, particularly on the basis of their indigenous origin and identity, and we stress the continuing need for action to overcome the persistent racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance that affect them;

40. We recognise the value and diversity of the cultures and the heritage of indigenous peoples, whose singular contribution to the development and cultural pluralism of society and full participation in all aspects of society, in particular on issues that are of concern to them, are fundamental for political and social stability, and for the development of the States in which they live;

41. We reiterate our conviction that the full realization by indigenous peoples of their human rights and fundamental freedoms is indispensable for eliminating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. We firmly reiterate our determination to promote their full and equal enjoyment of civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights, as well as the benefits of sustainable development, while fully respecting their distinctive characteristics and their own initiatives;

42. We emphasise that, in order for indigenous peoples freely to express their own identity and exercise their rights, they should be free from all forms of discrimination, which necessarily entails respect for their human rights and fundamental freedoms. Efforts are now being made to secure universal recognition for those rights in the negotiations on the draft declaration on the rights of indigenous peoples, including the following: to call themselves by their own names; to participate freely and on an equal footing in their country's political, economic, social and cultural development; to maintain their own forms of organization, lifestyles, cultures and traditions; to maintain and use their own languages; to maintain their own economic structures in the areas where they live; to take part in the development of their educational systems and programmes; to manage their lands and natural resources, including hunting and fishing rights; and to have access to justice on a basis of equality;

43. We also recognise the special relationship that indigenous peoples have with the land as the basis for their spiritual, physical and cultural existence and encourage States, wherever possible, to ensure that indigenous peoples are able to retain ownership of their lands and of those natural resources to which they are entitled under domestic law;

44. We welcome the decision to create the Permanent Forum on Indigenous Issues within the United Nations system, giving concrete expression to major objectives of the International Decade of the World's Indigenous People and the Vienna Declaration and Programme of Action;

45. We welcome the appointment by the United Nations of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms of indigenous people and express our commitment to cooperate with the Special Rapporteur;

46. We recognise the positive economic, social and cultural contributions made by migrants to both countries of origin and destination;

47. We reaffirm the sovereign right of each State to formulate and apply its own legal framework and policies for migration, and further affirm that these policies should be consistent with applicable human rights instruments, norms and standards, and designed to ensure that they are free of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

48. We note with concern and strongly condemn the manifestations and acts of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against migrants and the stereotypes often applied to them; reaffirm the responsibility of States to protect the human rights of migrants under their jurisdiction and reaffirm the responsibility of States to safeguard and protect migrants against illegal or violent acts, in particular acts of racial discrimination and crimes perpetrated with racist or xenophobic motivation by individuals or groups; and stress the need for their fair, just and equitable treatment in society and in the workplace;

49. We highlight the importance of creating conditions conducive to greater harmony, tolerance and respect between migrants and the rest of society in the countries in which they find themselves, in order to eliminate manifestations of racism and xenophobia against migrants. We underline that family reunification has a positive effect on integration and emphasise the need for States to facilitate family reunion;

50. We are mindful of the situation of vulnerability in which migrants frequently find themselves, owing, inter alia, to their departure from their countries of origin and to the difficulties they encounter because of differences in language, customs and culture, as well as economic and social difficulties and obstacles to the return of migrants who are undocumented or in an irregular situation;

51. We reaffirm the necessity of eliminating racial discrimination against migrants, including migrant workers, in relation to issues such as employment, social services, including education and health, as well as access to justice, and that their treatment must be in accordance with international human rights instruments, free from racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

52. We note with concern that, among other factors, racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance contribute to forced displacement and the movement of people from their countries of origin as refugees and asylumseekers;

53. We recognise with concern that, despite efforts to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, instances of various forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance against refugees, asylum-seekers and internally displaced persons, among others, continue;

54. We underline the urgency of addressing the root causes of displacement and of finding durable solutions for refugees and displaced persons, in particular voluntary return in safety and dignity to the countries of origin, as well as resettlement in third countries and local integration, when and where appropriate and feasible;

55. We affirm our commitment to respect and implement humanitarian obligations relating to the protection of refugees, asylum-seekers, returnees and internally displaced persons, and note in this regard the importance of international solidarity, burden-sharing and international cooperation to share responsibility for the protection of refugees, reaffirming that the 1951 Convention relating to the Status of Refugees and its 1967 Protocol remain the foundation of the international refugee regime and recognizing the importance of their full application by States parties;

56. We recognise the presence in many countries of a Mestizo population of mixed ethnic and racial origins and its valuable contribution to the promotion of tolerance and respect in these societies, and we condemn discrimination against them, especially because such discrimination may be denied owing to its subtle nature;

57. We are conscious of the fact that the history of humanity is replete with major atrocities as a result of gross violations of human rights and believe that lessons can be learned through remembering history to avert future tragedies;

58. We recall that the Holocaust must never be forgotten;

59. We recognise with deep concern religious intolerance against certain religious communities, as well as the emergence of hostile acts and violence against such communities because of their religious beliefs and their racial or ethnic origin in various parts of the world, which in particular limit their right to freely practise their belief;

60. We also recognise with deep concern the existence in various parts of the world of religious intolerance against religious communities and their members, in particular limitation of their right to practise their beliefs freely, as well as the emergence of increased negative stereotyping, hostile acts and violence against such communities because of their religious beliefs and their ethnic or so-called racial origin;

61. We recognise with deep concern the increase in anti-Semitism and Islamophobia in various parts of the world, as well as the emergence of racial and violent movements based on racism and discriminatory ideas against Jewish, Muslim and Arab communities; 62. We are conscious that humanity's history is replete with terrible wrongs inflicted through lack of respect for the equality of human beings and note with alarm the increase of such practices in various parts of the world, and we urge people, particularly in conflict situations, to desist from racist incitement, derogatory language and negative stereotyping;

63. We are concerned about the plight of the Palestinian people under foreign occupation. We recognize the inalienable right of the Palestinian people to self-determination and to the establishment of an independent State and we recognise the right to security for all States in the region, including Israel, and call upon all States to support the peace process and bring it to an early conclusion;

64. We call for a just, comprehensive and lasting peace in the region in which all peoples shall co-exist and enjoy equality, justice and internationally recognised human rights, and security;

65. We recognise the right of refugees to return voluntarily to their homes and properties in dignity and safety, and urge all States to facilitate such return;

66. We affirm that the ethnic, cultural, linguistic and religious identity of minorities, where they exist, must be protected and that persons belonging to such minorities should be treated equally and enjoy their human rights and fundamental freedoms without discrimination of any kind;

67. We recognise that members of certain groups with a distinct cultural identity face barriers arising from a complex interplay of ethnic, religious and other factors, as well as their traditions and customs, and call upon States to ensure that measures, policies and programmes aimed at eradicating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance address the barriers that this interplay of factors creates;

68. We recognise with deep concern the ongoing manifestations of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including violence, against Roma / Gypsies / Sinti / Travellers and recognise the need to develop effective policies and implementation mechanisms for their full achievement of equality;

69. We are convinced that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance reveal themselves in a differentiated manner for women and girls, and can be among the factors leading to a deterioration in their living conditions, poverty, violence, multiple forms of discrimination, and the limitation or denial of their human rights. We recognise the need to integrate a gender perspective into relevant policies, strategies and programmes of action against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in order to address multiple forms of discrimination;

70. We recognise the need to develop a more systematic and consistent approach to evaluating and monitoring racial discrimination against women, as well as the disadvantages, obstacles and difficulties women face in the full exercise and enjoyment of their civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights because of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

71. We deplore attempts to oblige women belonging to certain faiths and religious minorities to forego their cultural and religious identity, or to restrict their legitimate expression, or to discriminate against them with regard to opportunities for education and employment;

72. We note with concern the large number of children and young people, particularly girls, among the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and stress the need to incorporate special measures, in accordance with the principle of the best interests of the child and respect for his or her views, in programmes to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in order to give priority attention to the rights and the situation of children and young people who are victims of these practices;

73. We recognise that a child belonging to an ethnic, religious or linguistic minority or who is indigenous shall not be denied the right, individually or in community with other members of his or her group, to enjoy his or her own culture, to profess and practise his or her own religion, or to use his or her own language;

74. We recognise that child labour is linked to poverty, lack of development and related socio-economic conditions and could in some cases perpetuate poverty and racial discrimination by disproportionately denying children from affected groups the opportunity to acquire the human capabilities needed in productive life and to benefit from economic growth;

75. We note with deep concern the fact that, in many countries, people infected or affected by HIV/AIDS, as well as those who are presumed to be infected, belong to groups vulnerable to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, which has a negative impact and impedes their access to health care and medication;

Measures Of Prevention, Education And Protection Aimed At The Eradication Of Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia And Related Intolerance At The National, Regional And International Levels

76. We recognise that inequitable political, economic, cultural and social conditions can breed and foster racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, which in turn exacerbate the inequity. We believe that genuine equality of opportunity for all, in all spheres, including that for development, is fundamental for the eradication of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

77. We affirm that universal adherence to and full implementation of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination are of paramount importance for promoting equality and non-discrimination in the world;

78. We affirm the solemn commitment of all States to promote universal respect for, and observance and protection of, all human rights, economic, social, cultural, civil and political, including the right to development, as a fundamental factor in the prevention and elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

79. We firmly believe that the obstacles to overcoming racial discrimination and achieving racial equality mainly lie in the lack of political will, weak legislation and lack of implementation strategies and concrete action by States, as well as the prevalence of racist attitudes and negative stereotyping;

80. We firmly believe that education, development and the faithful implementation of all international human rights norms and obligations, including enactment of laws and political, social and economic policies, are crucial to combat racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

81. We recognise that democracy, transparent, responsible, accountable and participatory governance responsive to the needs and aspirations of the people, and respect for human rights, fundamental freedoms and the rule of law are essential for the effective prevention and elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. We reaffirm that any form of impunity for crimes motivated by racist and xenophobic attitudes plays a role in weakening the rule of law and democracy and tends to encourage the recurrence of such acts;

82. We affirm that the Dialogue among Civilisations constitutes a process to attain identification and promotion of common grounds among civilizations, recognition and promotion of the inherent dignity and of the equal rights of all human beings and respect for fundamental principles of justice; in this way, it can dispel notions of cultural superiority based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and facilitate the building of a reconciled world for the human family;

83. We underline the key role that political leaders and political parties can and ought to play in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and encourage political parties to take concrete steps to promote solidarity, tolerance and respect;

84. We condemn the persistence and resurgence of neo-Nazism, neo-Fascism and violent nationalist ideologies based on racial or national prejudice, and state that these phenomena can never be justified in any instance or in any circumstances;

85. We condemn political platforms and organisations based on racism, xenophobia or doctrines of racial superiority and related discrimination, as well as legislation and practices based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as incompatible with democracy and transparent and accountable governance. We reaffirm that racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance condoned by governmental policies violate human rights and may endanger friendly relations among peoples, cooperation among nations and international peace and security;

86. We recall that the dissemination of all ideas based upon racial superiority or hatred shall be declared an offence punishable by law with due regard to the principles embodied in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the rights expressly set forth in article 5 of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

87. We note that article 4, paragraph b, of the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination places an obligation upon States to be vigilant and to proceed against organizations that disseminate ideas based on racial superiority or hatred, acts of violence or incitement to such acts. These organisations shall be condemned and discouraged;

88. We recognise that the media should represent the diversity of a multicultural society and play a role in fighting racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. In this regard we draw attention to the power of advertising;

89. We note with regret that certain media, by promoting false images and negative stereotypes of vulnerable individuals or groups of individuals, particularly of migrants and refugees, have contributed to the spread of xenophobic and racist sentiments among the public and in some cases have encouraged violence by racist individuals and groups;

90. We recognise the positive contribution that the exercise of the right to freedom of expression, particularly by the media and new technologies, including the Internet, and full respect for the freedom to seek, receive and impart information, can make to the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; we reiterate the need to respect the editorial independence and autonomy of the media in this regard;

91. We express deep concern about the use of new information technologies, such as the Internet, for purposes contrary to respect for human values, equality, nondiscrimination, respect for others and tolerance, including to propagate racism, racial hatred, xenophobia, racial discrimination and related intolerance, and that, in particular, children and youth having access to this material could be negatively influenced by it;

92. We also recognise the need to promote the use of new information and communication technologies, including the Internet, to contribute to the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance; new technologies can assist the promotion of tolerance and respect for human dignity, and the principles of equality and non-discrimination;

93. We affirm that all States should recognise the importance of community media that give a voice to victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

94. We reaffirm that the stigmatisation of people of different origins by acts or omissions of public authorities, institutions, the media, political parties or national or local organisations is not only an act of racial discrimination but can also incite the recurrence of such acts, thereby resulting in the creation of a vicious circle which reinforces racist attitudes and prejudices, and which must be condemned;

95. We recognise that education at all levels and all ages, including within the family, in particular human rights education, is a key to changing attitudes and behaviour based on racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and to promoting tolerance and respect for diversity in societies; we further affirm that such education is a determining factor in the promotion, dissemination and protection of the democratic values of justice and equity, which are essential to prevent and combat the spread of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

96. We recognise that quality education, the elimination of illiteracy and access to free primary education for all can contribute to more inclusive societies, equity, stable and harmonious relations and friendship among nations, peoples, groups and individuals, and a culture of peace, fostering mutual understanding, solidarity, social justice and respect for all human rights for all;

97. We underline the links between the right to education and the struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance and the essential role of education, including human rights education and education which is sensitive to and respects cultural diversity, especially amongst children and young people, in the prevention and eradication of all forms of intolerance and discrimination;

Provision Of Effective Remedies, Recourse, Redress, And Compensatory And Other Measures At The National, Regional And International Levels

98. We emphasise the importance and necessity of teaching about the facts and truth of the history of humankind from antiquity to the recent past, as well as of teaching about the facts and truth of the history, causes, nature and consequences of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, with a view to achieving a comprehensive and objective cognisance of the tragedies of the past;

99. We acknowledge and profoundly regret the massive human suffering and the tragic plight of millions of men, women and children caused by slavery, the slave trade, the transatlantic slave trade, apartheid, colonialism and genocide, and call upon States concerned to honour the memory of the victims of past tragedies and affirm that, wherever and whenever these occurred, they must be condemned and their recurrence prevented. We regret that these practices and structures, political, socio-economic and cultural, have led to racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

100. We acknowledge and profoundly regret the untold suffering and evils inflicted on millions of men, women and children as a result of slavery, the slave trade, the transatlantic slave trade, apartheid, genocide and past tragedies. We further note that some States have taken the initiative to apologise and have paid reparation, where appropriate, for grave and massive violations committed;

101. With a view to closing those dark chapters in history and as a means of reconciliation and healing, we invite the international community and its members to honour the memory of the victims of these tragedies. We further note that some have taken the initiative of regretting or expressing remorse or presenting apologies, and call on all those who have not yet contributed to restoring the dignity of the victims to find appropriate ways to do so and, to this end, appreciate those countries that have done so;

102. We are aware of the moral obligation on the part of all concerned States and call upon these States to take appropriate and effective measures to halt and reverse the lasting consequences of those practices;

103. We recognise the consequences of past and contemporary forms of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance as serious challenges to global peace and security, human dignity and the realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms of many people in the world, in particular Africans, people of African descent, people of Asian descent and indigenous peoples;

104. We also strongly reaffirm as a pressing requirement of justice that victims of human rights violations resulting from racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, especially in the light of their vulnerable situation socially, culturally and economically, should be assured of having access to justice, including legal assistance where appropriate, and effective and appropriate protection and remedies, including the right to seek just and adequate reparation or satisfaction for any damage suffered as a result of such discrimination, as enshrined in numerous international and regional human rights instruments, in particular the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

105. Guided by the principles set out in the Millennium Declaration and the recognition that we have a collective responsibility to uphold the principles of human dignity, equality and equity and to ensure that globalisation becomes a positive force for all the world's people, the international community commits itself to working for the beneficial integration of the developing countries into the global economy, resisting their marginalisation, determined to achieve accelerated economic growth and sustainable development and to eradicate poverty, inequality and deprivation;

106. We emphasise that remembering the crimes or wrongs of the past, wherever and whenever they occurred, unequivocally condemning its racist tragedies and telling the truth about history are essential elements for international reconciliation and the creation of societies based on justice, equality and solidarity;

Strategies To Achieve Full And Effective Equality, Including International Cooperation And Enhancement Of The United Nations And Other International Mechanisms In Combating Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia And Related Intolerance

107. We underscore the need to design, promote and implement at the national, regional and international levels strategies, programmes and policies, and adequate legislation, which may include special and positive measures, for furthering equal social development and the realization of the civil and political, economic, social and cultural rights of all victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, including through more effective access to the political, judicial and administrative institutions, as well as the need to promote effective access to justice, as well as to guarantee that the benefits of development, science and technology contribute effectively to the improvement of the quality of life for all, without discrimination;

108. We recognise the necessity for special measures or positive actions for the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in order to promote their full integration into society. Those measures for effective action, including social measures, should aim at correcting the conditions that impair the enjoyment of rights and the introduction of special measures to encourage equal participation of all racial and cultural, linguistic and religious groups in all sectors of society and to bring all onto an equal footing. Those measures should include measures to achieve appropriate representation in educational institutions, housing, political parties, parliaments and employment, especially in the judiciary, police, army and other civil services, which in some cases might involve electoral reforms, land reforms and campaigns for equal participation;

109. We recall the importance of enhancing international cooperation to promote

(a) the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

(b) the effective implementation by States of international treaties and instruments that forbid these practices;

(c) the goals of the Charter of the United Nations in this regard;

(d) the achievement of the goals established by the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development held in Rio de Janeiro in 1992, the World Conference on Human Rights held in Vienna in 1993, the International Conference on Population and Development held in Cairo in 1994, the World Summit for Social Development held in Copenhagen in 1995, the Fourth World Conference on Women held in Beijing in 1995, the United Nations Conference on Human Settlements (Habitat II) held in Istanbul in 1996; and the World Food Summit held in Rome in 1996, making sure that such goals encompass with equity all the victims of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

110. We recognize the importance of cooperation among States, relevant international and regional organizations, the international financial institutions, non-governmental organisations and individuals in the worldwide fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and that success in this fight requires specifically taking into consideration the grievances, opinions and demands of the victims of such discrimination;

111. We reiterate that the international response and policy, including financial assistance, towards refugees and displaced persons in different parts of the world should not be based on discrimination on the grounds of race, colour, descent, or national or ethnic origin of the refugees and displaced persons concerned and, in this context, we urge the international community to provide adequate assistance on an equitable basis to host countries, in particular to host developing countries and countries in transition;

112. We recognise the importance of independent national human rights institutions conforming to the Principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights, annexed to General Assembly resolution 48/134 of 20 December 1993, and other relevant specialized institutions created by law for the promotion and protection of human rights, including ombudsman institutions, in the struggle against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, as well as for the promotion of democratic values and the rule of law. We encourage States, as appropriate, to establish such institutions and call upon the authorities and society in general in those countries where they are performing their tasks of promotion, protection and prevention to cooperate to the maximum extent possible with these institutions, while respecting their independence;

113. We recognise the important role relevant regional bodies, including regional associations of national human rights institutions, can play in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, and the key role they can play in monitoring and raising awareness about intolerance and discrimination at the regional level, and reaffirm support for such bodies where they exist and encourage their establishment;

114. We recognise the paramount role of parliaments in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance in adopting appropriate legislation, overseeing its implementation and allocating the requisite financial resources;

115. We stress the importance of involving social partners and other non-governmental organizations in the design and implementation of training and development programmes;

116. We recognise the fundamental role of civil society in the fight against racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance, in particular in assisting States to develop regulations and strategies, in taking measures and action against such forms of discrimination and through follow-up implementation;

117. We also recognise that promoting greater respect and trust among different groups within society must be a shared but differentiated responsibility of government institutions, political leaders, grass-roots organisations and citizens. We underline that civil society plays an important role in promoting the public interest, especially in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

118. We welcome the catalytic role that non-governmental organisations play in promoting human rights education and raising awareness about racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. They can also play an important role in raising awareness of such issues in the relevant bodies of the United Nations, based upon their national, regional or international experiences. Bearing in mind the difficulties they face, we commit ourselves to creating an atmosphere conducive to the effective functioning of human rights non-governmental organisations, in particular antiracist non-governmental organisations, in combating racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance. We recognise the precarious situation of human rights nongovernmental organisations, including anti-racist non-governmental organisations, in many parts of the world and express our commitment to adhere to our international obligations and to lift any unlawful barriers to their effective functioning;

119. We encourage the full participation of non-governmental organisations in the follow-up to the World Conference;

120. We recognise that international and national exchange and dialogue, and the development of a global network among youth, are important and fundamental elements in building intercultural understanding and respect, and will contribute to the elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

121. We underline the usefulness of involving youth in the development of forward-looking national, regional and international strategies and in policies to fight racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance;

122. We affirm that our global drive for the total elimination of racism, racial discrimination, xenophobia and related intolerance is undertaken, and that the recommendations contained in the Programme of Action are made, in a spirit of solidarity and international cooperation and are inspired by the purposes and principles of the Charter of the United Nations and other relevant international instruments. These recommendations are made with due consideration for the past, the present and the future, and with a constructive and forward-looking approach. We recognize that the formulation and implementation of these strategies, policies, programmes and actions, which should be carried out efficiently and promptly, are the responsibility of all States, with the full involvement of civil society at the national, regional and international levels.

THE AUTHOR

Mohammed, son of Ishaq (Isaac), son of Yasar, was born in Medina about 704 AD (85 AH) and died in Baghdad between 767 and 776 AD (150–159 AH); this means that he was writing the Sira about 100 years after Mohammed's death.

His grandfather Yasar fell into the hands of Khalid b. al-Walid when he captured Aynul-Tamr in 634 AD (12 AH), having been held there as a prisoner by the Persian king. Khalid sent him with a number of prisoners to Abu Bakr at Medina. There he was handed over to Qays b. Makhruma b. al-Muttalib b. Abdu Manaf as a slave, and was manumitted when he accepted Islam. His family adopted the family name of their patrons. His son Ishaq was born about the year 50, his mother being the daughter of another freedman. He and his brother Musa were well-known traditionists, so that our author's path in life was prepared before he reached manhood.

He associated with the second generation of traditionists, notably al-Zuhri, Asim b. Umar b. Qatada, and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr. He must have devoted himself to the study of apostolic tradition from his youth, for at the age of thirty he went to Egypt to attend the lectures of Yazid b. Abu Habib. There he was regarded as an authority, for this same Yazid afterwards related traditions on Ibn Ishaq's authority. On his return to Medina he went on with the collection and arrangement of the material he had collected. Al-Zuhri, who was in Medina in 745 (123), is reported to have said that Medina would never lack ilm as long as Ibn Ishaq was there, and he eagerly gathered from him the details of the prophet's wars. Unfortunately Ibn Ishaq excited the enmity of Malik b. Anas, for whose work he showed his contempt, and it was not long before his own writings and his orthodoxy were called in question. Probably it was our author's lost book of Sunan which excited Malik's ire, for it would have been in the field of law based on the practice of the prophet that differences would be most keenly felt. He was accused of being a Qadari and a Shi'i. Another man attacked his veracity: he often quoted Fatima, the wife of Hisham b. Urwa, as the authority for some of his traditions. The husband was annoyed and denied that he had ever met his wife; but as she was nearly forty years Ibn Ishaq's senior it is easily credible that they often met without occasioning gossip. It is not known whether Ibn Ishaq was compelled to leave Medina or whether he went away voluntarily. Obviously he could not have the same standing in a place that housed his chief informants as he would hold elsewhere, and so he left for the east, stopping in Kufa, al-Jazira on the Tigris, and Ray, finally settling in Baghdad. While Mansur was at Hashimiya he attached himself to his following and presented him with a copy of his work doubtless in the hope of a grant from the caliph. Thence he moved to Ray and then to the new capital of the empire. He died between 767 and 776 AD (150–159 AH); and was buried in the cemetery of Hayzurana.

THE SIRA

Its precursors

It is certain that Ibn Ishaq's biography of the prophet had no serious rival; but it was preceded by several maghazi books. We do not know when they were first written, though we have the names of several first-century worthies who had written notes and passed on their knowledge to the rising generation. The first of these was Aban the son of the caliph Uthman.

He was born in c. 642 AD (20 AH) and took part in the campaign of Talha and Zubayr against his father's slayers. He died about 730 AD (100 AH). The language used by al-Waqidi in reference to Ibn al-Mughira, 'he had nothing written down about hadith except the prophet's maghazis which he had acquired from Aban', certainly implies, though it does not demand, that Ibn al-Mughira wrote down what Aban told him. It is strange that neither Ibn Ishaq nor al-Waqidi should have cited this man who must have had inside knowledge of many matters that were not known to the public; possibly as a follower of Ali he preferred to ignore the son of the man the Aliids regarded as a usurper. However, his name often appears in the isnads of the canonical collections of hadith. (The man named in Tabari 2340 and I.S. iv 29 is Aban b. Uthman al-Bajali who seems to have written a book on maghazi.) (Notice: a maghazi or al-maghazi is a genre of prophetic biography in Islamic literature, usually in form of a small book or a set of essays. An isnad or sanad is a kind of hadith text; it bases a tradition on its first authority and traces an ascription in ascending order.)

A man of much greater importance was Urwa b. al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam (23-94), a cousin of the prophet. Urwa's mother was Abu Bakr's daughter Asma. He and his brother Abdullah were in close contact with the prophet's widow Aisha. He was a recognised authority on the early history of Islam, and the Umayyad caliph Abdul-Malik applied to him when he needed information on that subject. Again, it is uncertain whether he wrote a book, but the many traditions that are handed down in his name by Ibn Ishaq and other writers justify the assertion that he was the founder of Islamic history. Though he is the earliest writer whose notes have come down to us, I have not translated the passages from Jab. which reproduce them because they do not seem to add anything of importance to the Sira. They form part of a letter which Urwa wrote to Abdul-Malik who wanted to have accurate knowledge about the prophet's career. Much of his material rests on the statements of his aunt Aisha.

Like Ibn Ishaq he was given to inserting poetry in his traditions and justified the habit by the example of Aisha who uttered verses on every subject that presented itself. He was a friend of the erotic poet Umar b. Rabla, but thought very little of the prophet's poet Hassan b. Thabit.

Of Shurahbil b. Sad, a freedman, presumably of South Arabian origin, little is known beyond the fact that he wrote a maghazi book. Ibn Ishaq would have none of him, and he is seldom quoted by other writers.

He died in 123, and as he is said to have known Ali he must have died a centenarian. He reported traditions from some of the prophet's companions, and Musa (Moses) b. Uqba records that he wrote lists of the names of the emigrants and the combatants at Badr and Uhud. In his old age he was discredited because he blackmailed his visitors: if they did not give him anything he would say that their fathers were not present at Badr! Poverty and extreme age made him cantankerous. The victims of his spleen doubted his veracity, though those best qualified to judge regarded him as an authority.

Another important Tabi was Wahb b. Munabbih (656-732 AD / 34-110 AH), a Yamanite of Persian origin. His father probably was a Jew. He is notorious for his interest in, and knowledge of, Jewish and Christian scriptures and traditions; and though much that was invented later was fathered on him, his K. al-Mubtada lies behind the Muslim version of the lives of the prophets and other biblical stories. With his books on the legendary history of the Yaman, on aphorisms, on free will, and other matters preserved in part in Ibn Hisham's (died 833 AD) K. al-Tijdn we are not concerned; but the statement of Hajji Khalifa that he collected the maghazi is now confirmed by the discovery of a fragment of the lost work on papyrus written in 850 AD (228 AH). Unfortunately this fragment tells us little that is new; nevertheless, its importance is great because it proves that at the end of the first century, or some years before 722 AD (100 AH), the main facts about the prophet's life were written down much as we have them in the later works. Further it shows that, like the other early traditionists, he had little or no use for isnads. Miss Gertrud Melamede has compared the account of the meeting at Aqaba (cf. i. H. 288, 293, 299) with the literature on the subject and her criticism, literary and historical, leads her to some important conclusions which do not concern us here. An interesting detail is that Mohammed speaking to Abbas calls Aus and Khazraj 'my and your maternal uncles'. Abbas throughout runs with the hare and hunts with the hounds.

A little later comes Asim b. Umar b. Qatada al-Ansari (d. c. 120). He lectured in Damascus on the campaigns of the prophet and the exploits of his companions and seems to have committed his lectures to writing. He too is quite inconsistent in naming his authorities: sometimes he gives an isnad, more often he does not. He returned to Medina to continue his work, and Ibn Ishaq attended his lectures there. Occasionally he inserted verses in his narrative, and sometimes gave his own opinion.

Mohammed b. Muslim . . . b. Shihab al-Zuhri (51-124) was a member of a distinguished Meccan family. He attached himself to Abdul-Malik, Hisham, and Yazid, and wrote down some traditions for his princely pupils. He was the forerunner of the later traditionists in that he took extraordinary pains to interrogate people, young and old of both sexes, who might possess knowledge of the past. He left a history of his own family and a book of maghazi. Most of his traditional lore survived in the notes of his lectures that his pupils wrote down quoting his authority for the traditions they record. He spent some years in Medina as a young man. Ibn Ishaq met him when he came south on pilgrimage and he is often named as an authority in the Sira. He was the most important traditionist of his generation, and his influence is to be seen in all collections of canonical hadith. (See further J. Horowitz, Islamic Culture, ii. 33 ff.) Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm (d. 130 or 135) was one of Ibn Ishaq's most important informants. His father had been ordered by Umar b. Abdul-Aziz to write a collection of prophetic hadith, especially what Amra d. Abdul-Rahman said. This latter was a friend of Aisha and she was the aunt of this Abu Bakr. Already in the time of his son Abdullah these writings had been lost. Though we have no record of a book by Abdullah, its substance probably once existed in the maghazi of his nephew Abdul-Malik. As one would expect, the isnad is a matter of indifference to Abdullah: he stood too near the events among many who knew of them to need to cite his authorities. Tabari (i. 1837) contains an interesting note on how Ibn Ishaq got his information. Abdullah told his wife Fatima to tell him what he knew on Amra's authority.

Abul-Aswad Mohammed b. Abdul-Rahman b. Naufal (d. 131 or 137) left a maghazi book which sticks closely to Urwa's tradition. Contemporary with our author in the third generation was Musa b. Uqba (c. 55-141), a freedman of the family of al-Zubayr. A fragment of his work has survived and was published by Sachau in 1904. As it once rivalled Ibn Ishaq's work and is one of our earliest witnesses to the Sira I have given a translation of the extant traditions. Although Malik b. Anas, al-Shaffi, and Ahmad b. Hanbal—an impressive trio—asserted that his book was the most important and trustworthy of all, posterity evidently did not share their opinion or more of his work would have survived.

Ibn Ishaq never mentions him. One cannot escape the conviction that petty professional jealousy was as rife in those days as now, and that scholars deliberately refrained from giving their predecessors credit for their achievements. Musa leaned heavily on al-Zuhri. He seems to have carried farther the process of idealizing the prophet. He is freely quoted by al-Waqidi, Ibn Sad, al-Baladhuri, Tabari, and Ibn Sayyidul-Nas. He gave lists of those who went to Abyssinia and fought at Badr. The latter Malik regarded as authoritative. He generally gives an isnad, though it is not always clear whether he is relying on a written or an oral source. Once at least he refers to a mass of records left by Ibn Abbas (I.S. v. 216). Occasionally he quotes poems.

Apart from the fragment of Wahb b. Munabbih's maghazi the Berlin Manuscript, if it is authentic, is the oldest piece of historical literature in Arabic in existence, and if only for that reason deserves more than a passing notice here. It is of importance also because it carries back some of the traditions in Bukhari (d. 256) more than a century.

Other maghazi works were produced in Iraq, Syria, and the Yaman (Yemen) during the second century, but none of them is likely to have influenced Ibn Ishaq and they can safely be disregarded. What is of significance is the great interest in the life of the prophet that was shown everywhere during this century. But no book known to the Arabs or to us can compare in comprehensiveness, arrangement, or systematic treatment, with Ibn Ishaq's work which will now be discussed.

The Sira

The titles The Book of Campaigns or The Book of Campaigns and (the prophet's) Biography or The Book of the Biography and the Beginning and the Campaigns are all to be met with in the citations of Arabic authors.

Al-Bakkai, a pupil of Ibn Ishaq, made two copies of the whole book, one of which must have reached Ibn Hisham (d. 218) whose text, abbreviated, annotated, and sometimes altered, is the main source of our knowledge of the original work. A good deal more of it can be recovered from other sources. The principles underlying Ibn Hisham's revision are set out in his Introduction. Sachau suggests that the copy used by Tabari was made when Ibn Ishaq was in Ray by Salama b. Fadl al-Abrash al-Ansari, because Tabari quotes Ibn Ishaq according to Ibn Fadl's riwaya. A third copy was made by Yunus b. Bukayr in Ray.

This was used by Ibn al-Athir in his Usudul-Ghaba. A copy of part of this recension exists in the Qarawiyyin mosque at Fez. The text which contains some important additions to the received text, I hope to publish shortly. A fourth copy was that of the Syrian Harun b. Abu Isa. These last two copies were used by Ibn Sad. Lastly the Fihrist mentions the edition of al-Nufayli (d. 234).

It must not be supposed that the book ever existed in three separate parts: ancient legends, Mohammed's early life and mission and his wars. These are simply sections of the book which contained Ibn Ishaq's lectures. For the Mubtada (Mabda) we must go to Tabari's Tafsir and History. The first quotation from it in the latter runs thus: Ibn Hamid said Salama b. al-Fadl told us that Ibn Ishaq said: "The first thing that God created was light and darkness. Then He separated them and made the darkness night, black exceeding dark; and He made the light day, bright and luminous."

From this it is clear that 'Genesis' is the meaning of the title of the first section of the book. Ibn Hisham skipped all the intervening pages and began with Abraham, the presumed ancestor of Mohammed. Al-Azraqi quotes some passages from the missing section in his Akhbar Mecca and a few extracts are given by al-Mutahhar b. Tahir.

The Mubtada in so far as it lies outside Ibn Hisham's recension is not our concern, though it is to be hoped that one day a scholar will collect and publish a text of it from the sources that survive so that Ibn Ishaq's work can be read in its entirety as its importance warrants. In this section Ibn Ishaq relied on Jewish and Christian informants and on the book of Abu Abdullah Wahb b. Munabbih (34-110 or 114) known as K. al-Mubtada and also al-Israiliyyat of which the original title was Qisasul-Anbiya. To him he owed the history of the past from Adam to Jesus and also the South Arabian legends, some of which Ibn Hisham has retained. This man also wrote a maghazi book, and a fragment of it has survived. Ibn Ishaq cites him by name only once.

It is natural that a book about Mohammed, 'the seal of the prophets', should give an account of the history of the early prophets, but the history, or legends, of South Arabia demand another explanation. As Goldziher showed long ago, it was in the second half of the first century that the antagonism of north and south, i.e. (the) Quraysh (Notice: the Quraysh and other tribes and clans are in Ibn Ishaq's Sira usually named without the article 'the') and the Ansar of Medina, first showed itself in literature. The Ansar, proud of their southern origin and of their support of the prophet when the Quraysh rejected him, smarted under the injustice of their rulers and the northerner's claim to superiority. One of the ways in which their resentment manifested itself was in the glorification of Himyar's great past. Ibn Ishaq as a loyal son of Medina shared the feelings of his patrons and recounted the achievements of their forefathers, and Ibn Hisham, himself of southern descent, retained in the Sira as much of the original work as he thought desirable. To this accident that Ibn Hisham was a Himyari we owe the extracts from stories of the old South Arabian kings. Ibn Hisham devoted a separate book to the subject, the K. al-Tijan li-marifatil muluki l-zaman (fi akhbari Qahtan).

The second section of the book which is often called al-Mabath begins with the birth of the prophet and ends when the first fighting from his base in Medina takes place. The impression one gets from this section is of hazy memories; the stories have lost their freshness and have nothing of that vivid and sometimes dramatic detail which make the maghazi stories—especially in al-Waqidi—so full of interest and excitement. Thus while the Medinan period is well documented, and events there are chronologically arranged, no such accuracy, indeed no such attempt at it, can be claimed for the Meccan period. We do not know Mohammed's age when he first came forth publicly as a religious reformer: some say he was forty, others say forty-five; we do not know his precise relation to the Banu Najjar; the poverty of his childhood ill fits the assertion that he belonged to the principal family in Mecca. The story of those years is filled out with legends and stories of miraculous events which inevitably undermine the modern reader's confidence in the history of this period as a whole. In this section particularly, though not exclusively, Ibn Ishaq writes historical introductions to his paragraphs. A good example is his foreword to the account of the persecution the prophet endured at the hands of the Meccans: 'When the Quraysh became distressed by the trouble caused by the enmity between them and the apostle and those of their people who accepted his teaching, they stirred up against him foolish fellows who called him a liar, insulted him, and accused him of being a poet, a sorcerer, a diviner, and of being possessed. However the apostle continued to proclaim what God had ordered him to proclaim, concealing nothing, and exciting their dislike by contemning their religion, forsaking their idols, and leaving them to their unbelief'. This is not a statement resting on tradition, but a concise summary of the circumstances that are plainly indicated by certain passages of the Koran which deal with this period. Of the Maghdzi history little need be said. For the most part the stories rest on the account of eyewitnesses and have every right to be regarded as trustworthy.

Characteristics

The opinions of Muslim critics on Ibn Ishaq's trustworthiness deserve a special paragraph; but here something may be said of the author's caution and his fairness. A word that very frequently precedes a statement is zaAma or zaAmu, 'he (they) alleged'. It carries with it more than a hint that the statement may not be true, though on the other hand it may be sound. Thus there are fourteen or more occurrences of the caveat from p. 87 to 148 alone, besides a frequent note that only God knows whether a particular statement is true or not. Another indication of reserve if not scepticism underlies the expression fi ma dhukira li, as in the story of the jinn who listened to Mohammed as he prayed; Mohammed's order to Umar to kill Suwayd; one of Gabriel's visits to Mohammed; the reward of two martyrs to the man killed by a woman. An expression of similar import is fi ma balaghani?

Very seldom does Ibn Ishaq make any comment of his own on the traditions he records apart from the mental reservation implied in these terms. Therefore when he does express an opinion it is the more significant.

In his account of the night journey to Jerusalem and the ascent into heaven he allows us to see the working of his mind. The story is everywhere hedged with reservations and terms suggesting caution to the reader. He begins with a tale which he says has reached him (balaghani) from several narrators and he has pieced them together from the stories these people heard (dhukira). The whole subject is a searching test of men's faith in which those endowed with intelligence are specially concerned. It was certainly an act of God, but exactly what happened we do not know. This opinion of his is most delicately and skilfully expressed in the words kayfa shaa, 'how God wished to show him'. Ibn Masud's words are prefaced by fi ma balaghani anhu. There is nothing in the story to indicate that it is a vision. Al-Hasan's version is much more definite, for he asserts that when Mohammed returned to Mecca he told the Quraysh that he had been to Jerusalem and back during the night and that this so strained the credulity of some of the Muslims that they gave up their faith in his revelations although he was able to give an accurate description of Jerusalem.

It is therefore most surprising that al-Hasan should end his story by quoting Sura 13.62 'We made the vision which we showed thee only for a test to men' in this context. The whole point of al-Hasan's story is thereby undermined, for if the experience was visionary, then there was nothing at all incredible about it. Then follows Aisha's statement, reported by one of her father's family, that it was only the apostle's spirit that was transported; his body remained where it was in Mecca. Another tradition by Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan bears the same meaning. The fact that he had been asked whether it was a physical or a dream journey shows that the subject was debated before Ibn Ishaq's day. Here Ibn Ishaq makes a profound observation which in effect means that it was immaterial whether the experience was real or visionary because it came from God; and just as Abraham made every preparation to slay his son Isaac in consequence of what he had seen in a dream because he recognised no difference between a divine command given at night during sleep and an order given by day when he was awake, so the apostle's vision was just as real as if it had been an actual physical experience. Only God knows what happened, but the apostle did see what he said he saw and whether he was awake or asleep the result is the same.

The description of Abraham, Moses, and Jesus which purports to quote Mohammed's words is prefaced by zaAmal-Zuhri, not, as often, by the ordinary term haddathani. Now as al-Zuhri and Ibn Ishaq knew each other well and must have met quite often, we must undoubtedly infer from the fact that Ibn Ishaq deliberately substituted the verb of suspicion for the ordinary term used in traditional matters that he means us to take this tradition with a grain of salt.

It is a pity that the excellent impression that one gets of the author's intelligence and religious perception should be marred by the concluding paragraph on this subject of the ascent into heaven which incidentally has had far-reaching results on European literature through the Divine Comedy. It rules out absolutely any but a physical experience and ought to have been recorded with its cautionary note before Ibn Ishaq made his own observations. Possibly the reason for its being out of place is that it is an excerpt from his lecture notes; but whatever the explanation, it mars the effect of his statement of the evidence.

The phrase 'God knows best' speaks for itself and needs no comment. It is sometimes used when the author records two conflicting traditions and is unable to say which is correct. Another indication of the author's scrupulousness is the phrase 'God preserve me from attributing to the apostle words which he did not use'. His report of Mohammed's first public address at Medina and his order to each of his companions to adopt another as a brother are prefixed by these words and hedged by fi ma balaghani.

The author does not often give us rival versions of traditions from Medina and Mecca; thus the account of Umar's conversion is interesting. It illustrates the thoroughness of our author in his search for information about the early days of the prophet's ministry. The first account he says is based on what the traditionists of Medina said: Umar was brutal to his sister and brother-in-law who had accepted Islam, but feeling some remorse when he saw blood on her face from the violent blow he had dealt her, and impressed by her constancy, he demanded the leaf of the Koran thairshe was reading. Having read it he at once accepted it as inspired and went to the prophet to proclaim his allegiance.

The Meccan, Abdullah b. Abu Najih, on the authority of two named companions or an anonymous narrator, gives another version in Umar's own words to the effect that his conversion was due to his hearing the prophet recite the Koran while praying at the Kaaba one night. In both narratives it was the Koran which caused his conversion. In the first version Umar was affected by the bearing of his sister and secured a part of the Koran to read himself; in the second he was affected by the private devotions of the prophet. The first story is prefixed by fi ma balaghani, but this is cancelled as it were by the express statement that it was the current belief of the people of Medina. Ibn Ishaq concludes by saying that only God knows what really happened.

A rather difficult problem in literary and historical criticism is posed by the rival traditions collected by the indefatigable Tabari from two of Ibn Ishaq's pupils, Yunus b. Bukayr and Salama b. al-Fadi, the latter supported by another pupil of Ibn Ishaq named Ali b. Mujahid. The first had attended his lectures in Kufa; the other two his lectures at Ray. All three claim that they transmit what Ibn Ishaq told them on the authority of a certain Afif. I do not know of a parallel in Ibn Ishaq's work to a contradiction resting on the authority of the same original narrator. Different traditions from different rawis from different sources are to be expected in any history; but here the same man is introduced as the authority for conflicting traditions such as are to be found in the later hadith collections.

The first tradition is suspect because it requires us to believe that from the earliest days of his ministry before he had any following apart from a wife and a young nephew Mohammed prophesied the Arab conquest of the (Eastern) Roman and Persian empires in the Near East. Nothing in his life gives the slightest support to this claim, though it was to be made good soon after his death.

The second contains no reference to later conquests and may be trustworthy. It definitely fixes the scene at Mina, which is about three miles distant from Mecca. The first account suggests, though it does not assert, that the prophet was in Mecca, as he turned to face the Kaaba when he prayed. Would he have done this had he been in Mina? Would he not rather have turned in the direction of Jerusalem, his first qibla? Ibn Ishaq expressly affirms elsewhere that while he was in Mecca Mohammed when praying turned his face towards Syria. The second account says nothing about the direction of his prayer. On the whole, then, the second tradition as transmitted by Salama must be given the preference.

It is quite easy to see why Ibn Hisham a century later omitted both traditions; they were offensive to the ruling house of Abbas as they drew attention to an unhappy past which the rulers, now champions of orthodoxy, would fain have forgotten. But why did Ibn Ishaq report them both, if in fact he did?

On the whole it seems most reasonable to suppose that he first dictated the tradition which Yunus heard in Kufa, notorious for its attachment to the Alid party, and that he afterwards dropped it and substituted the second version which Salama heard in Ray some years later before he went on to Baghdad. Tabari with his usual thoroughness reported both traditions. The only alternative is to suppose that the reference to the conquests is an interpolation.

There is a subtle difference between these two variants which ought not to be overlooked. At first sight it would seem to be a mere detail that in the first tradition Afif wished that he had been the third to pray the Muslim prayer. Now there were already three—Mohammed, Khadija, and Ali. In the second tradition he wished that he had been the fourth. If this latter is the original form of the tradition it means simply that he wished that he had been the first man outside the prophet's family circle to accept Islam. But the first tradition means more than this: by eliminating, as it were, Mohammed himself from the trio it means that Ali was the second human being and the first male to accept Islam and to stand with Khadija at the head of all Muslims in the order of priority. This has always been the claims of the ShiA and to this day the priority of Ali in this respect is hotly disputed.

Intrinsically as we have argued, the second tradition has the better claim to authenticity. If that is admitted it follows that either Ibn Ishaq or his ratal adapted it in the interest of the Alid cause. In view of the accusation of partiality towards the ShiA which was levelled against Ibn Ishaq it seems probable that he himself gave a subtle twist to the tradition that had come down to him from Afif, and afterwards played for safety.

As one would expect of a book which was written in the eighth century about a great religious reformer, miracles are accepted as a matter of course. It does not matter if a person's alleged power to work miracles makes his early sufferings and failures unintelligible, nor does it matter if the person concerned expressly disclaimed all such powers apart from the recitation of the Koran itself.

The Near East has produced an enormous number of books on the miracles of saints and holy men and it would be strange indeed if Islam had not followed in the footsteps of its predecessors in glorifying the achievements of its great leader at the expense of his human greatness. Here we are concerned simply with the literary form of such stories, the authorities that are quoted for them, and the way in which our author deals with them. To mention a few: the prophet summoned a tree to him and it stood before him. He told it to go back again and back it went. It is interesting to notice that the person for whose benefit this miracle was wrought regarded it as sorcery. The author's father, Ishaq b. Yasar, is responsible for the tale. Another tradition from Amr b. Ubayd, who claimed to have had it from Jabir b. Abdullah via al-Hasan, is merely a midrash composed to explain Sura 5.14 where it is said that God kept the hands of Mohammed's enemies from doing him violence. The story of the throne of God shaking when the doors of heaven were opened to receive Sad shows how these stories grew in the telling. Muadh b. Rifaa al-Zuraqi reported on the authority of 'Anyone you like among my clan' that when Sad died Gabriel visited the prophet and asked him who it was that had caused such commotion in heaven, whereupon Mohammed, knowing that it must be Sa'd, hurried off at once to find that he had died.

However, more was said on the subject: Abdullah b. Abu Bakr from Amra d. Abdul-Rahman reported that Aisha met Sad's cousin outside Mecca and asked him why he did not show more grief for one whose arrival had shaken the very throne of God. An anonymous informant claimed to have heard from al-Hasan al-Basri that the pallbearers found the corpse of this fat, heavy man unexpectedly light, and the prophet told them that there were other unseen bearers taking the weight with them; and again it is repeated that the throne shook. Suhayli has a fairly long passage on the tradition which goes to show that serious minded men did not like this story at all. Some scholars tried to whittle away the meaning by suggesting that the shaking of the throne was a metaphor for the joy in heaven at Sad's arrival: others claimed that the angelic bearers of the throne were meant. But Suhayli will have none of this. The throne is a treated object and so it can move. Therefore none has the right to depart from the plain meaning of the words. Moreover, the tradition is authentic while traditions like that of al-Barra to the effect that it was Sad's bed that shook are rightly ignored by the learned. He goes on to point out that al-Bukhari accepted the tradition not only on the authority of Jabir but also on the report of a number of other companions of the prophet—a further indication of the snowball growth of the legend. S. finds it most surprising that Malik rejected the hadith and he adds naively from the point of view of later generations that Malik would not have it mentioned despite the soundness of its transmission and the multitude of narrators, and he adds that it may be that Malik did not regard the tradition as sound!

The passage is instructive in that it shows how far Ibn Ishaq could go in the face of one of the most learned of his contemporaries in Medina. Posterity has sided with Ibn Ishaq on this matter, but Malik clearly had many on his side at the time, men who would not take at its face value a story which they could not reject out of hand, as he did, with the weight of contemporary opinion behind it.

Another feature that stands out clearly from time to time is the insertion of popular stories on the Goldilocks model. For the sake of the reader I have rendered these stories in accord with modern usage, as the repetition of the same words and the same answer again and again is intolerable to the modern adult. Such stories are the stock-in-trade of the Arabian qass and the storyteller all the world over and invariably lead up to the climax which it is the speaker's intention to withhold until he has his audience on tiptoe. A good example of such stories is the narrative of Mohammed's arrival in Medina and the invitation of one clan after another, always declined with the same words.

After giving due weight to the pressure of hagiology on the writer and his leaning towards the Shi'a one must, I think, affirm that the life of Mohammed is recorded with honesty and truthfulness and, too, an impartiality which is rare in such writings. Who can read the story of al-Zabir, who was given his life, family, and belongings but did not want to live when the best men of his people had been slain, without admitting that here we have a true account of what actually happened? Similarly who but an impartial historian would have included verses in which the noble generous character of the Jews of the Hijaz was lauded and lamented? The scepticism of earlier writers seems to me excessive and unjustified. We have only to compare later Lives of Mohammed to see the difference between the historical and the ideal Mohammed.

The Poetry

Doubts and misgivings about the authenticity of the poems in the Sira are expressed so often by Ibn Hisham that no reference to them need be given here. Nevertheless, one should be on one's guard against the tendency to condemn all the poetry out of hand. What Ibn Hisham says about the poetry of those who took part in the battle of Badr, whether or not it includes the verses of Hassan b. Thabit, namely 'These verses (of Abu Usama) are the most authentic of those (attributed to) the men of Badr (p. 534), casts grave doubt on the authenticity of a large section of the poetry of the Sira. Nevertheless Ibn Ishaq is not to be blamed for the inclusion of much that is undoubtedly spurious without a thorough investigation which has not yet been undertaken. The poems he cites on pp. 284 and 728 he got from Asim b. Qatada, while those on pp. 590, 789, and 793 come from Abdullah b. Abu Bakr. We know, too, that Musa b. Uqba cited verses.

An early critic of poetry, al-Jumahi (d. 231), though perhaps rather one-sided and ill balanced in his judgement on 1.1., makes some observations which cannot fail to carry conviction. He says: 'Mohammed b. Ishaq was one of those who did harm to poetry and corrupted it and passed on all sorts of rubbish. He was one of those learned in the biography of the prophet and people quoted poems on his authority. He used to excuse himself by saying that he knew nothing about poetry and that he merely passed on what was communicated to him. But that was no excuse, for he wrote down in the Sira poems ascribed to men who had never uttered a line of verse and of women too. He even went to the length of including poems of Ad and Thamud! Could he not have asked himself who had handed on these verses for thousands of years when God said: "He destroyed the first Ad and Thamud and left none remaining while of Ad he said "Can you see anything remaining of them?" and "Only God knows Ad and Thamud and those who came after them." Some of these poems are quoted by Tabari.

Ibn al-Nadim goes farther by suggesting that Ibn Ishaq was party to the fraud: the verses were composed for him, and when he was asked to include them in his book he did so and brought himself into ill repute with the rhapsodists.

Occasionally Ibn Ishaq says who the authority for the poetry was. Obviously at this date criticism of the poetry of the Sira can be based only on historical and perhaps in a lesser degree on literary and stylistic grounds. Some of the poetry dealing with raids and skirmishes, tribal boasting, and elegies seems to come from contemporary sources, and no reasonable person would deny that poetic contests between Meccan and Medinan poets really took place: everything we know of ancient Arab society would require us to look for such effusions. As Horowitz pointed out, in pre-Islamic poetry these poetical contests are frequent, and it might be added that in early Hebrew history verses are frequently inserted in the narratives and often put into the mouths of the heroes of the hour.

Thus, apart from those poems which undoubtedly were called forth by the events they commemorated, poetry was an integral part of a racial convention which no writer of history could afford to ignore. Probably if all the poetry which Ibn Ishaq included in the Sira had reached that standard of excellence which his readers were accustomed to expect, none of these charges would have been levelled against him. But when he included verses which were palpably banal, and were at the same time untrue to circumstance, uninspired and trivial, as many undoubtedly are, the developed aesthetic sense of the Arabs which is most delicate where poetry is concerned rejected what he wrote. As ar-Jumahi said, he brought poetry itself into disrepute by the balderdash he admitted into his otherwise excellent work. And it did not improve matters that much that was good was mingled with more that was bad. It is more than likely that Ibn Ishaq himself was conscious that all was not well with this poetry, for the general practice of writers is to put the verse into the narrative at the crucial moment (as Ibn Ishaq at times does), whereas after the prose account of Badr and Uhud he lumps together a whole collection of verse by various 'poets'. It is as though he were silently saying 'This is what has been handed on to me. I know nothing about poetry and you must make your own anthology.' Even so, whatever his shortcomings were, it is only fair to bear in mind that Ibn Hisham often inserts a note to the effect that the text before him contains lines or words which have not Ibn Ishaq's authority.

The subject is one that calls for detailed and careful literary criticism. The history of the clichés, similes, and metaphors needs investigation by a scholar thoroughly grounded in the poetry of the pre-Islamic and Umayyad eras. Until this preliminary work has been successfully accomplished it would be premature to pass judgement on the poetry of the Sira as a whole. Ancient poetry has suffered greatly at the hands of forgers, plagiarists, and philologists, and the diwans of later poets have not escaped the dishonest rawi Hassan b. Thabit, the prophet's own poet, has many poems to his name which he would be astounded to hear, and there are comparatively few poets of whom it could be said that the diwans bearing their names contained nothing for which they were not responsible.

Since these words were written two theses have been written in the University of London: the first by Dr. M. A. Azzam deals with the style, language, and authenticity of the poetry contained in the Sira; the second by Dr. W. Arafat with the Divan of Hassan b. Thabit. A brief summary of their findings will not be out of place here.

Between the period covered by the Sira and the editing of the book itself loom the two tragedies of Karbala, when al-Husayn and his followers were slain in 61, and the sack of Medina in a.h. 63 when some ten thousand of the Ansar including no less than eighty of the prophet's companions are said to have been put to death. Much of the poetry of the Sira was meant to be read against the background of those tragedies. Its aim is to set forth the claims of the Ansar to prominence in Islam not only as men who supported the prophet when the Quraysh opposed him, but as men descended from kings. The prophet was the grandson of Abdul-Muttalib, who was the son of Hashim and a woman of the B. al-Najjar, and so of Yaman stock. 'Your mother was of the pure stock of Khuzaa. . . . To the heroes of Saba her line goes back', says the poet in his elegy on Abdul-Muttalib. Apart from their great service to the prophet in giving him a home when (the) Quraysh cast him out, the Ansar long before had been partners with (the) Quraysh, for was it not Rizah, the half-brother of Qusayy, who came to the aid of the ancestors of (the) Quraysh from the Yaman (Yemenite)? Had it not been for the Ansar there would have been no Islam: had it not been for their ancestors, the poet implies, (the) Quraysh would not have been established in Mecca.

On p. 18 there is thinly disguised Ansari-Shi'a propaganda: 'The one you killed was the best of us. The one who lived is lord over us and all of you are lords' would be recognised by many as a reference to the killing of al-Husayn and the 'lords' would be the Umayyads. The account of the Tubba's march against Mecca and his great respect for its sanctity stands in clear contrast with the treatment it received from the Umayyads when al-Hajjaj bombarded it. After a careful study of the language and style of this verse Dr. Azzam comes to the conclusion that comparatively little of it dates from the time of the prophet.

Dr. Arafat comes to much the same conclusion with regard to the verse attributed to Hassan. A few of the outstanding arguments will be given here. He finds that the eulogy on the Ansar (p. 893) which is attributed to Kab b. Zuhayr is in the same rhyme and metre as the poem of al-Akhtal which was written at the instigation of Yazid. There we find the words 'Baseness is under the turbans of the Ansar'. A careful comparison of the relevant passages in the two poems shows that the one in the Sira is the answer to the one in the Aghani.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr is reported to have said: 'The Ansar were respected and feared until the battle of Harra; afterwards people were emboldened to attack them and they occupied a lowly place.' It is in these circumstances, not those of the prophet's companions daily increasing in power and prestige, that we must look for the background of 'You will find that none ill uses or abuses us but a base fellow who has gone astray' (p. 626).

On p. 474 a poem which Ibn Hisham attributes to Hassan's son, Abdul-Rahman, obviously dates from a later generation: 'My people are those who sheltered the prophet and believed in him when the people of the land were unbelievers except for choice souls who were forerunners of righteous men and who were helpers with the helpers.' What can this mean but that someone is speaking of the past services of his people to the prophet? Further, it is strange language to impute to Hassan. It was he who called the newcomers vagrants jaldbib and regarded them as an unmitigated nuisance. He did not house any of the muhajirin, nor was he a 'brother' to one of them. A still clearer reference to a former generation is to be found on p. 927 (again Ibn Hisham attributed it to Abdul-Rahman) which says: 'Those people were the prophet's helpers and they are my people; to them I come when I relate my descent.'

Dr. Arafat notes that in the Sira there are seventy-eight poems attributed to Hassan; the authenticity of fifteen of them is questioned or denied outright. The text of the poem on p. 738 in its rival forms illustrates the way in which verses attributed to Hassan were interpolated and additional verses fabricated. Here Tabari gives only the first five verses; the Diwan interpolates two verses after the first line and adds two at the end. On the other hand, the last three verses in the Sira are not to be found in either of the other authorities. In the Aghani the poem is still longer and according to the riwaya of Musab but without al-Zuhri's authority. The facts which emerge from a study of the circumstances which surround this poem are:

1. Hassan resented the growing numbers and influence of the Muslim refugees.

2. After the attack on B. al-Mustaliq a quarrel arose between the Meccans and Medinans about the use of a well. Abdullah b. Ubayy said: 'They rival our numbers kathara;' he called them jalabib and threatened that when they got back to Medina the stronger aazz would drive out the weaker. The words italicised are the very words used by Hassan in this poem. From this it is clear that Hassan is expressing not only his own opinion about the Muslims but that of Abdullah b. Ubayy and his party.

3. It was during this journey that the scandal about Aisha arose.

4. Safwan struck Hassan with his sword. According to the introduction to the poem in the Diwan Safwan attacked Hassan because he had accused him of spending the night with Aisha. But in the Aghani Safwan wounded Hassan at the instigation of the prophet because his house was the centre of disaffection against the Muslims. The other explanation of the attack on Hassan is added in al-Aghani as an afterthought. However, there is no reason why both versions should not be correct. Hassan's most dangerous offence was his complaint against the Muslim intruders; but when he slandered Aisha he provided the prophet with an admirable reason for punishing him severely for an offence which would not engage the sympathies of the Ansaris. Whether loyal or disaffected, they could hardly support their comrade in such a matter.

With the further ramifications of the story we are not concerned; sufficient has been said to show that the poem so far as verse 5 is genuine and is directed solely against the Muslim refugees whose presence had become a nuisance to Hassan. In this poem he says nothing at all about Safwan. The last three lines have doubtless been added to whitewash Hassan. As poetry they will not bear comparison with the genuine verses and Tabari was thoroughly justified in discarding them.

Another specimen of the spurious poetry fathered on Hassan is to be found on p. 936 which belongs to a later generation. Here it is not the prophet who is praised but his 'house': 'How noble are the people (qaum) whose party (shia) is the prophet! . . . They are the best of all living creatures.' When we remember the resentment with which the Ansar in general and Hassan in particular felt when they got no share in the booty of Hunayn, the line 'Take from them what comes when they are angry and set not your hearts on what they withhold is singularly inept.

Another point which militates against the authenticity of poems attributed to Hassan is the prominence which is often given to the Aus. It cannot be supposed that a Khazrajite would ignore the achievements of his own tribe or put them in the second place as on p. 455 when we remember that the hostility between the two tribes persisted long after Islam was established. A plain example of a later Ansari's work is given on p. 711, where the poem begins: 'O my people is there any defence against fate and can the good old days return?' an impossible attitude for a Muslim to take during the prophet's lifetime.

Again, when Hassan is reported to have said 'The best of the believers have followed one another to death' (p. 799), it is sufficient to remember that practically all the prophet's principal companions survived Uhud.

But when this careless forger wrote all the best Muslims had long been dead. However, we have not got to his main point which is to glorify the house of Hashim: 'They are God's near ones. He sent down His wisdom upon them and among them is the purified bringer of the book.' Here the Alids are the 'friends' or 'saints' of God and Mohammed is little more than a member of their family. Divine wisdom is given to them.

These two studies lay bare the wretched language in which many of these poems are written and incidentally bring out the difficulties which a translator has to cope with when the rules of Arabic syntax and the morphology of the language are treated with scant respect. In fine it may be said that their well-documented conclusions made it abundantly clear that the judgement of the ancient critics—particularly al-Jumahi—is justified up to the hilt.

The partial restoration of the lost original
Once the original text of Ibn Ishaq existed in at least fifteen riwayas:

1. Ibrahim b. Sad, 110-84 (Medina)
2. Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkal, d. 183 (Kufa)
3. Abdullah b. Idris al-Audi, 115-92 (Kufa)
4. Yunus b. Bukayr, d. 199 (Kufa)
5. Abda b. Sulayman, d. 187/8 (Kufa)
6. Abdullah b. Numayr, 115-99 (Kufa)
7. Yahya (John) b. Said al-Umawi, 114-94 (Baghdad)
8. Jarir b. Hazim, 85-170 (Basra)
9. Harun b. Abu Isa (Basra?)
10. Salama b. al-Fadl al-Abrash, d. 191 (Ray)
11. Ali b. Mujahid, d. c. 180 (Ray)
12. Ibrahim b. al-Mukhtar (Ray)
13. Said b. Bazi
14. Uthman b. Saj
15. Mohammed b. Salama al-Harrani, d. 191

It has been my aim to restore so far as is now possible the text of Ibn Ishaq as it left his pen or as he dictated it to his hearers, from excerpts in later texts, disregarding the Mabda section as Ibn Hisham did and for at least one of his reasons. At first I was tempted to think that a great deal of the original had been lost—and it may well be that it has been lost—for it is clear that the scurrilous attacks on the prophet which Ibn Hisham mentions in his Introduction are not to be found anywhere. But on the whole I think it is likely that we have the greater part of what Ibn Ishaq wrote. Doubtless more was said for Ali and against Abbas, but it is unlikely that such material would add much to our knowledge of the history of the period. Possibly to us the most interesting excisions would be paragraphs containing information which Ibn Ishaq gathered from Jews and Christians; but in all probability the Mabda contained most of such passages. Still, it is unlikely that those passages which have been allowed to remain would have excited the annoyance that some of his early critics express on this score. Ibnul-Kalbi's K. al-Asnam gives a warning against exaggerated hopes. Yaqut had made copious extracts from it in his Geographical Dictionary, so interesting and so important for our knowledge of the old Arabian heathenism that the great Nöldeke expressed the hope that he would live to see the text of the lost original discovered. He did; but a collation of the original work with the excerpts made by Yaqut shows that practically everything of value had been used and nothing of real significance was to be learned from the discovery of the mother text. However, in a text of the nature of the Sira it is just possible that a twist may be given to the narrative by an editor such as Ibn Hisham.

The writers from whom some of the original can be recovered are:

1. Mohammed b. Umar al-Waqidi, d. 207
2. Abul-Walid Mohammed b. Abdullah al-Azraqi from his grandfather (d. c. 220)
3. Mohammed b. Sad, d. 230
4. Abu Abdullah Mohammed b. Muslim b. Qutayba, d. 270 or 276
5. Ahmad b. Yahya (John) al-Baladhuri, d. 279
6. Abu Jafar Mohammed b. Jarir al-Tabari, d. 310
7. Abu Said al-Hasan b. Abdullah al-Sirafi, d. 368.
8. Abul-Hasan Ali b. Mohammed b. Habib al-Mawardi, d. 450
9. Abul-Hasan Ali b. al-Athir, d. 630
10. Yusuf b. Yahya (John) al-Tadali known as Ibn al-Zayyat, d. 627
11. Ismail b. Umar b. Kathir, d. 774
12. Abdul-Fadl Ahmad b. Ali . . . b. Hajar al-Asqalani, d. 852/1449.

For our purpose none of these has the importance of Tabari whose text rests on the ritoaya of Salama and Yunus b. Bukayr. Besides the important textual variants which will be found in the translation from time to time, he it is who reports from Ibn Ishaq the prophet's temporary concession to polytheism at Mecca (1190 f.) and the capture of Abbas at Badr (1441).

1.) al-Waqidi. Only the Maghazi has survived from the very large number of his writings. A third of it was published by von Kremer in 1856 from a poor manuscript, and until the work has been edited its value cannot be accurately assessed. The abridged translation by Julius Wellhausen (Muhammad in Medina, Berlin, 1882) gives the reader all the salient facts, but his method of epitomizing enabled him to avoid difficulties in the text which call for explanation. Waqidi makes no mention of Ibn Ishaq among his authorities. The reason for this doubtless is that he did not want to refer to a man who already enjoyed a great reputation as an authority on maghzi and so let it seem that his own book was a mere amplification of his predecessor's. It is by no means certain that he made use of Ibn Ishaq's book, or traditional lore, for he quoted his authorities, e.g. al-Zuhri, Mamar, and others, directly. On the other hand, he did not belittle Ibn Ishaq of whom he spoke warmly as a chronicler, genealogist, and traditionist, who transmitted poetry and was an indefatigable searcher of tradition, a man to be trusted.

It follows that strictly Waqidi is not a writer from whom in the present state of our knowledge we can reconstruct the original of the Sira; but as his narrative often runs parallel with Ibn Ishaq's work, sometimes abridging, sometimes expanding, his stories it is a valuable if uncontrolled supporter thereof. Not until his Maghazi has been published and studied as it deserves to be can a satisfactory comparison of the two books be made. One thing is abundantly clear, namely that Waqidi often includes stories which obviously come from eyewitnesses and often throw valuable light on events which are obscure in Ibn Ishaq. Indeed it ought to be said that the Sira is incomplete without Waqidi.

2.) Al-Azraqi's Akhbar Makka is of great value in matters archaeological. His authority is Uthman b. Saj.

3.) Ibn Sad's Akhbarul-Nabi is more or less as he communicated it to his pupils. This was afterwards combined with his Tabaqat in 300 by Ibn Maruf. Volumes Ia, b and IIa, b in the Berlin edition deal with the former prophets, Mohammed's childhood, his mission, the hijra, and his campaigns, ending with his death, burial, and elegies thereon. I.S. has much more to say on some matters than Ibn Ishaq, e.g. letters and embassies, and the prophet's last illness, while he shows no interest in pre-Islamic Arabia.

For the Maghazi Waqidi is his main authority. The Tabaqat deals with the prophet's companions and the transmitters of tradition, including the tabiun.

4.) Ibn Qutayba's K. al-Madrif contain a few short and inexact citations.

5.) Al-Baladhuri's Futuhul-Buldan adds very little to our knowledge. De Goeje's index gives twelve references. The first two which De Goeje, followed by Theodor Nöldeke, notes as not being in the Sira would never have found a place there as they obviously belong to Ibn Ishaq's lost book on fiqh. They deal with the question of how much water a man may retain on his land before he lets it flow down to his neighbour's ground. The last five citations belong to the age of the caliphs and need not concern us.

The remainder have a slight value for textual criticism. Sometimes they lend support to Tabari's version, and once at least a citation proves that the tradition was not preserved orally because the variant readings could only have come about through a transfer of a dot from the first to the second letter with the consequent misreading of the third. The citations are brief and concise: they tell all the truth that the writer needed for his purpose but not the whole truth, which would have been irrelevant.

6. Tabari. A list of the additions to Ibn Hisham's recension has been given by Nöldeke and enough has been said about his value as a witness to the original text of the Sira. No attempt has been made to recover the lost part of the Mabda from his Tafsir. Where his variants are merely stylistic and do not affect the sense of the passage I have ignored them. Practically all of them will be found in the footnotes to the Leyden edition. He was familiar with four of the recensions, numbers 4, 7, 9, and 10 on the list given above, much the most frequently cited being Yunus b. Bukayr. On one occasion (1074. 12) he remarks that Ibn Ishaq's account is 'more satisfactory than that of Hisham b. Mohammed' [al-Kalbi d. 204 or 206]. Ibn Hisham he ignores altogether and he omits a good deal of the poetry now in the Sira.

Whether his selection was governed by taste, whether he thought some of it irrelevant, or whether he regarded it as spurious I can find no indication.

He often gives the isnad which is lacking in Ibn Ishaq (cf. 1794. 12). On one occasion at least (cf. W. 422 with Tabari 1271) it looks as if the narrative has been deliberately recast. Tabari frequently omits the tasliya and tardiya as ancient writers did. Ibn Hisham omits Kab's poem and the mention of its provoking a killing, cf. 651 with Tabari 1445.

7. Al-Sirafi contributes an interesting addition to W. 882.

8. Al-Mawardi has nothing of importance to add.

9. Ibn al-Athir in his Kdtnil is prone to throw his authorities together and produce a smooth running account from the sum of what they all said, dropping all subordinate details. However, he quotes Ibn Ishaq ten times.

10. Ibn al-Zayyat, see on p. 640 (W.).

11. Ibn Kathir sometimes agrees with Ibn Hisham verbatim. Sometimes he quotes Ibn Bukayr where he offers what is in effect the same stories in different words. I propose to devote a special study to this rizvaya.

12. Ibn Hajar. Again little of importance.

Ibn Ishaq's reputation

Unfortunately for our purpose which is to record the opinion of our author's co-religionists on his trustworthiness as a historian, their judgement is affected by his other writings, one of which called Sunan is mentioned by Hajji Khalifa.' This was freely quoted by Abu Yusuf (d. 182), but failed to hold its own and went out of circulation comparatively early.

If we knew more about the contents of this book, which by reason of its early date presumably would have had a considerable influence on the daily life of Muslims had it been allowed to continue to challenge other reporters of the apostle's deeds and words, we should be the better able to assess the value and relevance of early Muslim criticism on Ibn Ishaq when it was most definitely hostile. It is not always his book the Sira which is attacked but the man himself, and if his sunna work ran counter to the schools of law that were in process of development the author could not hope to escape strong condemnation. It is most important that this fact should not be overlooked. In the passage Wiistenfeld quoted from Abul-Fath M. b. M. b. Sayyidul-Nas al-Yamari al-Andalusi (d1. 734/1334) the distinction between traditions of a general nature and traditions about the prophet's sunna is clear and unmistakable. Ahmad b. Hanbal's son stated that his father included Ibn Ishaq's hadith in his Musnad, but refused to regard him as an authority on sunan. While it is true that there are a few stories in the Sira which report the prophet's practice in certain matters and so provide an authoritative guide for the future behaviour of the faithful in similar circumstances, and while it is also true that in one or two instances the principle underlying these actions is in conflict with the findings of later lawyers, they form an insignificant part of the Sira, and it may safely be concluded that Ibn Hanbal's objection to Ibn Ishaq's authority applies almost exclusively to his lost work, the Sunan.

Apostolic tradition in Islam, as Goldziher showed long ago, is the battlefield of warring sects striving for the mastery of men's minds and the control of their behaviour with all the weight that Mohammed's presumed or fabricated example could bring to bear. The earlier the tradition or collection of traditions, the less this tendency is in evidence; but we have already seen that Ibn Ishaq occasionally succumbed to the temptation to glorify Ali at the expense of Abbas. This would seem to be supremely unnecessary when one can read exactly what Abbas's position was: at first hostile; secondly neutral; and lastly, when the issue was no longer in doubt, a professed Muslim. Obviously since no attempt is made to conceal or diminish the affectionate loyalty of Abu Bakr or the staunch championship of Umar, our author was no unbalanced fanatical supporter of the claims of Ali. Ali appears as the great warrior when rival champions fought between the opposing ranks, but the inestimable services of his two senior contemporaries are never thrust into the background.

In the history of tradition in the technical sense, that is to say in the corpus of hadith venerated by Sunnis everywhere, Ibn Ishaq takes a minor position in spite of his great and obvious merits as an honest, straightforward collector of all the information that was known about Mohammed.

There are several reasons for this: the principal reason is that he had no information to give on all the everyday matters which fill the canonical books of tradition, or when he had he put them in his Sunan. If he reported Mohammed's words it was in reference to a particular event in the narrative he recorded; they were evoked naturally by the circumstances. Thus al-Bukhari, though he often mentions Ibn Ishaq in the headings of his chapters, hardly if ever cites him for the matter of a tradition, unless that tradition is supported by another isnad. Muslim, who classifies traditions as genuine, good, and weak, puts Ibn Ishaq in the second category. To anyone with an historical sense this was a monstrous injustice, but it must be remembered that by the middle of the third century the form of a hadith mattered more than its substance, and provided that the chain of guarantors was unexceptionable anything could be included.

The best and most comprehensive summary of Muslim opinion of Ibn Ishaq is that of Ibn Sayyidul-Nas in his Uyun al-Athar fi fununil-maghazi wal shama ili wal-siyar. He collected all the references to our author that he could find, both favourable and unfavourable, and then answered the attacks that had been made on him. The relevant passage will be found in W.1 with a translation in German. The following is a short summary of this account:

(A) Those favourable to Ibn Ishaq were: 'The best informed man about the maghzi is Ibn Ishaq al-Zuhri: Knowledge will remain in Medina as long as Ibn Ishaq lives.'

1.) Shuba, 85-160: Truthful in tradition, the amir of traditionists because of his memory.

2.) Sufyan b. Uyayna, 107-98: I sat with him some seventy years and none of the Medinans suspected him or spoke disparagingly of him.

3.) Abu Zura, d. 281: Older scholars drew from him and professional traditionists tested him and found him truthful. When he reminded Duhaym of Malik's distrust of Ibn Ishaq he denied that it referred to his veracity as a traditionist, but to his qadarite heresy.

4.) Abu Hatim: His traditions are copied down (by others). Ibn al-Madini: Apostolic tradition originally lay with 6 men; then it became the property of 12, of whom Ibn Ishaq is one.

5.) al-Shafii: He who wants to study the maghazi deeply must consult Ibn Ishaq Asim b. Umar b. Qatada:

Knowledge will remain among men as long as Ibn Ishaq lives.

6.) Abu Muawiya: A great memory; others confided their traditions to his memory for safe keeping,

7.) al-Bukhari: Al-Zuhri used to get his knowledge of the maghazi from Ibn Ishaq Abdullah b. Idris al-Audi: was amazed at his learning and often cited him.

8.) Musab: He was attacked for reasons which had nothing to do with tradition.

9.) Yazid b. Hariin: Were there a supreme relator of tradition it would be Ibn Ishaq Ali b. al-Madini: His ahadith are sound. He had a great reputation in Medina. Hisham b. Urwa's objection to him is no argument against him. He may indeed have talked to the latter's wife when he was a young man. His veracity in hadith is self-evident. I know only of two that are rejected as unsupported¹ which no other writer reported al-Jli: Trustworthy.

10.) Yahya (John) b. Main: Firm in tradition.

11.) Ahmad b. Hanbal: Excellent in tradition.

(B) The writer then goes on to state all that has been said against Ibn Ishaq. Omitting details of little significance we are left with the following charges which Ibn Sayyidul-Nas goes on to discuss and refute. Mohammed b. Abdullah b. Numayr said that when Ibn Ishaq reported what he had heard from well-known persons his traditions were good and true, but he sometimes reported worthless sayings from unknown people. Yahya^{} b. al-Qattan would never quote him. ( Arabic shart form of the Aramaic-Hebrew name Yohanan, Greek: Ioannes, English: John) Ahmad b. Hanbal quoted him with approval, and when it was remarked how excellent the stories (qisas) were he smiled in surprise. His son admitted that Ahmad incorporated many of Ibn Ishaq's traditions in his Musnad, but he never paid heed to them. When he was asked if his father regarded him as an authority on what a Muslim must or must not do he replied that he did not. He himself would not accept a tradition which only Ibn Ishaq reported. He used to relate a tradition which he gathered from a number of people without indicating who had contributed its separate parts. Ibn al-Madini said that at times he was 'fairly good'.

Al-Maymuni reported that Ibn Main 156-233 said he was 'weak', but others denied that he said so. Al-Duri said he was trustworthy but not to be used as an authority mfiqh, like Malik and others. Al-Nasal said that he was not strong. Al-Daraqutni said that a tradition from Ibn Ishaq on the authority of his father was no legal proof: it could be used only to confirm what was already held to be binding. Yahya (John) b. Said said that though he knew Ibn Ishaq in Kufa he abandoned him intentionally and never wrote down traditions on his authority. Abu Daud al-Tayalisi (131-203) reported that Hammad b. Salima said that unless necessity demanded it he would not hand on a tradition from Ibn Ishaq. When Malik b. Anas mentioned him he said, 'he is one of the antichrists'. When Hisham b. Urwa was told that Ibn Ishaq reported something from Fatima he said, 'the rascal lies; when did he see my wife?'

When Abdullah b. Ahmad told his father of this he said that this was not to be held against Ibn Ishaq; he thought that he might well have received permission to interview her, but he did not know. He added that Malik was a liar. Ibn Idris said that he talked to Malik about the Maghazi and how Ibn Ishaq had said that he was their surgeon and he said, 'We drove him from Medina'. Makki b. Ibrahim said that he attended lectures of his; he used to dye his hair. When he mentioned traditions about the divine attributes he left him and never went back. On another occasion he said that when he left him he had attended twelve lectures of his in Ray.

Al-Mufaddal b. Ghassan said that he was present when Yazid b. Harun was relating traditions in al-Baqi when a number of Medinans were listening. When he mentioned Ibn Ishaq they withdrew saying:

'Don't tell us anything that he said. We know better than he.' Yazid went among them, but they would not listen and so he withdrew.

Abu Daud (David) said that he heard Ahmad b. Hanbal say that Ibn Ishaq was a man with a love of tradition, so that he took other men's writings and incorporated them in his own. Abu Abdullah said that he preferred Ibn Ishaq to Musa b. Ubayda al-Rabadhi. Ahmad said that he used to relate traditions as though from a companion without intermediaries, while in Ibrahim b. Sad's book when there is a tradition he said A told me and when that was not so he said A said.

Abu Abdullah said that Ibn Ishaq came to Baghdad and paid no attention to those who related hadith from al-Kalbi and others saying that he was no authority. Al-Fallas (d. 249) said that after being with Wahb b. Jarir reading before him the maghazi book which his father had got from Ibn Ishaq we met Yahya (John) b. Qattan who said that we had brought a pack of lies from him.

Ahmad b. Hanbal said that in maghazi and such matters what Ibn Ishaq said could be written down; but in legal matters further confirmation was necessary. In spite of the large number of traditions without a proper isnad he thought highly of him as long as he said A told us, 'B informed me', and I heard'. Ibn Main did not like to use him as an authority in legal matters. Abu Hatim said that he was weak in tradition yet preferable to Aflah b. Said and his traditions could be written down. Sulayman (Solomon or Solomon) al-Taymi called him a liar and Yahya (Yohanan, Ioannes or John) al-Qattan said that he could only abandon his hadith to God; he was a liar. When Yahya asked Wuhayb b. Khalid what made him think that Ibn Ishaq was a liar he said that Malik swore that he was and he gave as his reason Hisham b. Urwa's oath to that effect. The latter's reason was that he reported traditions from his wife Fatima.

Abu Bakr al-Khatib said that some authorities accepted his traditions as providing proof for legal precedent while others did not. Among the reasons for rejecting his authority was that he was a Shii, that he was said to hold the view that man had free will, and that his isndds were defective. As for his truthfulness, it could not be denied.

Al-Bukhari quoted him as an authority and Muslim cited him often. Abul-Hasan b. al-Qattan relegated him to the class 'good' (hasan) because people disputed about him. As to the tradition from Fatima, al-Khatib gave us an isnad running back through Ibn Ishaq and Fatima to Asma d. Abu Bakr: I heard a woman questioning the prophet and saying, "I have a rival wife and I pretend to be satisfied with what my husband has not in fact given me in order to anger her". He answered, "He who affects to be satisfied with what he has not been given is like one who dons two false garments" (This has nothing to do with the Sira). Abul-Hasan said that this was the tradition from Fatima which injured Ibn Ishaq's reputation, so that her husband Hisham called him a liar. Malik followed him and others imitated them. However, there are other traditions on her authority.

One cannot but admire the way in which Ibn Sayyidul-Nas discusses these attacks on the credibility of our author. He goes at once to the root of the matter and shows what little substance there is in them. Though, like the speakers he criticises, he tacitly assumes that early writers ought to have furnished their traditions with isndds which would have met the rigorous demands of later generations who were familiar with a whole sea of spurious traditions fathered on the prophet and his companions, his common sense and fairness would not let him acquiesce in the charge of tadtis which, by omitting a link in the chain or by citing the original narrator without further ado, automatically invalidated a hadith in later days. Thus he said in effect that though Ibn Ishaq's traditions at times lack complete documentation there is no question of his truthfulness in the subject-matter he reports; and as to the charge of shilm and qadarite leanings, they are valid in another field altogether and have nothing to do with the Sira. Again, what if Makki b. Ibrahim (Abraham) did abandon his lectures when he heard him relate traditions about the divine attributes? Many of the ancients failed to go the whole way when such problems were discussed, so what he says is of little significance.

Yazid's story that the Madinans would not listen to traditions on Ibn Ishaq's authority does not amount to much because he does not tell us why, and so we can resort only to conjecture; and we have no right to impugn a true tradition because of what we think is a defect. We have already explained why Yahya al-Qattan would have none of him and called him liar on the authority of Wuhayb from Malik, and it is not improbable that he was the cause of the Medinans attitude in the foregoing account. Ahmad b. Hanbal (Hanibal) and Ibn al-Madini have adequately replied to Hisham's accusation.

As to Numayr's accusation that he related false hadith on the authority of unknown persons, even if his trustworthiness and honesty were not a matter of tradition, suspicion would be divided between him and his informants; but as we know that he is trustworthy the charge lies against the persons unknown, not against him. Similar attacks have been made upon Sufyan al-Thauri and others whose hadith differ greatly in this way and what they base on unknown informants is to be rejected while that coming from known people is accepted. Sufyan b. Uyayna gave up Jarir al-Jufi after he had heard more than a thousand traditions from him, and yet he narrated traditions on his authority. Shuba related many traditions from him and others who were stigmatised as 'weak'.

As to Ahmad's complaint that he recorded composite traditions without assigning the matter of them to the several contributors, their words agreed however many they were; and even if they did not yet the meaning was identical. There is a tradition that Wathila b. al-Asqa said: If I give you the meaning of a tradition (not in the precise words that were used) that is sufficient for you.' Moreover, Mohammed b. Sirin said that he used to hear traditions from ten different people in ten different words with the same meaning. Ahmad's complaint that Ibn Ishaq took other men's writings and incorporated them in his own account cannot be regarded as serious until it can be proved that he had no licence to repeat them. One must look at the method of transmission: if the words do not plainly necessitate an oral communication, then the accusation of tadtis 1 lies. But we ought not to accept such a charge unless the words plainly imply that. If he expressly says that he heard people say something when in fact he did not, that is a downright lie and pure invention. It is quite wrong to say such a thing of Ibn Ishaq unless the words leave no other choice. When Ahmad's son quoted his father as saying that Ibn Ishaq was not to be regarded as an authority in legal matters though he saw how tolerant he was to non-legal matters which make up the greater part of the Maghazi and the prophetic biography, he applied this adverse judgement on sunan to other matters. Such an extension is excluded by his truthful reputation.

As to Yahya's saying that he was trustworthy but not authoritative in legal matters, it is sufficient for us that he is pronounced trustworthy. If only men like al-Umari and Malik were acceptable there would be precious few acceptable authorities! Yahya b. Said probably blindly followed Malik because he heard from him what Hisham had said about Ibn Ishaq. His refusal to accept him as an authority in legal matters has already been dealt with under Ahmad. Yahya made no distinction between them and other traditions in the way of complete acceptance or downright rejection.

Other attacks on his reputation rest on points that are not explained and for the most part the agents are unfair. Even in legal matters Abu Isa al-Tirmidhi and Abu Hatim b. Hibban (d. 354) accepted him as an authority. The refutation of his opponents would not have been undertaken were it not for the favourable verdict and praise that the learned gave him. But for that a few of the charges would have sufficed to undermine his stories, since but a few attacks on a man's good faith, explicit or not, are enough to destroy the reputation of one whose former circumstances are not known when an impartial critic has not done him justice.

In his book about trustworthy narrators Abu Hatim said that the two men who attacked Ibn Ishaq were Hisham and Malik. The former denied that he had heard traditions from Fatima. But what he said does not impugn men's veracity in hadith, for 'followers' like al-Aswad and Alqama heard Aisha's voice without seeing her. Similarly Ibn Ishaq used to hear Fatima when the curtain was let down between them. As for Malik, what he said was momentary and afterwards he did him justice. Nobody in the Hijaz knew more about genealogies and wars than Ibn Ishaq, and he used to say that Malik was a freed slave of Dhu Asbah while Malik alleged that he was a full member of the tribe so that there was bad feeling between them; and when Malik compiled the Muwaita' Ibn Ishaq said, 'Bring it to me for I am its veterinary surgeon.' Hearing of this Malik said: 'He is an antichrist; he reports traditions on the authority of the Jews.' The quarrel lasted until Ibn Ishaq decided to go to Iraq. Then they were reconciled and Malik gave him 50 dinars and half his date crop as a parting gift. Malik did not intend to bring him into ill favour as a traditionist: all that he disliked was his following the Jews who had become Muslims and learning the story of Khaybar and Qurayza and al-Nadir and similar (otherwise) unattested happenings from their fathers. In his Maghazi Ibn Ishaq used to learn from them but without necessarily asserting that their report was the truth. Malik himself only relied on trustworthy truthful men. The author ends by remarking that Ibn Ishaq was not the originator of the challenge to Malik's Arab ancestry because al-Zuhri and others had said the same thing.'

The Translation

I have endeavoured to follow the text as closely as possible without sacrificing English idiom. In rendering poetry I have tried to give the sense without making any attempt at versifying, the only exceptions being doggerel and saj. In these cases it seemed that it was fair to reproduce doggerel by doggerel and to try to put poor rhymes into rhymes that could not be worse. Inevitably some exactness is lost, but the general sense and tone are more faithfully reproduced in that way.

The book is very long and I have made a few cuts where no loss can result: e.g. Ibn Hisham's recurring formula 'This verse occurs in an ode of his' I have excluded because it is obvious that the line, which is generally one of his shawahid (a hadith text), cannot have stood by itself. Again I have shortened dialogues in oratio recta into indirect speech in accordance with English practice unless the ipsisima verba (Latin for "the very words," which is a legal term referring to material, usually established authority, that a writer or speaker is quoting or referring to.) of the speaker seemed called for naturally, or are in themselves important. Lastly I have omitted genealogical formulae after the first mention of the people concerned.

My predecessors in translating the Sira have made many mistakes and I cannot hope to have escaped all the pitfalls. Of Weil's translation, now nearly a century old be it remembered, the famous German Orientalist Theodor Nöldeke (1836-1930) wrote: 'Die Übersetzung von G. Weil, Stuttgart, 1864 ist steif und unbeholfen, und auch philologisch nicht mehr genügend. Die grosse Wichtigkeit des Werkes würde eine neue Übertragung rechtfertigen' (The translation by G. Weil, Stuttgart, 1864, is stiff and clumsy, and also from a philological standpoint insufficient. The great significance of that work would justify a new translation of it); while Wellhausen's translation of al-Waqidi evades the difficulties of the text by silence. The poetry of the Sira, as Nöldeke said long ago of the poetry on Badr, is not easy to translate because of its many synonyms; the superficial commentary of Abu Dharr is no help at all'.

The Text

I have followed the pagination of the excellent Textus Receptus (Latin: "received text") of Ferdinand Wüstenfeld's edition of Das Leben Muhammed's, nach Muhammed Ibn Ishäk; by Ibn Hisham 1858-60; but the text I have actually used is the Cairo edition of 1937 (1355 AH) produced in four parts by Mustafa al-Saqa, Ibrahim al-Abyari, and Abdul-Hafiz Shalabi which prints at the bottom of the page most of the notes from Abu Dharr and Suhayli that Wüstenfeld relegated to the second volume of his altogether admirable edition. For this reason it is much easier to use and its fine bold type is kind to one's eyes. When I have had occasion to refer to differences between the texts they are marked C. and W.

THE EDITOR IBN HISHAM

Abdul-Malik b. Hisham (in short: Ibn Hisham) was born in Basra and died at Fustat in Egypt in 218 or 213. Krenkow, however, thinks that he must have died some years later. Besides editing the present work he made use of Ibn Ishaq's learning in his K. al-Tijan which derives from Wahb b. Munabbih. The principles which guided him in his impertinent meddling with his predecessor's work he has outlined in his Introduction, and they need not be repeated here. He was a philologist of some repute, and he was able to air his knowledge in the shawahid (a hadith text) he produces to illustrate the meaning of unusual words. These lines, divorced as they are from their context, form some of the most difficult of all the difficulties of the Sira and are of course for the most part unnecessary now that the Arabs have produced lexicons of their language. Occasionally he is helpful with his genealogical notes; more rarely he has something useful to say about the interpretation of a line in Ibn Ishaq's work.

Suhayli gives some traditions which Ibn Hisham omitted or knew nothing of, e.g. W. 183 = Suhayli 183; W. 327 = S. ii. 2 f. He also (ii. 278 = W. 824) draws attention to a mistake in one of Ibn Hisham's notes saying that the fault is either his or al-Bakkai's because Yunus has the right reading. Probably the fault lay with Ibn Hisham, for he was in touch with Yunus as he says fi ma akhbarani Yunus on p. 387.

Another error of his is the statement that Ibn Ishaq said nothing about the mission of Amr b. Umayya whom the prophet sent to kill Abu Sufyan b. Harb and how he took down the corpse of Khubayb from the cross to which he was tied (p. 993). Tabari records Ibn Ishaq's version of this story which is far superior to the garbled version of Ibn Hisham, who is obviously composing a story from more than one source, passing clumsily from the first to the third person. According to him Amr threw the cross (presumably with the body on it) into a ravine. The cross (khashaba, a sturdy trunk of a tree capable of bearing a man's body) could hardly have been moved by one man more than a few yards with guards standing by, and Ibn Ishaq's own account is much more convincing. Amr released the body from the tree, carried it some forty paces—a graphic detail—heard the guards coming after him, dropped the body with a thud, and made off as fast as he could.

There is an interesting note in S. ii. 363 which shows that Ibn Hisham's error was perceived in early days. He adds that there is a pleasing addition to the story in the Musnad of Ibn Abu Shayba to the effect that when they untied him from the cross the earth swallowed him up. One might well suppose that Ibn Hisham's story lies midway between the actual facts and this incredible fiction. The unfortunate man's body which Amr had made a gallant but unavailing attempt to retrieve was dumped unceremoniously on the ground; the next step was to give it the semblance of burial in a natural hole in the wall of the wadi; the last step was to provide for proper burial by a miracle.

What remains to be explained is why Ibn Hisham should assert that Ibn Ishaq had said nothing about the abortive attempt to assassinate Abu Sufyan and the equally Unsuccessful effort to recover Khubayb's body. If Ibn Ishaq said nothing at all about either matter, how came it that Ibn Hisham dealt with them? Since we know that Ibn Ishaq reported what had happened from traditions that were transmitted by Amr's own family and that they existed in oral and written form for centuries afterwards, we cannot but suspect that Ibn Hisham has tampered with the evidence.

Perhaps his greatest service is his critical observations on the authenticity of the poetry of the Sira, not only when he records that all, or some, authorities reject certain poems altogether but also when he corrects Ibn Ishaq, and assigns verses to their true author. Suyuti thought highly of him.

He reported that Abu Dharr had said that Ibn Hisham produced one of the four compendia which were better than their sources (al-Muzhir, Cairo, p. 87.).

Suhayli states that Ibn Hisham wrote a book explaining the difficult words in the poetry of the Sura. Suhayli's words indicate that he had not himself seen the book. Were it ever found it might well tell us what Ibn Hisham's generation really thought about these poems.

A FRAGMENT OF THE LOST BOOK OF MOSA B. UQBA

This fragment consists of twenty extracts complete with their isnads (hadith texts), some being the sayings of the prophet on a given occasion, others being stories from his life. The collector expressly asserts that the original work existed in ten parts, so that the inference that the book once contained a complete account of the Sira seems fairly safe. The last item is spurious. There is an ijaza (authorisation) reaching from Musa (141) to the epitomiser Abu Hurayra b. Mohammed b. al-Naqqash (782).

1. Ibn Shihab from Salim b. Abdullah from Abdullah b. Umar: I heard the apostle say, 'While I was asleep I dreamt that I was going round the Kaaba when lo a man with lank hair between the two men, his head dripping with water. When I asked who it was they said Isa b. Maryam. Then I turned away when lo a red man, heavy, with curly hair, one eyed; it seemed as though his eye was a grape swimming (in water). When I asked who it was they said The Antichrist. The man most like him is Ibn Qatan al-Khuzai.'

This tradition is similarly reported in (the Sahih al) Bukhari ii. 368. 19-369. 4. It should be compared with Ibn Ishaq 269, also from al-Zuhri, where the prophet is said to have seen Isa during his miraj (a Night Journey that, according to Islam, the Islamic prophet Mohammed took during a single night around the year 621 AD. Within Islam it signifies both a physical and spiritual journey), with moles or freckles on his face appearing like drops of water. The reference here to the 'two men' presumably refers to the two thieves on the cross.

2. Ibn Shihab: The first to hold Friday prayers for the Muslims in Medina before the apostle was MusAb b. Umayr. I. Shihab told us another tradition from Suraqa contradicting this. The first statement agrees with I.S. HI. i. 83. 25; the second apparently with I.I. 290. 5 and I.S. III. i. 84.

3. Abdul-Rahman b. Malik b. Jushum al-Mudlijji from his father Malik from his brother Suraqa b. Jushum: When the apostle went out from Mecca migrating to Medina (the) Quraysh offered a reward of 100 camels to anyone who would bring him back, etc., down to 'my alms to the apostle'. This passage is in all essential respects the same as Ibn Ishaq 331-2, though there are many verbal differences. Obviously the version in Ibn Ishaq has been touched up and Musa gives the tradition in its simplest form. Cf. Bukhari iii. 39, 41 and Waqidi (Wüstenfeld 374).

4. Ibn Shihab alleged that Urwa b. al-Zubayr said that al-Zubayr met the apostle with a caravan of Muslims who were returning to Mecca from a trading journey to Syria. They bartered some goods with the apostle and al-Zubayr gave him and Abu Bakr some white garments. So Bukh. iii. 40. Different names in I.S. m. i. 153. 19.

5. Nafi from Abdullah b. Umar: Some of the apostle's companions said to him, Are you speaking to dead men? He answered, "You cannot hear what I say better than they." So Bukhari iii. 70. 17, 18, and cf. pp. 453 f where the words of Aisha are quoted to refute the statement that the dead hear: they know but they do not hear.

6. Ibn Shihab from Anas b. Malik: Some Ansar asked the apostle's permission to remit to their sister's son Abbas his ransom, and he replied, 'No, by Allah, you shall not let him off a single farthing!' So Bukhari iii. 69. 1, 2 and cf. Tabari 1341, I. Qut. Madrif, 77. Sachau in finding strange the claim to relationship between Abbas and the Ansar seems to have forgotten that the grandmother of Abbas was Salma d. Amr al-Khazraji. Cf. Bukhari ii. 388. 18 f. for the same claim.

7. Ibn Shihab from Abdul-Rahman b. Kab b. Malik al-Sulami and other traditionists: Amir b. Malik b. Jafar, who was called 'the player with the spears', came to the apostle when he was a polytheist and the apostle explained Islam to him and he refused to accept it. He gave the apostle a present, but he refused it saying that he would not accept a present from a polytheist. Amir said: 'O apostle, send with me those of your messengers you wish and I will be surety for them.' So the apostle sent a number among whom were al-Mundhir b. Amr al-Saidi, of whom it was said 'he hastened to his death', as a spy among the Najd folk. When Amir b. Tufayl heard about them he tried to call out B. Amir against them, but they refused to obey him in violating the promise of security given by Amir b. Malik. Then he appealed to B. Sulaym and they joined him and killed them in Bir Ma una except Amr b. Umayya al-Pamri whom Amir b. al-Tufayl captured and afterwards released. When he came to the apostle the latter said to him, Are you the sole survivor? This is a much briefer account than that given in Ibn Hisham 648 f. Cf. T. 1443 f.; Waq. (Well) 337 f.

8. Ismail b. Ibrahim b. Uqba from Salim b. Abdullah from Abdullah b. Umar: Some men contested the leadership of Usama, and the apostle rose and said: If you contest the leadership of Usama you used to contest the leadership of his father before him. By Allah he was worthy to be leader. He was one of the dearest of all men to me, and this man (his son) is one of the dearest of men to me after him; so treat him well when I am no more, for he is one of the best of you.' Cf. Bukhari ii. 440, iii. 133, 192, and Ibn Hisham 999. 14; 1006. 20 f.

9. Salim b. Abdullah from Abdullah b. Umar: The apostle used not to make an exception for Fatima. Sachau explains this from Bukhari ii. 441 and iii. 145 where Mohammed says that if Fatima were to steal he would cut her hand off.

10. Abdullah b. Fadl from Anas b. Malik: I grieved over my people who were killed in the harra. Then Zayd b. Arqam (d. 68) wrote to me when he heard of my great grief to say that he had heard the apostle say 'O God forgive the Ansar and their sons and we implore Thy grace on their grandsons'. Similarly Ibn Hisham 886. 12 and Waq. (W.) 380.

11. Abdullah b. al-Fadl: Some men who were with him (Anas) asked him about Zayd b. Arqam and he said, It is he of whom the apostle said, "This is he on whom Allah has bestowed much through his ear". He had been an informer, cf. Ibn Hisham 726. In place of aufallahu lahu bi-udhnihi Ibn Hisham 727. 17 has aufa niillahi bi-udhnihi. It seems much more likely that the variant is due to misreading than to oral tradition. Waq. (B.M. MS. 1617, f. 95a) wafat udhnuka . . . wa-saddaqa'ldhu hadithak.

12. Ibn Shihab from Said b. al-Musayyib from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik: The apostle said that day to Bilal, 'Get up and announce that only a believer will enter paradise, and that God will not support His religion by an evil man.' This happened when the man whom the apostle said was one of the inhabitants of hell was mentioned.

13. From Nafi b. Abdullah b. Umar: After the conquest of Khaybar the Jews asked the apostle to let them stay there on condition that they worked the land for half the date crop. He said: 'We will allow you to do so on that condition so long as we wish, and they remained there thus until Umar expelled them. [Here six or seven words are missing] saying 'The apostle laid down three things in his last disposition, viz. that the Rahawiyun, Dariyun, Sabaiyun, and Ashariyun should have land which produced a hundred loads; that the mission of Usama b. Zayd should be carried through; and that two different religions should not be allowed to remain in the peninsula of the Arabs.' Practically the same words are used in Ibn Hisham 776 except that the Sabaiyun are not mentioned.

14. Isnad as above: Umar used not to let Jews, Christians, and Magians remain more than three days in Medina to do their business, and he used to say 'Two religions cannot subsist together' and he exiled Jews and Christians from the peninsula of the Arabs.

15. I. Shihab from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Marwan b. al-Hakam and al-Miswar b. Makhrama: When the apostle gave men permission to free the Hawazin captives he said, I do not know who has or has not given you permission, so go back until your leaders bring us a report of your affairs.' So the men returned and their leaders instructed them and they returned to the apostle and told him that the men (Mohammed's companions) had treated them kindly and given them permission (to recover their captive people).

16. I. Shihab from Said b. al-Musayyib and Urwa b. al-Zubayr: The captives of Hawazin whom the apostle returned were 6,000 men, women, and children. He gave some women who had fallen to some men of (the) Quraysh—among whom were Abdul-Rahman b. Auf and Safwan b. Umayya who had appropriated two women as concubines—the choice (of returning or remaining) and they elected to go back to their own people.

17. Ismail b. Ibrahim b. Uqba from his uncle Musa b. Uqba from I. Shihab: The apostle made the pilgrimage of completion in a.h. 10. He showed the men the rites and addressed them in Arafat sitting on his camel al-Jada.

18. Ibn Shihab from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from al-Miswar b. Makhrama from Amr b. Auf, an ally of B. Amir b. Luayy who had been at Badr with the apostle: The apostle sent Abu Ubayda b. al-Jarrah to bring the poll tax. He had made peace with the people of al-Bahrayn and set over them al-Ala b. al-Hadrami. When Abu Ubayda came from al-Bahrayn with the money the Ansar heard of his coming which coincided with the apostle's morning prayer. When they saw him they stood in his way. Seeing them he smiled and said: I think you have heard of the coming of Abu Ubayda and that he has brought something.' When they agreed he added: 'Rejoice and hope for what will gladden you. By Allah it is not poverty that I fear on your account. I fear that you will become too comfortable and will be led astray like those before you.'

19. Sad b. Ibrahim from Ibrahim b. Abdul-Rahman b. Auf Abdul-Rahman b. Auf was with Umar one day and he (the former) broke al-Zubayr's sword. But God knows best who broke it. Then Abu Bakr got up and addressed the people excusing himself and saying,

'Never for a moment was I eager for authority (imara) nor did I want it or pray to God for it secretly or publicly. But I was afraid of disorder. I take no pleasure in authority. I have been invested with a grave matter for which I have not the strength and can only cope with it if God gives me the strength. I would that he who has the most strength for it were in my place.' The emigrants accepted his excuse and Ali and al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam said: 'We were angry only because we were not admitted to the council and we think that Abu Bakr is the most worthy of supreme authority now that the apostle is dead. He was the one with the apostle in the cave and we recognise his dignity and seniority; and the apostle put him in charge of the prayers while he was still with us.'

MOHAMMED'S PURE DESCENT FROM ADAM
Abu Mohammed Abdul-Malik ibn Hisham the Grammarian said:

This is the book of the biography of the apostle of God.

Mohammed was the son of Abdullah, b. Abdul-Muttalib (whose name was Shayba), b. Hashim (whose name was Amr), b. Abdu Manaf (whose name was al-Mughira), b. Qusayy (whose name was Zayd), b. Kilab, b. Murra, b. Kab, b. LuAyy, b. Ghalib, b. Fihir, b. Malik, b. al-Nadr, b. Kinana, b. Khuzayma, b. Mudrika (whose name was Amir), b. Ilyas, b. Mudar, b. Nizar, b. Maadd, b. Adnan, b. Udd (or Udad), b. Muqawwam, b. Nahur, b. Tayrah, b. Yarub, b. Yashjub, b. Nabit, b. Ismail, b. Ibrahim, the friend of the Compassionate, b. Tarih (who is Azar), b. Nahur, b. Sarugh, b. RaU, b. Falikh, b. Aybar, b. Shalikh, b. Arfakhshadh, b. Sam, b. Nuh, b. Lamk, b. Mattushalakh, b. Qaynan, b. Yanish, b. Shith, b. Adam (Capital B. stands for 'Sons of'; b. for 'son of'; d. for 'daughter of').

THE LINE OF ISMAIL

Ismail b. Ibrahim begat twelve sons: Nabit the eldest, Qaydhar, Adhbul, Mabsha, Misma, Mashi, Dimma, Adhr, Tayma, Yatur, Nabish, Qaydhuma. Their mother was Rala d. Mudad b. Amr al-Jurhumi. Jurhum was the son of Yaqtan b. Aybar b. Shalikh, and [Yaqtan was] Qahtan b. Aybar b. Shalikh. According to report Ismail lived 130 years, and when he died he was buried in the sacred precincts (The hijr is the semicircular space between the wall and the Kaaba.) of the Kaaba beside his mother Hagar.

Mohammed b. Muslim b. Ubaydullah b. Shihab al-Zuhri told me that Abdul-Rahman b. Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik al-Ansan, also called al-Sulami, told him that the apostle of God said: 'When you conquer Egypt treat its people well, for they can claim our protection and kinship.' I asked al-Zuhri what the apostle meant by making them our kin and he replied that Hagar, the mother of Ismail, was of their stock. Ad b. Aus b. Iram b. Sam b. Nuh and Thamud and Jadis the two sons of Abir b. Iram b. Sam b. Nuh, and Tasm and Imlaq and Umaym the sons of Lawidh b. Sim b. Nuh are all

Arabs. Nabit b. Ismail begat Yashjub and the line runs: Yarub-Tayrah-Nahur-Muqawwam-Udad-Adnan.

From Adnan the tribes descended from Ismail split off. Adnan had two sons, MaAdd and Akk. Maadd had four sons: Nizar, Qudaa (he being his first born he was called Abu QudaA), Qunus, and lyad. QudaA went to the Yaman to Himyar b. Saba whose name was Abdu Shams; the reason why he was called Saba was that he was the first among the Arabs to take captives. He was the son of Yashjub b. Yarub b. Qahfan. Of Qunus b. Maadd according to the genealogists of Maadd, none has survived. Al-Numan b. al-Mundhir king of al-Hira belonged to their tribe. Al-Zuhri told me that this Numan belonged to the Qunus b. Maadd.

Yaqub b. Utba b. al-Mughira b. al-Akhnas told me that a shaykh of the Ansar of (the) B. Zurayq told him that Umar b. al-Khattab, when he was given the sword of al-Numan b. al-Mundhir, sent for Jubayr b. Matim b. Adiy b. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf b. Qusayy (he being the best genealogist of the Qunaysh and indeed of all the Arabs and claimed to have been taught by Abu Bakr who was the greatest genealogist of the Arabs) and girded it on him. When he asked who al-Numan was, Jubayr replied that he was a survivor of the tribe of Qunus b. Maadd. However, the rest of the Arabs assert that he belonged to the Lakhm of the Rabia b. Nasr. Only God knows the truth.

OF RABIA B. NASR KING OF THE YAMAN AND THE STORY OF SHIQQ AND SATIH THE TWO SOOTHSAYERS

Rabia b. Nasr, king of the Yaman, was of the true stock of the Tubba kings. He had a vision which terrified him and continued to cause him much anxiety. So he summoned every soothsayer, sorcerer, omenmonger, and astrologer in his kingdom and said: I have had a vision which terrifies me and is a source of anxiety. Tell me what it was and what it means.' They replied: Tell us the vision and we will tell you its meaning.' If I tell you it,' said he, I can have no confidence in your interpretation; for the only man who knows its meaning is he who knows about the vision without my telling him.' Thereupon one of them recommended him to send for Shiqq and Satih, for they knew more than others and would be able to answer his questions. Satih's name was Rabi b. Rabia b. Masud b. Mazin, b. Drub b. Adiy b. Mazin Ghassan. Shiqq was the son of Sab, b. Yashkur b. Ruhm b. Afrak, b. Qasr b. Abqar b. Anmar b. Nizar, and Anmar was the father of Bajila and Khatham.

So he sent for them and Satih arrived first. The king then repeated his words, ending, If you know the vision you will know what it means.' Satih replied [in sajj]:

A fire you did see
Come forth from the sea.
It fell on the low country
And devoured all that be.

The king agreed that this was exactly what he had seen, and what was the meaning of it all? He answered:

By the serpent of the lava plains I swear
The Ethiopians on your land shall bear
Ruling from Abyan to Jurash everywhere.

The king exclaimed that this was distressing news, but when would these things come to pass—in his time or after him? He replied: [again in rhyme] that more than sixty or seventy years must first pass. Would the new-comers' kingdom last? No, an end would be put to it after seventy years or more; then they would be slain or driven out as fugitives. Who would do this? Iram b. Dhu Yazan, who would come against them from Aden and not leave one of them in the Yemen. Further questions drew the information that their kingdom would not last, but a pure prophet to whom revelation came from on high would bring it to an end ; he would be a man of the sons of Ghalib b. Fihir b. Malik, b. al-Nadr. His dominion would last to the end of time. Has time an end? asked the king. Yes, replied Satih, the day on which the first and the last shall be assembled, the righteous for happiness, the evildoers for misery. Are you telling me the truth? the king asked.

Yes, by the dark and the twilight
And the dawn that follows the night
Verily what I have told you is right.

Later Shiqq arrived and the king acquainted him with the facts but did not tell him what Satih had said, so that he might see whether they agreed or differed. His words were:

A fire you did see
Come forth from the sea.
It fell between rock and tree
Devouring all that did breathe.

Perceiving that they agreed one with the other and that the difference was a mere choice of words, the king asked Shiqq for his interpretation:

By the men of the plains I swear
The blacks on your land shall bear
Pluck your little ones from your care
Ruling from Abyan to Najran* everywhere.
(* Najran was a Christian kingdom close to the northern border of Yemen)

The king put the same questions to him and learned that after his time:

There shall deliver you from them one mighty, great of name
And put them to the utmost shame.

He would be:
A young man neither remiss nor base
Coming forth from Dhu Yazan's house, his place,
Not one of them shall leave on Yaman's face.

He continued in answer to the questions already put to his predecessor:

His kingdom shall be ended by an apostle who will bring truth and justice among men of religion and virtue. Dominion will rest among his people until the Day of Separation, the day on which those near God will be rewarded, on which demands from heaven will be made which the quick and dead will hear, men will be gathered at the appointed place, the Godfearing to receive salvation and blessing. By the Lord of heaven and earth, and what lies between them high or low I have told you but the truth in which no doubt (amd) lies.

What these two men said made a deep impression on Rabia b. Nasr and he dispatched his sons and family to Iraq with all that they might need, giving them a letter to the Persian king Sabur b. Khurrazadh who let them settle in al-Hira.

Al-Numan b. al-Mundhir was a descendant of this king; in the genealogies and traditions of the Yaman in his line is: al-Numan b. al-Mundhir b. al-Numan b. Mundhir b. Amr b. Adiy b. Rabia b. Nasr.

HOW ABU KARIB TIBAN ASAD TOOK POSSESSION OF THE KINGDOM OF THE YAMAN AND HIS EXPEDITION TO YATHRIB

When Rabia b. Nasr died the whole kingdom of the Yaman fell into the hands of Hassan b. Tiban Asad Abu Karib. (Tiban Asad was the last Tubba, the son of Kuli Karib b. Zayd, Zayd being the first Tubba son of Amr Dhul-Adhar b. Abraha Dhul-Manar b. al-Rish b. Adiy b. Sayfi b. Saba al-Asghar b. Kab—Kahf al-Zulm b. Zayd b. Sahl b. Amr b. Qays b. Murawiya b. Jusham b. Abdu Shams b. Wall b. al-Ghauth b. Qatan

b. Arib b. Zuhayr b. Ayman b. al-Hamaisa b. al-Aranjaj, the latter is Himyar b. SabaAl-Akbar b. Yarub b. Yashjub b. Qahtan.)

It was Tiban Asad Abu Karib who went to Medina and took away to the Yaman two Jewish rabbis from thence. He adorned the sacred temple and covered it with cloth. His reign was before that of Rabia b. Nasr.

When he came from the east he had passed by Medina without harming its people; but he left behind there one of his sons who was treacherously slain. Thereupon he returned with the intention of destroying the town and exterminating its people and cutting down its palms So this tribe of the Ansar gathered together under the leadership of Amr b. Talla the brother of B. al-Najjar and one of B. Amr b. Mabdul. Mabdul's name was Amir b. Malik b. al-Najjar; and al-Najjar's name was Taym Allah b. Thalaba b. Amr b. al-Khazraj b. Haritha b. Thalaba b. Amr b. Amir.

Now a man of B. Adiy b. al-Najjar called Ahmar had fallen upon one of the followers of Tubba when he brought them to Medina and killed him, because he caught him among his palms cutting the date clusters; he struck him with his sickle and killed him, saying 'The fruit belongs to the man who cultivates it.' This enraged the Tubba against them and fighting broke out. Indeed the Ansar assert that they used to fight them by day and treat them as guests by night. Tubba was amazed at this and used to say: 'By God our people are generous!'

While Tubba was occupied in this fighting there came two Jewish rabbis from B. Qurayza—Qurayza, and al-Nadir and al-Najjam and Amr nicknamed Hanging-lip were sons of al-Khazraj b. al-Sarih b. al-Tau aman b al-Sibi b. al-Yasa b. Sad b. Law! b. Khayr b. al-Najjam b. Tanhum b. Azar b. Izra b. Harun b. Imran b. Yashar b. Qahat b. Lawi b. Yaqub otherwise called Israil b. Ishaq b. Ibrahim the friend of al-Rahman—learned men well grounded in tradition. They had heard about the king's intention to destroy the town and its people and they said to him: O King do not do it, for if you persist in your intention something will happen to prevent your carrying it out and we fear that you will incur speedy retribution.' When the king asked the reason for this they told him that Yathrib (Medina) was the place to which a prophet of the Quraysh would migrate in time to come, and it would be his home and resting-place.

Seeing that these men had hidden knowledge the king took their words in good part and gave up his design, departed from Medina and embraced the rabbis' religion.

Khalid b. Abd al-Uzza b. Ghazlya b. Amr b. Auf b. Ghunm b. Malik b. al-Najjar boasting of Amr b. Talla said:

Has he given up youthful folly or ceased to remember it?

Or has he had his fill of pleasure?
Or have you remembered youth?
And what a memory of youth and its times you have!
It was a young man's war
Such as gives him experience.
So ask Imran or Asad,
When headlong with the morning star came
Abu Karib with his great squadrons
Clad in long mail, of pungent smell.
They said, Whom shall we make for,
The Banu Auf or the Najjar?
Surely the Banu-I-Najjar,
For we seek revenge for our dead.
Then our swordsmen went to meet them,
Their number as the drops of widely falling rain,
Among them Amr b. Talla
(God prolong his life for the welfare of his people).
A chief who is on a level with kings but whoso
Would vie with him does not know his eminence.

This tribe of the Ansar claim that the Tubba was enraged only against this tribe of the Jews who were

The princes slew him lest they should be kept at war. On the morrow they said It is naught!
Your dead was the best of us and your living one Is lord over us while all of you are lords.

The words 'lababi lababi' mean 'no matter' in the Himyari language. When Amr b. Tiban returned to the Yaman he could not sleep and insomnia took a firm hold of him. Being much concerned at this, he asked the physicians and those of the soothsayers and diviners who were seers about his trouble. One of them said: 'No man has ever killed his brother or kinsman treacherously as you killed your brother without losing his sleep and becoming a prey to insomnia.' At this he began to kill all the nobles who had urged him to murder his brother Hassan, till finally he came to Dhu Ruayn who claimed that Amr held the proof of his innocence, namely the paper which he had given him. He had it brought to him and when he had read the two verses he let him go, recognizing that he had given him good counsel. When Amr died the Himyarite kingdom fell into disorder and the people split up into parties.

HOW LAKHANIA DHU SHANATIR SEIZED THE THRONE OF THE YAMAN (Yemenite)

A Himyari who had no connexion with the royal house called Lakhnia Yanuf Dhu Shanatir arose and killed off their leading men and put the royal family to open shame. Of this man a certain Himyari recited:

Himyar was slaying its sons and exiling its princes,
Working its shame with its own hands,
Destroying its worldly prosperity with frivolous thoughts.

Even greater was the loss of their religion.
So did earlier generations bring their doom
By acts of injustice and profligacy.

Lakhnia was a most evil man—a sodomite. He used to summon a young man of the royal family and assault him in a room which he had constructed for this very purpose, so that he could not reign after him.

Then he used to go from this upper chamber of his to his guards and soldiers, (who were below) having put a toothpick in his mouth to let them know that he had accomplished his purpose. (Tabari: Then he would release him and he would appear before the guards and the people utterly disgraced.)

One day he sent for Zura Dhu Nuwas son of Tiban Asad brother of Hassan. He was a little boy when Hassan was murdered and had become a fine handsome young man of character and intelligence. When the messenger came he perceived what was intended and took a fine sharp knife and hid it under the sole of his foot and went to Lakhnia. As soon as they were alone he attacked him and Dhu Nuwas rushed upon him and stabbed him to death. He then cut off his head and put it in the window which overlooked the men below. He stuck the toothpick in his mouth and went out to the guards, who in coarse language inquired what had happened. Ask that head,' he replied. They looked at the window and there was Lakhnia's head cut off. So they went in pursuit of Dhu Nuwas and said: 'You must be our king and no one else, seeing that you have rid us of this disgusting fellow.'

THE REIGN OF DHU NUWAS

They made him king and all the tribes of Himyar joined him. He was the last of the Yamani kings and the man who had the ditch made. He was called Joseph and reigned for some considerable time.

In Najran* there were some people who held the religion of Isa b. Maryam (Jesus son of Maria), a virtuous and upright people who followed the Gospel. Their head was named Abdullah b. al-Thamir. The place where that religion took root was in Najran, at that time the centre of the Arabs' country; its people, and indeed the rest of the Arabs, were idolaters. A Christian by the name of Faymiyun had settled there and converted the people to his religion. (* The name Najran is linguistically connected to the word Nazorean. The Nazoreans, "the Keepers of the Law" [that is the Law of Moses] and otherwise known as the Ebionites [the poor or humble ones], were the direct and closest followers of the Messianic Movement of John the Baptist and Jesus the Nazorean. During the First Jewish-Roman War [66-73 AD.], they fled to the northern border of Yemen and build there a new home. The passages in Ibn Ishaq's Sira seem to confirm it.)

THE BEGINNING OF CHRISTIANITY IN NAJRAN (south-west Arabia)

Al-Mughira b. Abu Labid, a freedman of al-Akhnas, on the authority of Wahb b. Munabbih the Yamani told me that the origin of Christianity in Najran was due to a man named Faymiyun who was a righteous, earnest, ascetic man whose prayers were answered. He used to wander between towns: as soon as he became known in one town he moved to another, eating only what he earned, for he was a builder by trade using mud bricks.

He used to keep Sunday as a day of rest and would do no work then. He used to go into a desert place and pray there until the evening. While he was following his trade in a Syrian village withdrawing himself from men, one of the people there called Salih perceived what manner of man he was and felt a violent affection for him, so that unperceived by Faymiyun he used to follow him from place to place, until one Sunday he went as his wont was out into the desert followed by Salih. Salih chose a hidingplace and sat down where he could see him, not wanting him to know where he was. As Faymiyun stood to pray a tinnin, a seven-horned snake, came towards him and when Faymiyun saw it he cursed it and it died. Seeing the snake but not knowing what had happened to it and fearing for Faymiyun's safety, Salih could not contain himself and cried out: 'Faymiyun, a tinnin is upon you!' He took no notice and went on with his prayers until he had ended them. Night had come and he departed. He knew that he had been recognised and Salih knew that he had seen him. So he said to him: Faymiyun, you know that I have never loved anything as I love you; I want to be always with you and go wherever you go.' He replied: As you will. You know how I live and if you feel that you can bear the life well and good.' So Salih remained with him, and the people of the village were on the point of discovering his secret. For when a man suffering from a disease came in his way by chance he prayed for him and he was cured; but if he was summoned to a sick man he would not go. Now one of the villagers had a son who was blind and he asked about Faymiyun and was told that he never came when he was sent for, but that he was a man who built houses for people for a wage. Thereupon the man took his son and put him in his room and threw a garment over him and went to Faymiyun saying that he wanted him to do some work for him in his house and would he come and look at it, and they would agree on a price.

Arrived at the house Faymiyun asked what he wanted done, and after giving details the man suddenly whisked off the covering from the boy and said: 'O Faymiyun, one of God's creatures is in the state you see.

So pray for him.' Faymiyun did so and the boy got up entirely healed.

Knowing that he had been recognised he left the village followed by Salih, and while they were walking through Syria they passed by a great tree and a man called from it saying, 'I have been expecting you and saying, "When is he coming?" until I heard your voice and knew it was you.

Do not go until you have prayed over my grave for I am about to die.' He did die and he prayed over him until they buried him. Then he left followed by Salih until they reached the land of the Arabs who attacked them, and a caravan carried them off and sold them in Najran. At this time the people of Najran followed the religion of the Arabs worshipping a great palm-tree there. Every year they had a festival when they hung on the tree any fine garment they could find and women's jewels. Then they sallied out and devoted the day to it.

Faymiyun was sold to one noble and Salih to another. Now it happened that when Faymiyun was praying earnestly at night in a house which his master had assigned to him the whole house was filled with light so that it shone as it were without a lamp. His master was amazed at the sight, and asked him about his religion. Faymiyun told him and said that they were in error; as for the palm-tree it could neither help nor hurt; and if he were to curse the tree in the name of God, He would destroy it, for He was God Alone without companion.

'Then do so,' said his master, 'for if you do that we shall embrace your religion, and abandon our present faith.' After purifying himself and performing two rakas, he invoked God against the tree and God sent a wind against it which tore it from its roots and cast it on the ground. Then the people of Najran adopted his religion and he instructed them in the law of Isa b. Maryam (the teachings of Jesus son of Maria). Afterwards they suffered the misfortunes' which befell their co-religionists in every land. This was the origin of Christianity in Najran in the land of the Arabs. Such is the report of Wahb b. Munabbih on the authority of the people of Najran.

ABDULLAH IBN AL-THAMIR AND THOSE WHO PERISHED IN THE TRENCH

Yazid b. Ziyad told me on the authority of Mohammed b. Kab al-Qurazi, and a man of Najran also told me, that according to his people they used to worship idols. Najran is the largest town in which the people of the neighbouring district congregated, and in a village hard by there was a sorcerer who used to instruct the young men of Najran in his art. When Faymiyun came there—they did not call him by the name that Wahb b. Munabbih gives him but simply said a man came there—he put up a tent between Najran and the place where the sorcerer was. Now the people of Najran used to send their young men to that sorcerer to be taught sorcery and al-Thamir sent his son Abdullah along with them. When he passed by the man in the tent he was immensely struck by his prayers and devotion and began to sit with him and listen to him until he became a Muslim and acknowledged the unity of God and worshipped Him. He asked questions about the laws of Islam until when he became fully instructed therein he asked the man what was the Great Name of God. Although he knew it he kept it from him, saying: 'My dear young man, you will not be able to bear it; I fear that you are not strong enough! Now al-Thamir had no idea that his son Abdullah was not visiting the sorcerer along with the other young men. Abdullah seeing that his master had kept the knowledge from him and was afraid of his weakness, collected a number of sticks and whenever he taught him a name of God he wrote that name on a stick.

When he had got them all he lit a fire and began to throw them in one by one until when he reached the stick with the Great Name inscribed on it he threw it in, and it immediately sprang out untouched by the fire. Thereupon he took it and went and told his master that he knew the Great Name which he had concealed from him. The latter questioned him and when he learned how he had found out the secret he said, 'O my young friend (lit. son of my brother), you have got it, but keep it to yourself, though I do not think you will.'

Thereafter whenever Abdullah b. al-Thamir entered Najran and met any sick person he would say to him, 'O servant of God, will you acknowledge the unity of God and adopt my religion so that I may pray to God that he may heal you of your affliction?' The man would agree, acknowledge the unity of God, and become a Muslim, and he would pray for him and he would be healed, until in the end there was not a single sick person in Najran but had adopted his religion and become whole from his sickness. When the news reached the king he sent for him and said: 'You have corrupted the people of my town so that they are against me and have opposed my religion and the religion of my fathers. I will make a terrible example of you!' He replied: 'You have not the power to do that.' The king had him taken to a high mountain and thrown down headlong, but he reached the ground unhurt. Then he had him thrown into deep water in Najran from which no one had ever emerged alive, but he came out safely.

Having thus got the better of him Abdullah told him that he would not be able to kill him until he acknowledged the unity of God and believed in his religion; but that if he did that he would be given power to kill him. The king then acknowledged the unity of God and pronounced the creed of Abdullah, and hitting him a moderate blow with a stick which he had in his hand he killed him and died himself on the spot. The people of Najran accepted the religion of Abdullah b. al-Thamir according to the Gospel and the law which Isa b. Maryam (Jesus the son of Mary) brought. Afterwards they were overtaken by the misfortunes which befell their co-religionists. Such is the origin of Christianity in Najran. But God knows best (what the facts are).

Such is the report of Mohammed b. Kab. al-Qurazi and one of the men of Najran about Abdullah b. al-Thamir, but God knows best what happened.

Dhu Nuwas came against them with his armies and invited them to accept Judaism, giving them the choice between that or death: they chose death. So he dug trenches for them; burnt some in fire, slew some with the sword, and mutilated them until he had killed nearly twenty thousand of them. Concerning Dhu Nuwas and that army of his God revealed to his apostle:

On the trenchmakers be eternal ire
For their fuelled fire
Watching as the flames grew higher
The sufferings of the faithful, dire!
They only tormented them because they believed in God the Mighty, the Worthy to be Praised.

It is said that among those put to death by Dhu Nuwas was Abdullah b. al-Thamir, their leader and imam.

I was told by Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm that he was told that in the days of Umar b. al-Khattab a man of Najran dug up one of the ruins of Najran intending to make use of the land, when they came upon Abdullah b. al-Thamir under a grave; he was in a sitting posture with his hand covering a wound in his head and holding firmly to it. When his hand was removed the blood began to flow; when they let go of his hand it returned to its place and the flow of blood ceased. On his finger was a ring inscribed Allah is my Lord'. A report was sent to Umar and he replied:

'Leave him alone and cover in the grave' and his orders were duly carried out.

OF DAUS DHU THALABAN AND THE BEGINNING OF THE ABYSSINIAN DOMINATION AND THE HISTORY OF ARYAT WHO BECAME VICEROY OF THE YAMAN (Yemenites)

A man of Saba called Daus Dhu Thalaban escaped on a horse, and taking to the desert eluded them. He pressed on until he reached the Roman court in Constantinople, when he asked the emperor to aid him against Dhu Nuwas and his troops, telling him what had happened. The latter replied that his country was too distant for him to be able to help by sending troops, but that he would write to the Abyssinian king who was a Christian and whose territory was near the Yaman. Accordingly he did write ordering him to help Daus and seek revenge.

Daus went to the Negus with the emperor's letter, and he sent with him 70,000 Abyssinians, putting over them a man called Aryat. (Tabari: He ordered him to kill a third of the men, lay waste a third of the country, and seize a third of the women and children if he conquered.)

With the army there was a man called Abraha 'Split-face'. Aryat crossed the sea with Daus Dhu Thalaban and landed in the Yaman (in Yemen). Dhu Nuwas with the Himyarites and such of the Yamani tribes as were under his command came out against him, and after an engagement Dhu Nuwas and his force was put to flight (because of the disordered state of the Yamani army and their feeble opposition). Seeing that his cause was lost Dhu Nuwas turned his horse seawards beating it until it entered the waves and carried him through the shallows out into the deep water. This was the last that was seen of him. Aryat entered the Yaman and took possession of it. (Tabari: He carried out the Negus's orders, and sent a third of the women and children to him. He stayed on in the country and reduced it to subjection.)

One of the Yamani remembering how Daus had brought the Abyssinians upon them said:

Not like Daus and not like the things he carried in his saddle bag.

And this saying has become proverbial in the Yaman until this day.

Dhu Jadan the Himyari (Tabari: recording their humiliation after their former glory and Aryat's destruction of their castles Silhin, Baynun, and Ghumdan unique in their splendour) recited:

Gently! Tears cannot recall what is sped.
Fret not thyself for those who are dead.
After Baynun no stones nor trace remain,
And after Silhin shall men build such houses again?
Baynun, Silhin, and Ghumdan are Yamani castles which Aryat destroyed and none like them existed.

He continued:
Peace, confound you! You can't turn me from my purpose

Thy scolding dries my spittle!
To the music of singers in times past 'twas fine
When we drank our fill of purest noblest wine.
Drinking freely of wine brings me no shame
If my behaviour no boon-companion would blame.
For death no man can hold back
Though he drink the perfumed potions of the quack.
Nor monk in his secluded cell on high
Where the vulture round his nest doth fly.
You have heard of Ghumdan's towers:
From the mountain top it lowers
Well carpentered, with stones for stay,
Plastered with clean, damp, slippery clay;
Oil lamps within it show
At even like the lightning's glow.
Beside its wall the palm-trees fine
With ripening fruit in clusters shine.
This once-new castle is ashes today,
The flames have eaten its beauty away.
Dhu Nuwas humbled gave up his castle great
And warned his people of their coming fate.

With reference to that, Ibn al-Dhiba al-Thaqafi said:
By thy life there is no escape for a man when death and old age seize him.

By thy life a man has nowhere to flee —no asylum
Could there be after Himyar's tribes were destroyed one morn by calamity's stroke,

A thousand thousand with spearmen (glittering) like the sky before rain.

Their cry deafened the chargers and they put to flight the warriors with their pungent smell.

Witches as the sand in number the very sap of trees dried at their approach.

Amr b. Madi Karib al-Zubaydi said concerning a dispute which he had with Qays b. Makshuh al-Muradi when he heard that he had threatened him, and bringing to memory the lost glory of Himyar:

Do you threaten me as though you were Dhu Ruayn
Or Dhu Nuwas in the days of their prime?
Many a man before you was prosperous
With a kingdom firmly rooted among men.
Ancient as the days of Ad
Exceeding fierce, overcoming tyrants,
Yet his people perished
And he became a wanderer among men.

HOW ABRAHA SEIZED POWER IN THE YAMAN AND KILLED ARYAT

Aryat held sway in the Yaman for some years and then Abraha the Abyssinian (who was in his army) disputed his authority, and the Abyssinians split into two parties each claiming supporters. When war was about to begin, Abraha sent to Aryat asking him to avert the danger of internecine war and inviting him to settle the dispute by personal combat, the winner to be the sole commander of the army. Aryat agreed and Abraha went forth to meet him. He was a short fat man holding the Christian faith; and Aryat advanced against him spear in hand; he was a big, tall, handsome man.' Abraha had a young man called Atawda at his back to defend him against attack from the rear. Aryat raised his spear striking at Abraha's skull and hit him on the forehead splitting his eyebrow, nose, 2g eye, and mouth. It was for this reason that he was called al-Ashram (split-face). Thereupon Atawda coming out from behind Abraha attacked Aryat and killed him, and Aryat's army joined Abraha, and the Abyssinians in the Yaman accepted him as their chief. (Then Atawda cried: Atawda you see, of an evil company; parentless in nobility', meaning that Abraha's slave had killed Aryat. Al-Ashram asked what he wanted, for though he had killed him blood-money must be paid. He asked and obtained from him the right of prima noctis in Yaman.) Abraha paid blood-money for killing Aryat. (All this happened without the knowledge of the Negus.)

When the news of this affair reached the Negus he was filled with rage and said: 'Has he attacked my amir and killed him without any order from me? Then he swore an oath that he would not leave Abraha alone until he had trodden his land and cut off his forelock. So Abraha shaved his head and filled a leather bag with the earth of the Yaman and sent it to the Negus with the following letter: 'O King, Aryat was only thy slave and I too am thy slave. We disputed about your orders; everyone must obey you; but I was stronger, firmer, and more skilful in managing the affairs of the Abyssinians. Now when I was told of the king's oath I shaved the whole of my head and I send it to you with a bag of the dust of my land that you may put it beneath your feet and thus keep your oath concerning me.'

When this message reached the Negus he was reconciled to him and wrote to him that he was to stay in the Yaman until further orders; so Abraha remained in the Yaman.

(When Abraha perceived that the Negus was reconciled and had made him viceregent of the Yaman, he sent to Abu Murra b. Dhu Yazan and took away from him his wife Rayhana d. Alqama b. Malik b. Zayd b. Kahlan. Abu Murra who is Dhu Jadan had a son by her—Madi Karib. Afterwards she bore to Abraha a son Masruq and a daughter Basbasa. Abu Murra took to flight. His slave Atawda went on exercising his right in Yaman until a man of Himyar of Khatham attacked and killed him; and when the news reached Abraha, who was a lenient noble character, a Christian of temperate habits, he told the people that it was high time that they had an official with due self-control and that had he known that Atawda would have chosen such a reward for his services he would not have allowed him to choose his reward. Further no bloodwit would be exacted and he would not take any action against them for killing Atawda. Tabari.)

THE HISTORY OF THE ELEPHANT AND THE STORY OF THE INTERCALATORS

Then Abraha built the cathedral in SanaA, such a church as could not be seen elsewhere in any part of the world at that time. He wrote to the Negus saying: 'I have built a church for you, O King, such as has not been built for any king before you. I shall not rest until I have diverted the Arabs' pilgrimage to it.' When the Arabs were talking about this letter of his, one of the calendar intercalators was enraged. He was of the B. Fuqaym b. Adiy b. Amir b. Thalaba b. al-Harith b. Malik b. Kinana b. Khuzayma b. Mudrika b. Ilyas b. Mudar. The intercalators are those who used to adjust the months for the Arabs in the time of ignorance. They would make one of the holy months profane, and make one of the profane months holy to balance the calendar. It was about this that God sent down: 'Postponement (of a sacred month) is but added infidelity by which those who disbelieve are misled. They make it (the month) profane one year and make it sacred the next year, that they may make up the number of the months which God has made sacred.'

The first to impose this system of intercalation on the Arabs was al-Qalammas who was Hudhayfa b. Abd b. Fuqaym b. Adiy b. Amir b. Thalaba b. al-Harith b. Malik b. Kinana b. Khuzayma; his son Abbad followed him; then his descendants Qala', Umayya, Auf, and Abu Thumama Junada b. Auf who was the last of them, for he was overtaken by Islam. When the Arabs had finished pilgrimage, it used to be their practice to gather round him and he would declare the four sacred months Rajab, Dhul-Qada, Dhul-Hijja, and al-Muharram. If he wanted to free a period he would free al-Muharram and they would declare it free and ban Safar in its place so as to make up the number of the four sacred months.

When they wanted to return from Mecca, he got up and said: 'O God, I have made one of the Safars free for them, the first Safar, and I have postponed the other till next year.'

About this Umayr b. Qays Jadhul-Tian, one of the B. Firas b. Ghanm b. Thalaba b. Malik b. Kinana, boasting of this determining of the months, improvised:

Maadd knows that my people are the most honourable of men and have noble ancestors. Who has escaped us when we seek vengeance and whom have we not made to champ the bit? Are we not Maadd's calendar-makers, making profane months sacred?

The Kinanite went forth until he came to the cathedral and defiled it. Then he returned to his own country. Hearing of the matter Abraha made inquiries and learned that the outrage had been committed by an Arab who came from the temple in Mecca where the Arabs went on pilgrimage, and that he had done this in anger at his threat to divert the Arabs' pilgrimage to the cathedral, showing thereby that it was unworthy of reverence.

Abraha was enraged and swore that he would go to this temple and destroy it. (Tabari: With Abraha there were some Arabs who had come to seek his bounty, among them Mohammed b. Khuzal b. Khuzaba al-Dhakwani, al-Sulami, with a number of his tribesmen including a brother of his called Qays. While they were with him a feast of Abraha occurred and he sent to invite them to the feast. Now he used to eat an animal's testicles, so when the invitation was brought they said, 'By God, if we eat this the Arabs will hold it against us as long as we live.' Thereupon Mohammed got up and went to Abraha and said, 'O King, this is a festival of ours in which we eat only the loins and shoulders.' Abraha replied that he would send them what they liked, because his sole purpose in inviting them was to show that he honoured them. Then he crowned Mohammed and made him amir of Mudar and ordered him to go among the people to invite them to pilgrimage at his cathedral which he had built. When Mohammed got as far as the land of Kinana the people of the lowland knowing what he had come for sent a man of Hudhayl called Urwa b. Hayyad al-Milasi who shot him with an arrow, killing him. His brother Qays who was with him fled to Abraha and told him the news, which increased his rage and fury and he swore to raid the B. Kinana and destroy the temple.)

So he commanded the Abyssinians to prepare and make ready, and sallied forth with the elephant. News of this plunged the Arabs into alarm and anxiety and they decided that it was incumbent on them to fight against him when they heard that he meant to destroy the Kaaba, God's holy house.

A member of one of the ruling families in the Yaman, Dhu Nafr by name, summoned his people and such of the Arabs as would follow him to fight Abraha and stop him from attacking and destroying God's holy house. A certain number supported him, but after a battle Dhu Nafr and his followers were put to flight and he himself was taken prisoner and brought to Abraha. When he was about to put him to death Dhu Nafr pleaded for his life on the ground that he would be more useful to him alive than dead. Abraha then gave him his life but kept him in fetters. He was a merciful man.

Abraha continued on his road to Mecca until in the country of Khatham he was opposed by Nufayl b. Habib al-Khathami with their two tribes Shahrana and Nahis and such of the Arab tribes as followed him. After an engagement he was defeated and taken prisoner. When Abraha thought of killing him, Nufayl said: 'Do not kill me, O King, for I will be your guide in the Arab country. Here are my two hands as surety that the two tribes of Khatham, Shahrana and Nahis, will obey you.' So Abraha let him go.

He continued with him as a guide until they reached Taif when Masud b. Muattib b. Malik b. Kab b. Amr b. Sad b. Auf b. Thaqif came out to him with the men of Thaqif. Thaqif's name was Qasy b. al-Nabit b. Munabbih b. Mansur b. Yaqdum b. Afsa b. Dumi b. Iyad b. Nizar b. MaAdd b. Adnan. Umayya b. Abu Salt al-Thaqafi said:

My people are Iyad, would that they were near Or would that they had stayed (here) though their camels might be thin.'

When on the march Iraq's wide plain
Is theirs—moreover they read and write.
He also said:

If you ask me who I am, Lubayna, and of my line
I will tell you the certain truth.

We belong to al-Nabit the father of Qasy
To Mansur son of Yaqdum (our) forefathers.

They said to him: O King, we are thy servants attentive and obedient to you. We have no quarrel with you and our temple—meaning that of al-Lat—is not the one you seek. You want only the temple in Mecca, and we will send with you a man to guide you there. He therefore passed on leaving them unmolested.

As to al-Lat it was a temple of theirs in (the City of) al-Taif which they used to venerate as the Kaaba is venerated. So they sent with him Abu Righal to guide him on the way to Mecca, and when he had brought him as far as al-Mughammis Abu Righal died there and the Arabs stoned his grave. This is the grave which people in al-Mughammis still Arrived here, Abraha sent an Abyssinian called al-Aswad b. Mafsud (Other authorities write Maqsud. Mafsud means 'slash-faced'.) with some cavalry as far as Mecca and the latter sent off to him the plunder of the people of Tihama, the Quraysh and others, among it two hundred camels belonging to Abdul-Muttalib b. Hashim, who at that time was the leading shaykh of (the) Quraysh. At first (the) Quraysh, Kinana, and Hudhayl and others who were in the holy place meditated battle, but seeing that they had not the power to offer resistance they gave up the idea.

Abraha sent Hunaja the Himyarite to Mecca instructing him to inquire who was the chief notable of the country and to tell him that the king's message was that he had not come to fight them, but only to destroy the temple. If they offered no resistance there was no cause for bloodshed, and if he wished to avoid war he should return with him. On reaching Mecca Hunaja was told that Abdul-Muttalib b. Hashim b. Abd Manaf b. Qusayy was the leading notable, so he went to him and delivered Abraha's message. Abdul-Muttalib replied:

God knows that we do not wish to fight him for we have not the power to do so. This is Allah's sanctuary and the temple of His friend Abraham—or words to that effect—If He defends it against him it is His temple and His sanctuary; and if he lets him have it by God we cannot defend it! Hunata replied that he must come with him to Abraha, for he was ordered to bring him back with him.

So accompanied by one of his sons Abdul-Muttalib came to the camp and inquired for Dhu Nafr, for he was a friend of his. He went in to see him as he was in confinement and asked him if he could do anything to help them in their trouble. Dhu Nafr replied: 'What use is a man held a prisoner in the hands of a king, expecting to be killed at any moment?'

I can do nothing to help you except that Unays the keeper of the elephant being a friend of mine, I will send to him and commend your case to him as strongly as possible asking him to try to get you permission to see the king. So speak as you think fit, and he will intercede for you with the king if he is able to do so.' So Dhu Nafr sent to Unays saying, 'The king has taken two hundred camels belonging to Abdul-Muttalib, lord of (the) Quraysh and master of the Meccan (caravan) well who feeds men in the plain and wild creatures on the top of the mountains, and is now here. So ask permission for him to see the king and help him as far as you can.' He said he would do so and repeated these words to the king, adding that Abdul-Muttalib wished to see him and talk to him about a pressing matter. Abraha agreed to see him. Now Abdul-Muttalib was a most impressive, handsome, and dignified man, and when Abraha saw him he treated him with the greatest respect so that he would not let him sit beneath him. He could not let the Abyssinians see him sitting beside him on his royal throne, so he got off his throne and sat upon his carpet and made Abdul-Muttalib sit beside him there. Then he told his interpreter to inquire what he wanted, and the reply was that he wanted the king to return two hundred camels of his which he had taken. Abraha replied through the interpreter, 'You pleased me much when I saw you; then I was much displeased with you when I heard what you said. Do you wish to talk to me about two hundred camels of yours which I have taken, and say nothing about your religion and the religion of your forefathers which I have come to destroy?' Abdul-Muttalib replied, I am the owner of the camels and the temple has an owner who will defend it.' When the king replied that he could not defend it against him he said, 'That remains to be seen.' ('Give me back my camels.')

Some learned people allege that when Abdul-Muttalib went to Abraha when he sent Hunata to him, there accompanied him Ya'mur b. Nufatha b. Adiy b. al-Duil b. Bakr b. Abd Manaf b. Kinana, at that time chief of B. Bakr, and Khuwaylid b. Wathila, then chief of Hudhayl. They offered to give Abraha a third of the cattle of the lowland on condition that he would withdraw from them and not destroy the temple, but he refused their request; but God knows whether this was so or not. At any rate Abraha restored to Abdul-Muttalib the camels which he had taken.

When they left him, Abdul-Muttalib went back to (the) Quraysh and having given them the news ordered them to withdraw from Mecca and take up defensive positions on the peaks and in the passes of the mountains for fear of the excesses of the soldiers. Abdul-Muttalib took hold of the metal knocker of the Kaaba, and a number of (the) Quraysh stood with him praying to God and imploring his help against Abraha and his army. As he was holding the knocker of the temple door, Abdul-Muttalib said:

O God, a man protects his dwelling so protect Thy dwellings.

Let not their cross and their craft tomorrow overcome Thy craft.

Ikrima b. Amir b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf b. Abd al-Dar b. Qusayy said:

O God, humiliate al-Aswad b. Mafsud
Who took a hundred camels wearing their collars;
Between Hira and Thabir and the deserts,
He shut them in when they should be pasturing freely,
And delivered them to the black barbarians, Withdraw from him thine aid, O Lord, for Thou art worthy to be praised.

Abdul-Muttalib then let go the knocker of the door of the Kaaba and went off with his (the) Quraysh companions to the mountain tops where they took up defensive positions waiting to see what Abraha would do when he occupied Mecca. In the morning Abraha prepared to enter the town and made his elephant ready for battle and drew up his troops. His intention was to destroy the temple and then return to the Yaman. When they made the elephant (its name was Mahmud) face Mecca, Nufayl b. Habib came up to its flank and taking hold of its ear said: 'Kneel, Mahmud, or go straight back whence you came, for you are in God's holy land!' He let go of its ear and the elephant knelt, and Nufayl made off at top speed for the top of the mountain. The troops beat the elephant to make it get up but it would not; they beat its head with iron bars; they stuck hooks into its underbelly and scarified it; but it would not get up. Then they made it face the Yaman and immediately it got up and started off. When they set it towards the north and the east it did likewise, but as soon as they directed it towards Mecca it knelt down.

Then God sent upon them birds from the sea like swallows and starlings; each bird carried three stones, like peas and lentils, one in its beak and two between its claws. Everyone who was hit died but not all were hit. They withdrew in flight by the way they came, crying out for Nufayl b. Habib to guide them on the way to the Yaman. When he saw the punishment which God had brought down on them Nufayl said:

Where can one flee when God pursueth?
Al-Ashram is the conquered not the conqueror.

Nufayl also said:

Our greetings, Rudayna!
You rejoice our eyes this morning!
[Your fuel-seeker came to us last night,
But we had naught to give him.]
If you had seen, but you will not see, Rudayna,
What we saw on al-Muhassab's side'
You would have forgiven me and praised my action
And not have been vexed at what has passed and gone.

I praised God when I saw the birds,
And I feared the stones that might fall upon us.
Everyone was asking for Nufayl
As though I owed the Abyssinians a debt.

As they withdrew they were continually falling by the wayside dying miserably by every waterhole. Abraha was smitten in his body, and as they took him away his fingers fell off one by one. Where the finger had been, there arose an evil sore exuding pus and blood, so that when they brought him to Sanaa he was like a young fledgeling. They allege that as he died his heart burst from his body. (A. Deserters from the army, labourers, and campfollowers remained in Mecca and became workers and shepherds for the population.)

Yaqub b. Utba told me that he was informed that that year was the first time that measles and smallpox had been seen in Arabia; and, too, that it was the first time that bitter herbs like rue, colocynth (bitter apple and bitter cucumber), and Asclepias gigantea (milkweeds) were seen.

When God sent Mohammed he specially recounted to the Quraysh his goodness and favour in turning back the Abyssinians in order to preserve their state and permanence. 'Did you not see how your Lord dealt with the owners of the elephant? Did He not reduce their guile to sheer terror? And sent upon them flocks of birds, throwing hard clay stones upon them, making them as blades of corn that have been devoured.'

And again: Tor the uniting of (the) Quraysh, their uniting the caravans to ply summer and winter. Then let them worship the Lord of this temple, who has fed them so that they hunger not, and made them safe from fear', i.e. so that their status should remain unaltered because of God's good purpose towards them if they would receive it.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr via Amra daughter of Abdul-Rahman b. Sad b. Zurara told me that Aisha said: I saw the leader of the elephant and its groom walking about Mecca blind and crippled begging for food.'

REFERENCES IN POETRY TO THE STORY OF THE ELEPHANT

When God turned back the Abyssinians from Mecca and executed His vengeance upon them, the Arabs held the Quraysh in great honour, saying, 'They are the people of God: God fought for them and thwarted the attack of their enemies.' On this theme they composed many poems.

Thus Abdullah b. al-Zibrara b. Adiy b. Qays b. Adiy b. Sad b. Sahn b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir said:

Withdraw from the vale of Mecca for
From of old its sanctuary has not been violated.
When it was sanctified, Sirius had not been created.
No mighty man has ever attacked it.

Ask the commander of the Abyssinians what he saw.
He who knows what happened will tell the ignorant.
Sixty thousand men returned not home,
Nor did their sick recover after their return.
Ad and Jurhum were (in Mecca) before them.
God has set it above all creatures.

The words 'nor did their sick recover after their return' refer to Abraha whom they carried with them when he was smitten, until he died in Sana.

Abu Qays b. al-Aslat al-Ansari al-Khatmi, Sayfi by name said:

His work it was on the day of the Abyssinian elephant.

Whenever they urged it forward it held its ground,
(They drove) their hooks beneath its flanks,
They split its nose and it was torn.
They used a knife as a whip.
When they applied it to its back it made a wound.
It turned and faced the way it had come.
Those there bore the burden of their injustice.
God sent a wind bringing pebbles from above them
And they huddled together like lambs.
Their priests urged them to endure,
But they bleated like sheep.

Abu Qays b. al-Aslat also said:

Rise and pray to your Lord and stroke
The corners of this temple between the mountains.

He gave you a convincing test
On the day of Abu Yaksum leader of the squadrons.
His cavalry was in the plain, his infantry
Upon the passes of the distant hills.
When the help of the Lord of the Throne reached you,
His armies repulsed them, pelting them and covering them with dust.
Quickly they turned tail in flight, and none
But a few returned to his people from the army.

Talib b. Abu Talib b. Abdul-Muttalib said:

Know you not what happened in the war of Dahis
And Abu Yaksum's army when it filled the pass?
But for the help of God the Sole Existent One
You would have been unable to save your lives.

Abu al-Salt b. Abu Rabia al-Thaqafi referring to the elephant and to the Hanafi religion being that of Abraham said:

The signs of our Lord arc illuminating.
None but infidels doubt them.
Night and Day were created and all
Is abundantly plain, its reckoning is fixed.
Then the merciful Lord revealed the day
By the sun whose rays are seen everywhere.
He held the elephant fast in al-Mughmmas until
It sank to the ground as though it were hamstrung.
Its trunk curled ring-wise; it lay motionless as;
A boulder flung down from Kabkab's rocks.
Round it Kinda's kings, warriors,
Mighty hawks in war.

They abandoned it and departed headlong
All of them; the shank of each one of them was broken.

In God's sight at the Resurrection every religion
But that of the hanif is doomed to perdition.

When Abraha died his son Yaksum became king of the Abyssinians.

(Tabari: Himyar and the tribes of Yaman were humiliated under the heel of the Abyssinians. They took their women and killed their men and seized their young men to act as interpreters.) When Yaksum b. Abraha died his brother Masruq b. Abraha reigned over the Abyssinians in the Yaman.

THE JOURNEY OF SAYF B. DHU YAZAN AND THE RULE OF WAHRIZ IN THE YAMAN

When the people of the Yaman had long endured oppression, Sayf b. Dhu Yazan the Himyarite, who was known as Abu Murra, went to the Roman emperor and complained to him of his troubles, asking him to drive out the Abyssinians and take over the country. He asked him to send what forces he pleased and promised him the kingdom of the Yaman (Yemenites).

The emperor paid no attention to his request, so he went to al-Numan b. al-Mundhir, who was Chosroes' governor at al-Hira and the surrounding country of Iraq. When he complained of the Abyssinians, al-Numan b. al-Mundhir told him that he paid a formal visit every year to Chosroes and he asked him to stay with him until then. Accordingly he took him with him and introduced him to Chosroes. Now he used to sit in his audience chamber which contained his crown. According to reports, his crown was like a huge grain-measure with rubies, pearls, and topazes set in gold and silver, suspended by a golden chain from the top of the dome in his hall of audience. Such was the weight of the crown that his neck could not bear it. He was hidden behind a robe until he sat on his throne; then his head was inserted into the crown, and when he was settled comfortably on his throne the robes were taken from him. Everyone who saw him for the first time fell to his knees in awe. When Sayf b. Dhu Yazan entered his presence he fell to his knees.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

He said: 'O King, ravens 1 have taken possession of our country.' Chosroes asked, 'What ravens, Abyssinians or Sindians?' 'Abyssinians,' he replied, 'And I have come to you for help and that you may assume the kingship of my country.' He answered, 'Your country is far distant and has little to attract me; I cannot endanger a Persian army in Arabia and there is no reason why I should do so.' Then he made him a present of 10,000 drachmae sterling and invested him in a fine robe. Sayf went out with the silver and began to scatter it among the people; (Tabari: Boys and slaves of both sexes scrambled for the coins). When the king was told of this he thought it very extraordinary and sent for him and said, 'You mean to throw away a royal gift!' He answered: 'What use is silver to me? The mountains of my country from which I come are nothing but gold and silver.' This he said to excite his cupidity. Chosroes thereupon gathered his advisers together and asked their opinion about the man and his project.

One of them reminded the king that in his prisons there were men who were condemned to death. If he were to send them with him and they were killed, that would merely be the fate that he had determined for them; on the other hand, if they conquered the country he would have added to his empire. Thereupon Chosroes sent those who were confined in his prisons to the number of eight hundred men.

He put in command of them a man called Wahriz who was of mature age and of excellent family and lineage. They set out in eight ships, two of which foundered, so that only six reached the shores of Aden. Sayf brought all the people that he could to. Wahriz saying, 'My foot is with your foot, we die or conquer together.' 'Right,' said Wahriz. Masruq b. Abraha the king of Yaman came out against him with his army, and Wahriz sent one of his sons to fight them so as to get experience in their way of fighting. His son was killed and he was filled with rage against them. When the men were drawn up in their ranks Wahriz said, 'Show me their king.' They said, 'Do you see a man on an elephant with a crown on his head and a red ruby on his forehead? That is their king.' 'Let him be,' he said, and they waited a long time and then he said, 'What is he riding now?' They said: 'He is now bestride a horse'; again they waited. He asked the same question and they said he was bestride a mule. Said Wahriz: An ass is filly! A weak creature, and so is his kingdom. I will shoot him. If you see that his followers have not moved, then stand fast until I give you permission to advance, for I shall have missed the fellow.

But if you see the people flocking round him I shall have hit him, so fall upon them.' He then bent his bow (the story goes that it was so tough that no one but he could bend it) and ordered that his eyebrows be fastened back,' then he shot Masruq and split the ruby in his forehead and the arrow pierced his head and came out at the back of his neck. He fell off his mount and the Abyssinians gathered round him. When the Persians fell upon them, they fled and were killed as they bolted in all directions. Wahriz advanced to enter into Sana, and when he reached its gate he said that his standard should never be lowered and he ordered them to destroy the gate and went in with his flag flying.

Sayf b. Dhu Yazan al-Himyari said:

Men thought the two kings had made peace
And those who heard of their reconciliation found the matter was very grave.
We slew the prince Masruq and reddened the sands
with blood.
The new prince, the people's prince,
Wahriz swore an oath that
He would drink no wine until he had captured prisoners and spoil.

Abu al-Salt b. Abu Rabia al-Thaqafi said:

Let those seek vengeance who are like Ibn Dhu Yazan

Who spent long years at sea because of his enemies,
When the time for his journey came he went to Caesar

But did not attain what he sought.
Then he turned to Chosroes after ten years,
Counting his life and money cheap,
Until he came bringing the Persians with him.
By my life you were swift in action,
What a noble band came out:
Never were their like seen among men!
Nobles, princes, mighty men, archers,
Lions who train their cubs in the jungle!
From curved bows they shot arrows
Stout as the poles of the howdah
Bringing the victim a speedy death.
You sent lions against black dogs,
Their fugitives are scattered all over the earth.
So drink your fill, wearing your crown,
On Ghumdan's top reclining in a house you have chosen.
Drink your fill, for they are dead,
And walk proudly today in your flowing robes.
Such are noble deeds! not two pails of milk mingled with water
Which afterwards become urine.

Adly b. Zayd al-Hiri, one of B. Tamim, said:

What is there after SanA' in which once lived
Rulers of a kingdom whose gifts were lavish?
Its builder raised it to the flying clouds,
Its lofty chambers gave forth musk.
Protected by mountains against the attacks of enemies,
Its lofty heights unscalable.
Pleasant was the voice of the night owl there,
Answered at even by a flute player.
Fate brought to it the Persian army
With their knights in their train;
They travelled on mules laden with death,
While the asses' foals ran beside them
Until the princes saw from the top of the fortress
Their squadrons shining with steel,
The day that they called to the barbarians and al-Yaksim
'Cursed be he who runs away!'
'Twas a day of which the story remains,
But a people of long established1 dignity came to an end.

Persians2 replaced the native born,
The days were dark and mysterious.
After noble sons of Tubba,
Persian generals were firmly settled there.

(Tabari: When Wahriz had conquered the Yaman and driven out the Abyssinians he wrote to Chosroes telling him of what had been done and sending him captured treasure. In his reply the king told him to appoint Sayf king of the Yaman. He also gave Sayf instructions to collect taxes every year and to remit them to him. He summoned Wahriz to his presence and Sayf became king, he being the son of Dhu Yazan of the Kings of the Yaman. This is what Ibn Humayd told me from Salama on the authority of Ibn Ishaq.)

(When Wahriz had gone to Chosroes and made Sayf king of the Yaman, the latter began to attack the Abyssinians, killing them and slaying the women with child until he exterminated all but an insignificant number of miserable creatures whom he employed as slaves and runners to go before him with their lances. Before very long he was out with these armed slaves when suddenly they surrounded him and stabbed him to death. One of them established himself as leader and they went through the Yaman slaying and laying waste the country. When the Persian King heard of this he sent Wahriz with 4,000 Persians and ordered him to kill every Abyssinian or child of an Abyssinian and an Arab woman, great or small, and not leave alive a single man with crisp curly hair. Wahriz arrived and in due course carried out these instructions and wrote to tell the king that he had done so. The king then gave him viceregal authority and he ruled under Chosroes until his death.)

THE END OF THE PERSIAN AUTHORITY IN THE YAMAN (Yemen)

Wahriz and the Persians dwelt in the Yaman, and the Abna who are in the Yaman today are descended from the survivors of that Persian army. The period of Abyssinian domination from the entry of Aryat to the death of Masruq ibn Abraha at the hands of the Persians and the expulsion of the Abyssinians was seventy-two years. The successive princes were four, Aryat, Abraha, Yaksum, and Masruq.

It is said that on a rock in the Yaman there was an inscription dating from olden times:

To whom belongs the kingdom of Dhimar?
To Himyar the righteous.
To whom belongs the kingdom of Dhimar?
To the evil Abyssinians.
To whom belongs the kingdom of Dhimar?
To the free Persians.
To whom belongs the kingdom of Dhimar?
To (the) Quraysh the merchants.
Dhimar means the Yaman or Sana
Al-Asha of B. Qays b. Thalaba said when the words of Satih and his companion were fulfilled:
'No woman has ever seen, as she saw, the truth like the truth of al-Dhibi when he prophesied.' The Arabs called him al-Dhibi because he was the son of Rabia b. Masud b. Mazin b. Dhib.

THE DESCENDANTS OF NIZAR B. MAADD

Nizar b. Maadd begat three sons: Mudar, Rabia, and Anmar. Anmar was the father of Khatham and Bajila. Jarir b. Abdullah al-Bajali who was chief of the Bajila (of whom someone said: 'But for Jarir, Bajila would have perished. A fine man and a poor tribe') said when he was appealing against al-Furafisa al-Kalbi to al-Aqra b. Habis al-Tamimi b. Iqal b. Mujashi b. Darim b. Malik b. Hanzala b. Malik b. Zayd Manat:
O Aqra b. Habis, O Aqra,
If thy brother is overthrown thou wilt be overthrown.

and said:

Ye two sons of Nizar help your brother.
My father I wot is your father.
A brother who is your ally will not be worsted this day.

They went to the Yaman and remained there.
Mudar b. Nizar begat two sons: Ilyas and Aylan. Ilyas begat three sons: Mudrika, Tabikha, and Qama. Their mother was Khindif, a Yamanite woman.

The name of Mudrika was Amir and the name of Tabikha was Amr. There is a story that when they were pasturing their camels they hunted some game and sat down to cook it, when some raiders swooped upon their camels. Amir said to Amr: 'Will you go after the camels or will you cook this game?' Amr replied that he would go on cooking, so Amir went after the camels and brought them back. When they returned and told their father he said to Amir: 'You are Mudrika (the one who overtakes), and to Amr he said 'You are Tabikha' (the cook).

When their mother heard the news she came hurriedly from her tent and he said: 'You arc trotting!' (khandafa = a quick, ambling, halfrunning gait) and so she was called Khindif.

As to Qama the genealogists of Mudar assert that KhuzaA was one of the sons of Amr b. Luhayy b. Qama b. Ilyas.

THE STORY OF AMR B. LUHAYY AND AN ACCOUNT OF THE IDOLS OF THE ARABS

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm on the authority of his father told me as follows: I was told that the apostle of God said:

I saw Amr b. Luhayy dragging his intestines in hell, and when I asked him about those who had lived between his time and mine he said that they had perished.'

Mohammed b. Ibrahim b. al-Harith al-Tamimi told me that Abu Salih al-Samman told him that he heard Abu Hurayra say: I heard the apostle of God saying to Aktham b. al-Jaun al-Khuzai, 'O Aktham I saw Amr b. Luhayy b. Qama b. Khindif dragging his intestines in hell, and never did I see two men so much alike as you and he!' 'Will this resemblance injure me?' asked Aktham. 'No,' said the apostle, 'for you are a believer and he is an infidel. He was the first to change the religion of Ishmael, to set up idols, and institute the custom of the bahira, saiba, wasila, and hami.'

They say that the beginning of stone worship among the sons of Ishmael was when Mecca became too small for them and they wanted more room in the country. Everyone who left the town took with him a stone from the sacred area to do honour to it. Wherever they settled they set it up and walked round it as they went round the Kaaba. This led them to worship what stones they pleased and those which made an impression on them. Thus as generations passed they forgot their primitive faith and adopted another religion for that of Abraham and Ishmael. They worshipped idols and adopted the same errors as the peoples before them. Yet they retained and held fast practices going back to the time of Abraham, such as honouring the temple and going round it, the great and little pilgrimage, and the standing on Arafat and Muzdalifa, sacrificing the victims, and the pilgrim cry at the great and little pilgrimage, while introducing elements which had no place in the religion of Abraham. Thus, Kinana and (the) Quraysh used the pilgrim cry: At Thy service, O God, at Thy service! At Thy service, Thou without an associate but the associate Thou hast. Thou ownest him and what he owns.' They used to acknowledge his unity in their cry and then include their idols with God, putting the ownership of them in His hand. God said to Mohammed: 'Most of them do not believe in God without associating others with Him,' i.e. they do not acknowledge My oneness with knowledge of My reality, but they associate with Me one of My creatures.

The people of Noah had images to which they were devoted. God told His apostle about them when He said: 'Forsake not your gods; forsake not Wudd and Suwa and Yaghuth and Yauq and Nasr.' And they had led many astray.' Among those who had chosen those idols and used their names as compounds when they forsook the religion of Ishmael—both Ishmaelites and others—was Hudhayl b. Mudrika b. Ilyas b. Mudar. They adopted Suwa and they had him in Ruhah; and Kalb b. Wabra of Quda'a who adopted Wudd in Dumatul-Jandal. Kab b. Malik al-Ansari said:

We forsook al-Lat and al-Uzza and Wudd.
We stripped off their necklaces and earrings.

AnUm of Tayyi' and the people of Jurash of Madhhij adopted Yaghuth in Jurash.

Khaywan, a clan of Hamdan, adopted Ya uq in the land of Hamdan in the Yaman.

Dhul-Kala of Himyar adopted Nasr in the Himyar country.

Khaulan had an idol called Ammanas in the Khaulan country. According to their own account they used to divide their crops and cattle between it and Allah. If any of Allah's portion which they had earmarked for him came into Ammanas's portion they left it to him; but if any of Ammanas's portion was in Allah's portion they returned it to him. They are a clan of Khaulan called al-Adim. Some say that it was concerning them that God revealed: 'They assign to Allah of the [crops] and cattle he has created a portion; and they say this is Allah's—in their assertion—and this is for our partners. Thus what is for their partners does not reach Allah and what is for Allah goes to their partners—Evil is their judgement!' The B. Milkan b. Kinana b. Khuzayma b. Mudrikab. Ilyas b. Mudar had an image called Sad, a lofty rock in a desert plain in their country. They have a story that one of their tribesmen took some of his stock camels to the rock to stand by it so as to acquire its virtue. When the camels, which were grazing—camels that were not ridden, saw the rock and smelt the blood which had been shed on it they shied from it and fled in all directions. This so angered the Milkanite that he seized a stone and threw it at the idol saying, 'God curse you. You have scared away my camels!' He went in search of them, and when he had collected them together once more he said:

We came to Sad to improve our fortunes

But Sad dissipated them. We have nothing to do with Sad.

Sad is nothing but a rock on a bare height.

It cannot put one right or send one wrong.

Daus had an idol belonging to Amr b. Humama al-Dausi.

(The) Quraysh had an idol by a well in the middle of the Kaaba called Hubal.

And they adopted Isaf (or Asaf) and Naila by the place of Zamzam, sacrificing beside them. They were a man and a woman of Jurhum—Isaf b. Baghy and Naila d. Dik—who were guilty of sexual relations in the Kaaba and so God transformed them into two stones.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm on the authority of Amra d. Abdul-Rahman b. Sad b. Zurara that she said, I heard Aisha say, "We always heard that Isaf and Naila were a man and a woman of Jurhum who copulated in the Kaaba so God transformed them into two stones." But God alone knows if this is the truth.' Abu Talib said:

Where the pilgrims make their camels kneel

Where the waters flow from Isaf and Naila.

Every household had an idol in their house which they used to worship. When a man was about to set out on a journey he would rub himself against it as he was about to ride off: indeed that was the last thing he used to do before his journey; and when he returned from his journey the first thing he did was to rub himself against it before he went in to his family. When God sent Mohammed with the message of monotheism (the) Quraysh said: 'Would he make the gods into one God? That is indeed a strange proceeding!'

Now along with the Kaaba the Arabs had adopted Tawaghith, which were temples which they venerated as they venerated the Kaaba. They had their guardians and overseers and they used to make offerings to them as they did to the Kaaba and to circumambulate them and sacrifice at them. Yet they recognized the superiority of the Kaaba because it was the temple and mosque of Abraham the friend (of God).

(The) Quraysh and the B. Kinana had al-Uzza in Nakhla, its guardians and overseers were the B. Shayban of Sulaym, allies of the Beni Hashim (Mohammed's clan; See: Hashemites).

An Arab poet said:

Asma was given as a dowry the head of a little red cow

Which a man of the Banu Ghanm had sacrificed.

He saw a blemish in her eye when he led her away

To al-Uzza's slaughter-place (Ghabghab) and divided her into goodly portions.

Their practice when they sacrificed was to divide the victim among the worshippers present. Ghabghab was the slaughter-place where the blood was poured out.

[Azr. i. 74: Amr b. Luayy put al-Uzza in Nakhla, and when they had finished their hajj and the circumambulation of the Kaaba they continued to be under taboo until they came to al-Uzza and had gone round it; there they abandoned the pilgrim taboo and stayed a day beside it. It belonged to Khuzaa. All Quraysh and B. Kinana used to venerate al-Uzza along with Khuzaa, and all Mudar. Her sddins who used to guard (hajab) her were B. Shayban of B. Sulaym, allies of B. Hashim. Cf. I.H. 839.]

Al-Lat belonged to Thaqif in Taif, her overseers and guardians being B. Muattib of Thaqif. Manat was worshipped by al-Aus and al-Khazraj and such of the people of Yathrib (Medina) as followed their religion by the sea-shore in the direction of al-Mushallal in Qudayd.'

[Azr. i. 73. Amr b. Luayy set up Manat on the sea-shore near Qudayd. Azd and Ghassan went on pilgrimage to it and revered it. When they had made the compass of the Kaaba and hastened from Arafat and completed the rites at Mina they did not shave their hair until they got to Manat, to whom they would cry Labbayki. Those who did so did not go round between al-Safa and al-Marwa to the place of the two idols Nahik Mujawid al-Rih and Mutim al-Tayr. This clan of the Ansar used to begin the ceremony by hailing Manat, and when they went on the great or little pilgrimage they would not go under the shelter of a roof until they had completed it. When a man was under taboo as a pilgrim (ahrama) he would not enter his house; if he needed something in it he would climb the wall behind his house so that the door should not cover his head. When God brought Islam and destroyed the doings of paganism He sent down concerning that: 'Piety does not consist in entering your houses from the rear but in fearing God'. Manat belonged to al-Aus and al-Khazraj and Ghassan of al-Azd and such of the population of Yathrib and Syria who followed their religion. Manat was on the sea-shore in the neighbourhood of al-Mushallal in Qudayd.]

Dhul-Khalasa belonged to Daus, Khatham, and Bajila and the Arabs in their area in Tabala.'

[Azr. i. 73: Amr b. Luayy set up al-Khalasa in the lower part of Mecca. They used to put necklaces on it, and bring gifts of barley and wheat. They poured milk on it, sacrificed to it, and hung ostrich eggs on it. Amr set up an image on al-Safa called Nahik Mujawid al-Rih, and one on al-Marwa called Mutim al-Tayr.]

Fals belonged to Tayyi and those hard by in the two mountains of Tayyi, Salma and Aja. Himyar and the Yamanites had a temple in Sana called Riam. Ruda was a temple of B. Rabia b. Kab b. Sad b. Zayd Manat b. Tamim. Al-Mustaughir b. Rabia b. Kab b. Sad when he destroyed it in the time of Islam said:

I smashed Ruda so completely that
I left it a black ruin in a hollow.

Dhul-KaAbat belonged to Bakr and Taghlib the two sons of Wail and Iyad in Sindad. Of it Asha of B. Qays b. Thalaba said:

Between al-Khawarnaq and al-Sadir and Bariq
And the temple Dhul-Kaabat of Sindad.

THE BAHIRA, SAIBA, WASILA AND HAMI

The Bahira is the filly of the Saiba: the Saiba is the she camel which gives birth to ten fillies without an intervening colt. She is set free, is never ridden, her hair is not shorn, and only a guest is allowed to drink her milk.

If she gives birth to a filly after that its ear is split and it is allowed to go its way with its mother, not ridden, hair unshorn, and only a guest may drink her milk as in the case of her mother. Such is the Bahira, the filly of the Saiba. The Wasila is an ewe which has ten twin ewes in successive births without a male lamb intervening. She is made a Wasila. They use the expression wasalat. Any ewes which she gives birth to after that belong to the males, except that if one of them dies all share in eating it, both males and females (78).

The Hami is a stallion who is the sire of ten successive fillies without an intervening colt. His back is taboo and he is not ridden; his hair is not shorn and he is left to run among the camels to mount them. Beyond that no use is made of him (79).

When God sent his apostle Mohammed he revealed to him: 'God has not made Bahira, or Saiba or Wasila or Hami, but those who disbelieve invent a lie against God, though most of them do not know it.'

And again:

'They say, What is in the wombs of these sheep is reserved for our males and prohibited to our wives; but if it is (born) dead they share in it. He will repay them for such division, verily He is knowing and wise.' Again: 'Say, have you considered what provision God has sent down to you and you have made some of it taboo and some of it permitted? Say, has God given you permission or do you invent lies against God?' And again: 'Of the sheep two and of the goats two. Say, has He prohibited the two males or the two females, or what the wombs of the two females contain? Inform me with knowledge if you speak the truth. And of the camels two and of the cattle two. Say, has He prohibited to you the two males or the two females, or that which the wombs of the two females contain, or were you witnesses when God enjoined this upon you? Who is more sinful than those who invent a lie against God to make men err without knowledge? Verily God will not guide the wrong-doing people' (80).

CONTINUATION OF THE GENEALOGIES

Khuzaa say: We are the sons of Amr b. Amir from the Yaman (81). Mudrika b. al-Ya's had two sons, Khuzayma and Hudhayl, their mother being a woman of Qudaa. Khuzayma had four sons: Kinana, Asad, Asada, and al-Hun. Kinana's mother was Uwana d. Sad b. Qays b. Aylan b. Mudar (82).

Kinana had four sons: al-Nadr, Malik, Abdu Manat, and Milkan. Nadr's mother was Barra d. Murr b. Udd b. Tabikha b. al-Ya's b. Mudar; the other sons were by another woman (83).

It is said that (the) Quraysh got their name from their gathering together after they had been separated, for gathering together may be expressed by taqarrush*.

(* The text is at fault somewhere. Ibn Ishaq's comment follows naturally on what has gone before, but has nothing to do with what he is last reported as having written. The significant words are al-Nadr is Quraysh; but these are attributed to Ibn Hisham and neither W. nor C. make any mention of a variant reading qdla bmi lthaq. We can at least be certain that what Ibn Ishaq had to tell us about the origin of 'Quraysh' is not to be found in the Sira as it stands, though Tabari makes another attempt in his quotation from the lost passages of Ibn Ishaq They were named after Quraysh b. Badr b. Yakhluud b. al-Harith b. Yakhluud b. al-Nadr b. Kinana who was called Quraysh because he put to shame the B. al-Nadr. Whenever they appeared the Arabs said, 'The shame of Quraysh has come.' Tabari goes on (1104) to give the right explanation that the name means 'shark'. Doubtless it is a totem name like so many of the old tribal names in Arabia.)

Al-Nadr b. Kinana had two sons, Malik and Yakhluud. Malik's mother was Atika d. Adwan b. Amr b. Qays b. Aylan, but I do not know whether she was Yakhluud's mother or not (84).

Malik b. al-Nadr begat Fihir b. Malik, his mother being Jandala d. al-Harith b. Mudad al-Jurhumi (85). (Tabari: There was war between Fihir Tand Hassan b. Abdu Kalal b. Mathub Dhu Hurath al-Himyari who had come from the Yaman with the tribesmen meaning to take back to Yaman the stones of the Kaaba so as to divert the pilgrimage to the Yaman. He got as far as Nakhla, raided cattle, and closed the roads, but he was afraid to enter Mecca. When (the) Quraysh, Kinana, Khuzayma, Asad, and Judham and other unknown elements of Mudar perceived this they marched against them under the leadership of Fihir b. Malik. A sharp engagement followed in which Himyar were defeated and Hassan was taken prisoner by Fihir's son al-Harith. Among those killed in battle was his grandson Qays b. Ghalib b. Fihir. Hassan remained a prisoner for two years until he paid his ransom. He was then released and died on the way to the Yaman.)

Fihir begat four sons: Ghalib, Muharib, al-Harith, and Asad, their mother being Layla d. Sad b. Hudhayl b. Mudrika (86).

Ghalib b. Fihir had two sons, Luayy and Taym, their mother being Salma d. Amr al-Khuzai Taym were called the Banul-Adram (87).

LuAy y b. Ghalib had four "sons: Kab, Amir, Sama, and Auf; the mother of the first three was Mawiya d. Kab b. al-Qayn b. Jasn of Qudaa (88).

THE STORY OF SAMA

Sama b. Luayy went forth to Uman and remained there. It is said that Amir b. Luayy drove him out because there was a quarrel between them and Sama knocked out Amir's eye. In fear of Amir he went to Uman. The story goes that while Sama was riding on his she-camel she lowered her head to graze and a snake seized her by the lip and forced her downwards until she fell on her side. Then the snake bit Sama so that he died. The story goes that when Sama felt death upon him he said:

Eye, weep for Sama b. Luayy.
The clinging snake has clung to Sama's leg.
Never have I seen such a victim of a camel
As Sama b. Luayy when they came upon him.
Send word to Amir and Kab,
That my soul yearneth for them.
Though my home be in Uman
I am a Ghalibi, I came forth not driven by poverty.
Many a cup hast thou spilt, O b. Luayy,
For fear of death, which otherwise would not have been spilt.
Thou didst wish to avoid death, O b. Luayy,
But none has power to avoid death.
Many a camel silent on night journeys didst thou leave prostrate
After its prodigious exertion (89).

THE MIGRATION OF AUF B. LUAYY

It is alleged that Auf b. Luayy went out with a caravan of (the) Quraysh as far as the district of Ghatafan b. Sad b. Qays b. Aylan when he was left behind and his tribesmen went on without him. Thalaba b. Sad (he being his brother according to the kindred reckoning of B. Dhubyayn, Thalaba b. Sad b. Dhubyayn b. Baghid b. Rayth b. Ghatafan and Auf b. Sad b. Dhubyayn b. Baghid b. Rayth b. Ghatafan) came to him, bound him to himself, gave him a wife, and took him into his tribe as a blood-brother. His relationship became well known among B. Dhubyayn. It was Thalaba, they say, who said to Auf when he lagged behind and his tribe abandoned him:

Tether your camel by me, O Ibn Luayy.
Your tribe has left you and you have no home.
Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr, or it may have been Mohammed b. Abd al-Rahman b. Abdullah b. Husayn, told me that Ulnar b. al-Khattab said: If I were to claim to belong to any tribe of the Arabs or to want to attach them to us I would claim to belong to B. Murra b. Auf. We know that among them there are men like ourselves. We know, too, where that man went,' meaning Auf b. Luayy. In the genealogy of Ghatafan he is Nurra b. Auf b. Sad b. Dhubyayn b. Baghid b. Rayth b. Ghatafan. If this genealogy is mentioned to them they themselves say, 'We do not deny or contest it; it is our most prized genealogy.'

Al-Harith b. Zalim b. Jadhima b. Yarbu —one of B. Murra b. Auf —when he fled from al-Numan b. al-Mundhir and clave to (the) Quraysh said:

My tribe is not Thalaba b. Sad
Nor Fazara the long-haired.
My tribe if you must ask is the Banu Luayy.
In Mecca they taught Mudar to fight.
We were foolish in following the Banu Baghid
And leaving our next-of-kin and family.
'Twas the folly of the water-seeker who, his fill drunk,
Throws away the water and goes after a mirage.
Od's life if I had my way I should be with them
And not be found seeking pasture from place to place.
Rawaha the Qurayshite mounted me on his camel
And sought no reward for it (90).

Al-Husayn b. al-Humam al-Murri, one of B. Sahn b. Murra, said, refuting al-Harith b. Zalim and claiming to belong to Ghatafan:

Lo, you are not of us and we have nought to do with you.
We repudiate relationship with Luayy b. Ghalib.
We dwell on the proud heights of al-Hijaz while you Are in the verdant plain between the two mountains, meaning Quraysh. Afterwards al-Husayn repented of what he had said and recognised the truth of the words of al-Harith b. Zalim. He claimed to belong to Quraysh and, accusing himself of falsehood, he said:

I repent of what I said before:
I realise that it was the speech of a liar.
Would that my tongue were in two,
Half of it dumb and the other half singing your praise (Lit. In the course of the stars').
Our father a Kinani, in Mecca is his grave,
In the verdant plain of al-Batha between the mountains.
We own a fourth of the sanctuary as an inheritance
And a fourth of the plains by the house of Ibn Hatib, meaning that the B. Luayy were four: Kab, Amir, Sama, and Auf.
A person whom I cannot suspect told me that Umar b. al-Khattab said to men of B. Murra: If you wish to return to your kindred do so' (The importance of the genealogical tables is bound up with the control of pay and pensions. It was Caliph Umar who ordered that registers should be compiled.)

The tribe were nobles among Ghatafan; they were their chiefs and leaders. Of them were Harim b. Sinan b. Abu Haritha b. Murra b. Nushba; Kharija b. Sinan b. Abu Haritha; al-Harith b. Auf al-Husayn b. al-Humam; and Hashim b. Harmala of whom someone has said:

Hashim b. Harmala revived his father (He brought him to life as it were by taking revenge on his slayers.).
On the day of al-HabaAt and the day of al-Yamala (Two famous battles.)
You could see the kings slain beside him
As he slew the guilty and the innocent (i.e. he was not afraid of incurring a blood feud.) (91).

They were a people of a lively reputation among Ghatafan and Qays, and they retained their relationship with them. Among them the practice of Basl obtained.

According to reports Basl is the name given to eight months of the year which the Arabs unreservedly regard as sacred. During those months they may go wherever they like without fear of violence. Zuhayr b. Abu Sulma said with reference to B. Murra (92):

Think! If they are not in al-Marurat in their dwellings

Then they will be in Nakhil (Either a place in Nejd, belonging to Ghatafan, or a place two nights' journey from Medina.),

A place where I have enjoyed their fellowship.

If they are in neither then they will be at large during the Basl.

He means that they will be travelling during the holy period.

al-Asha of B. Qays b. Thalaba said:

Is your woman guest to be taboo to us

While our woman guest and her husband are open to you?

Kab b. Layy had three sons: Murra, Adiy, and Husays, their mother being Wahshiya d. Shayban b. Muharib b. Fihir b. Malik b. Nadr.

Murra b. Kab had three sons: Kilab, Taym, and Yaqaza. Kilab's mother was Hind d. Surayr b. Thalaba b. al-Harith b. Fihir b. Malik b. al-Nadr b. Kinana b. Khuzayma; Yaqaza's mother was al-Bariqiya, a woman of Bariq of the Asd of Yaman. Some say she was the mother of Taym; others say Taym's mother was Hind d. Surayr the mother of Kilab (93).

Kilab b. Murra had two sons: Qusayy and Zuhra, their mother being Fatima d. Sad b. Sayal one of B. Jadara of Juthuma of al-Azd of Yaman allies of B. Dil b. Bakr b. Abdu Manat b. Kinana (94).

Of Sad b. Sayal the poet says:

Never among men whom we know have we seen
A man like Sad b. Sayal.

Weapon in either hand full of vigour he rode Dismounting to fight the dismounted on foot;
Charging he carried the enemy's horsemen with him
As the swooping hawk carries the partridge in its claws (95).

Qusayy b. Kilab had four sons and two daughters: Abdu Manaf, Abdul-Dar, Abdul-Uzza, and Abdu Qusayy; and Takhmur and Barra.

Their mother was Hubba d. Hulayl b. Habashiya b. Salul b. Kab b.

Amr al-Khuzai (96).

Abdu Manaf whose name was al-Mughira b. Qusayy had four sons:

Hashim, Abdu Shams, al-Muttalib, their mother being Atika d. Murra b.

Hilal b. Falij b. Dhakwan b. Thalaba b. Buhtha b. Sulaym b. Mansur b.

Ikrima; and Naufal, whose mother was Waqida d. Amr al-Maziniya, i.e.

Mazin b. Mansur b. Ikrima (97).

THE DIGGING OF THE WELL ZAMZAM

While Abdul-Muttalib was sleeping in the sacred enclosure he had a vision in which he was ordered to dig Zamzam which is a depression between the two idols of Quraysh, Isaf and Naila, at the slaughter-place of Quraysh. Jurhum had filled it in at the time they left Mecca. It is the well of Ishmael the son of Abraham where God gave him water when he was thirsty as a little child. His mother went to seek water for him and could not find it, so she went up to al-Safa praying to God and imploring aid for Ishmael; then she went to al-Marwa and did the same. God sent

Gabriel, who hollowed out a place in the earth with his heel where water appeared. His mother heard the cries of wild beasts which terrified her on his account, and she came hurrying towards him and found him scrabbling with his hand at the water beneath his cheek the while he drank, and she made him a small hole.

JURHUM AND THE FILLING IN OF THE WELL ZAMZAM

The story of Jurhum, of their filling in Zamzam, of their leaving Mecca, and of those who ruled Mecca after them until Abdul-Muttalib dug Zamzam, according to what Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai told me on the authority of Muhammed b. Ishaq al-Muttalibi, is that when Ishmael the son of Abraham died, his son Nabit was in charge of the temple as long as God willed, then it was in charge of Mudad b. Amr al-Jurhumi (98). The sons of Ishmael and the sons of Nabit were with their grandfather Mudad b. Amr and their maternal uncles of Jurhum—Jurhum and Qatura who were cousins being at that time the people of Mecca. They had come forth from the Yaman and travelled together and Mudad was over Jurhum and Samayda, one of their men, over Qatura. When they left the Yaman, they refused to go unless they had a king to order their affairs. When they came to Mecca they saw a town blessed with water and trees and, delighted with it, they settled there. Mudad b. Amr with the men of Jurhum settled in the upper part of Mecca in Quayyian and went no farther. Samayda with Qatura settled in the lower part of Mecca in Ajjad the lower part of Mecca, and went no farther. Mudad used to take a tithe from those who entered Mecca from above, while Samayda did the same to those who entered from below. Each kept to his own people, neither entering the other's territory.

Then Jurhum and Qatura quarrelled and contended for the supremacy in Mecca; at that time Mudad had with him the sons of Ishmael and Nabit, and he had the oversight of the temple as against Samayda. They went out to fight each other, Mudad from Quayyian with his horsemen making for Samayda equipped with spears, leather shields, swords and quivers, rattling as they charged. It is said that QuAyqiAn was so named for that reason. Samayda' went out from Ajjad with horse and foot, and it is said Ajjad got its name from the fine horses (jiydd) that formed Samayda's cavalry. The two parties met in Fadih, and after a severe battle Samayda was killed and Qatura' humiliated. It is said that the name Fadih was given for this reason. Then the people clamoured for peace and went on until they reached al-Matabikh, a ravine above Mecca; there they made peace and surrendered authority to Mudad. When he was in power and held sovereignty he slaughtered beasts for the people and gave them as food.

The people cooked and ate, and that is why the place is called Matabikh. Some learned people allege that the name was given because Tubba had slaughtered there and given the food away and it was his base. The dispute between Mudad and Samayda was the first open wrong committed in Mecca, at least so some allege.

Then God multiplied the offspring of Ishmael in Mecca and their uncles from Jurhum were rulers of the temple and judges in Mecca. The sons of Ishmael did not dispute their authority because of their ties of kindred and their respect for the sanctuary lest there should be quarrelling or fighting therein. When Mecca became too confined for the sons of Ishmael they spread abroad in the land, and whenever they had to fight a people, God gave them the victory through their religion and they subdued them.

THE TRIBES OF KINANA AND KHUZAA GET POSSESSION OF THE TEMPLE AND EXPEL JURHUM

Afterwards Jurhum behaved high-handedly in Mecca and made lawful that which was taboo. Those who entered the town who were not of their tribe they treated badly and they appropriated gifts which had been made to the Kaaba so that their authority weakened. When B. Bakr b. Abdu Manat b. Kinana and Ghubshan of Khuzaa perceived that, they came together to do battle and drive them out of Mecca. War was declared and in the fighting B. Bakr and Ghubshan got the upper hand and expelled them from Mecca. Now in the time of paganism Mecca did not tolerate injustice and wrong within its borders and if anyone did wrong therein it expelled him; therefore it was called 'the Scorcher' (al-Nassa.), and any king who came to profane its sanctity died on the spot. It is said that it was called Bakka because it used to break the necks of tyrants when they introduced innovations therein (99).

Amr b. al-Harith b. Mudad al-Jurhami brought out the two gazelles of the Kaaba and the corner-stone and buried them in the well Zamzam, going away with the men of Jurhum to the Yaman. They were bitterly grieved at losing the kingship of Mecca, and the above-named Amr said:

Many a woman crying bitterly,
Her eyes swollen with weeping, said
Tis as though between al-Hajun (A mountain above Mecca.) and al-Safa there was No friend and none to beguile the night's long hours in Mecca.

I said to her, while my heart within me palpitated
As though a bird fluttered between my ribs:

'Of a surety we were its people,
And grievous misfortunes have brought us to nought;
We were the lords of the temple after Nabit,
We used to go round the temple
Our prosperity plain to see.
We were in charge of the temple after Nabit in glory
And the man of plenty did not count with us.
We reigned in power, how great was our rule!
No other tribe there could boast.

Did you not marry a daughter to the best man I know? (i.e. Ishmael.)

His sons are ours, we being brothers by marriage.'
If the world turned against us
The world ever brings painful changes.
God5 drove us out by force; thus, O men,
Does destiny pursue its way.

I say when the carefree sleep, and I do not sleep,
'Lord of the throne, let not Suhayl and Amir perish!'
I was forced to look upon faces I do not like:
The tribes of Himyar and Yuhabir.

We became a legend after having been in prosperity.
That is what the passing years did to us.

The tears flow, weeping for a town
Wherein is a sure sanctuary and the sacred places.

Weeping for a temple whose doves unharmed,
Dwell safely there, with flocks of sparrows.
Wild creatures there are tame, unharried,
But leaving its sanctuary are hunted freely (100).

Amr b. al-Harith, remembering Bakr and Ghubshan and the townsmen of Mecca whom they had left behind there, said also:

Journey forth, O men; the time will come
When one day you will not be able to leave.
Hasten your beasts and loosen their reins,
Before death comes; and do what you must do.
We were men like you; fate changed us
And you will be as we once were (101).

THE DESPOTISM OF KHUZAA IN THEIR CUSTODY OF THE TEMPLE

Then Ghubshan of Khuzaa controlled the temple instead of B. Bakr b. Abd Manat, the man who was controlling it being Amr b. al-Harith al-Ghubshanl. (The) Quraysh at that time were in scattered settlements, and tents (Or houses) dispersed among their people, B. Kinana. So Khuzaa possessed the temple, passing it on from son to son until the last of them, Hulayl b. Habashiya b. Salul b. Kab b. Amr al-Khuzai (102).

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

THE MARRIAGE OF QUSAYY B. KILAB WITH HUBBA DAUGHTER OF HULAYL

Qusayy b. Kilab asked Hulayl b. Hubshiya for his daughter Hubba. Hulayl agreed and gave her to him and she bore him Abd al-Dar, Abd Manaf, Abdul-Uzza, and Abd. By the time that the children of Qusayy had spread abroad and increased in wealth and reputation Hulayl died. Now Qusayy thought that he had a better claim than Khuzaa and B. Bakr to control the Kaaba and Mecca, and that (the) Quraysh were the noblest offering of Ishmael b. Abraham and the purest descendants of his sons.

He spoke to (the) Quraysh and Beni Kinana asking them to drive out Khuzaa and B. Bakr from Mecca and they agreed to do so.

Now Rabia b. Haram of Udhra b. Sad b. Zayd had come to Mecca after the death of Kilab and had married Fatima d. Sad b. Sayal. (Zuhra at that time was a grown man and stayed behind, while Qusayy had just been weaned.) Rabia took Fatima away to his land and she carried Qusayy with her, and subsequently gave birth to Rizah. When Qusayy reached man's estate he came to Mecca and dwelt there.

Thus it was that when his people asked him to join them in the war he wrote to his brother Rizah, who shared the same mother, asking him to come and support him. Thereupon Rizah set out accompanied by his halfbrothers Hunn, Mahmud, and Julhuma, all sons of Rabia but not by Fatima, together with a number of Qudaa among the Arab pilgrims, having agreed to support Qusayy.

Khuzaa allege that Hulayl b. Hubshiya had enjoined this on Qusayy when he saw how his daughter's children had multiplied, saying: 'You have a better right to the Kaaba and to rule in Mecca than Khuzaa, so that this was the reason why Qusayy acted as he did. But this is a story which we have not heard from any other source, and only God knows the truth.

(Tabari: When the people had assembled in Mecca and gone to the mauqif, completed the hajj and come down to Mini, Qusayy assembled his possessions and his followers from his own tribe of (the) Quraysh, the B. Kinana, and such of the Qudaa as were with him, there only remained the ceremony of dismissal.)

AL-GHAUTH'S AUTHORITY OVER MEN ON PILGRIMAGE

Al-Ghauth b. Murr b. Udd b. al-Yas b. Mudar used to give permission* to men on pilgrimage to leave Arafa, and this function descended to his children after him.

(* It seems possible that the Ijaza or "permission", i.e. the word of command that terminates the wocuf, was originally the permission to fall upon the slaughtered victims. In the Meccan pilgrimage the Ijaza which terminated the tvocuf at Arafa was the signal for a hot race to the neighbouring sanctuary of Mozdalifa, where the sacred fire of the god Cozah burned, it was, in fact, not so much the permission to leave Arafa as to draw near to Cozah. The race itself is called Ijada, which may mean "dispersion" or "distribution". It cannot well mean the former, for Arafa is not holy ground, but merely the point of assemblage just outside the Haram at which the ceremonies began, and the station at Arafa is only the preparation for the vigil at Mozdalifa. On the other hand, if the meaning is "distribution" the Ijada answers to the rush of Nilus's Saracens to partake of the sacrifice.)

He and his sons used to be called Sufa. Al-Ghauth used to exercise this function because his mother was a woman of Jurhum who had been barren and vowed to Allah that if she bore a son she would give him to the Kaaba as a slave to serve it and to look after it. In course of time she gave birth to al-Ghauth and he used to look after the Kaaba in early times with his Jurhum uncles and presided over the order of departure from Arafa because of the office which he held in the Kaaba. His sons carried on the practice until they were cut off.

Murr b. Udd, referring to the fulfilment of the mother's oath, said:

O Lord, I have made one of my sons
A devotee in Mecca the exalted.
So vobee me for the vow fulfilled,
And make him the best of creatures to my credit.

Al-Ghauth, so they allege, used to say when he sent the people away:

O God I am following the example of others.
If that is wrong, the fault is Qudaa's.

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father Abbad said:

Sufa used to send the people away from Arafa and give them permission to depart when they left Mina. When the day of departure arrived they used to come to throw pebbles, and a man of Sufa used to throw for the men, none throwing until he had thrown. Those who had urgent business used to come and say to him: 'Get up and throw so that we may throw with you,' and he would say, 'No, by God, not until the sun goes down'; and those who wanted to leave quickly used to throw stones at him to hurry him, saying, 'Confound you, get up and throw.' But he refused until the sun went down and then he would get up and throw while the men threw stones with him.

When they had finished the stoning and wanted to leave Mina, Sufa held both sides of the hill and kept the men back. They said: 'Give the order to depart, Sufa: No one left until they had gone first. When Sufa left and had passed on, men were left to go their own way and followed them. This was the practice until they were cut off. After them the next of kin inherited.

They were of B. Sad in the family of Safwan b. al-Harith b. Shijna (103). It was Safwan who gave permission to the pilgrims to depart from Arafa, and this right was maintained by them up to Islam, the last being Karib b. Safwan.

Aus b. Tamim b. Maghra al-Sadi said:

The pilgrims do not quit their halting-place at Arafa
Until it is said, 'Give permission O family of Safwan.'

ADWAN AND THE DEPARTURE CEREMONY AT MUZDALIFA

Hurthan b. Amr the Adwanite who was called Dhul-sba because he had a finger missing said:

Bring an excuse for the tribe of Adwan (i.e. 'for what they have done the one to the other'. They were rent by civil war.)

They were the serpents of the earth (i.e. 'cunning and treacherous').

Some acted unlawfully against others
And some spared not others.
Some of them were princes
Who faithfully met their obligations.
Some used to give men the parting signal
By custom and divine command.
Of them was a judge who gave decisions
And his verdict was never annulled.

Since the permission to depart from Muzdalifa was with Adwan, as Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai told me on the authority of Mohammed b. Ishaq, they used to pass it on from father to son until the last of them when Islam came, Abu Sayyara Umayla b. al-A'zal, about whom a certain poet said:

We have defended Abu Sayyara
And his clients the Banu Fazara
Until he made his ass pass through safely
As he faced Mecca praying to its Guardian.

Abu Sayyara used to send away the people while sitting upon a she ass of his; that is why he says

'making his ass pass safely' (In this section the work of Ibn Ishaq and Ibn Hisham are not clearly distinguished. Probably the poem comes from the former and the comments from the latter.)

AMIR B. ZARIB B. AMR B. IYADH B. YASHKUR B. ADWAN

His words A judge who gave decisions' refers to the above-named. The Arabs used to refer every serious and difficult case to him for decision and would accept his verdict. Once it happened that a case in dispute in reference to a hermaphrodite was brought to him. They said, 'Are we to treat it as a man or a woman?' They had never brought him such a difficult matter before, so he said, 'Wait awhile until I have looked into the matter, for by Allah you have never brought me a question like this before.' So they agreed to wait, and he passed a sleepless night turning the matter over and looking at it from all sides without any result. Now he had a slave-girl Sukhayla who used to pasture his flock. It was his habit to tease her when she went out in the morning by saying sarcastically, 'You're early this morning, Sukhayla'; and when she returned at night he would say, 'You are late to-night, Sukhayla,' because she had gone out late in the morning and come back late in the evening after the others. Now when this girl saw that he could not sleep and tossed about on his bed she asked what his trouble was. 'Get out and leave me alone, for it is none of your business,' he retorted. However, she was so persistent that he said to himself that it might be that she would provide him with some solution of his problem, so he said: 'Well then, I was asked to adjudicate on the inheritance of a hermaphrodite (a person that has both, male and female, reproductive organs). Am I to make him a man or a woman?' By God I do not know what to do and I can see no way out.' She said, 'Good God, merely follow the course of the urinary process.' 'Be as late as you please henceforth, Sukhayla; you have solved my problem,' said he. Then in the morning he went out to the people and gave his decision in the way she had indicated.

(* The point was important because a male received double as much as a female. Muslims, up to this very day, are obsessed with gender role and anything that has to do with it, for the very simple reason that Mohammed gave this guideline when he said: "The male shall have the equal of the portion of two females" [Koran: 4:11; 4:176] and: "A man is permitted to take women as sex slaves outside of marriage." Note that the verse distinguishes wives from "captives" [described by the phrase "those whom the right hand possesses"; Koran: 4:24; 33:50] Similar gender evaluations can be found in: Koran: 2:223; 4:3; 2:228; 2:282; 5:6; 53:27; Sira and Hadith: Ibn Ishaq 693; 734; 878; 969; Sahih Bukhari 2:28; 6:301; 6:301; 54:464; 62:81; 62:58; Sahih Muslim 4:1039; Abu Dawud 2:704; 2155; Tabari 8:117; 9:137; 9:1754; Al-Tirmidhi 3272. These statements can be found in the Sharia Law too, described in the The Umdat al-Salik).

HOW QUSAYY B. KILAB GAINED POWER IN MECCA; HOW HE UNITED THE QURAYSH AND THE HELP WHICH QUDAF A GAVE HIM

In that year Sufa behaved as they were accustomed. The Arabs had borne them patiently since they felt it a duty in the time of Jurhum and Khuza'a when they were in authority. Qusayy came to them with his tribesmen from (the) Quraysh and Kinana and Qudaa at al-Aqaba saying, 'We have a better right to this authority than you.' (Tabari: They disputed one with another and they tried to kill him.) Severe righting followed resulting in the defeat of Sufa, and Qusayy assumed their authority.

Thereupon Khuzaa and (the) B. Bakr withdrew from Qusayy knowing that he would impose the same restrictions on them as Sufa had done and that he would come between them and the Kaaba and the rule of Mecca. When they had withdrawn, Qusayy showed his hostility and gathered his forces to fight them. (Tabari: His brother Rizah b. Rabla with his men from Quda stood with him.) Khuza'a and B. Bakr came out against him and a severe battle took place in the valley of Mecca and both parties suffered heavily. Thereupon they agreed to make peace and that one of the Arabs should arbitrate between them. They appointed as umpire Yamar b. Auf b. Kab b. Amir b. Layth b. Bakr b. Abdu Manaf b. Kinana. His verdict was that Qusayy had a better claim to the Kaaba and to rule Mecca than Khuza'a and that all blood shed by Qusayy was to be cancelled and compensation disregarded, but Khuza'a and B. Bakr must pay bloodwit for the men of (the) Quraysh, Kinana, and Quda'a whom they had killed and that Qusayy should be given a free hand with the Kaaba and Mecca. Yamar b. Auf was immediately called al-Shaddakh because he had cancelled the claim to bloodwit and remitted it (104).

Thus Qusayy gained authority over the temple and Mecca and brought in his people from their dwellings to Mecca. He behaved as a king over his tribe and the people of Mecca, and so they made him king; but he had guaranteed to the Arabs their customary rights because he felt that it was a duty upon himself which he had not the right to alter. Thus he confirmed the family of Safwan and Adwan and the intercalators and Murra b. Auf in their customary rights which obtained until the coming of Islam when God put an end thereby to them all. Qusayy was the first of (the) B. Kab b. Lu'ayy to assume kingship and to be obeyed by his people as king. He held the keys of the temple, the right to water the pilgrims from the well of Zamzam, to feed the pilgrims, to preside at assemblies, and to hand out the war banners. In his hands lay all the dignities of Mecca; he divided the town into quarters among his people and he settled all the Quraysh into their houses in Mecca which they held.

People assert that the Quraysh were afraid to cut down the trees of the sanctuary in their quarters, but Qusayy cut them down with his own hand or through his assistants. (The Quraysh called him the Uniter because he had brought them together and they drew a happy omen from his rule. So far as (the) Quraysh were concerned no woman was given in marriage, no man married, no discussion about public affairs was held, and no banner of war was entrusted to anyone except in his house, where one of his sons would hand it over. When a girl reached marriageable age she had to come to his house to put on her shift. The shift was split over her head in his house, then she put it on and was taken away to her people (The dir was a large piece of cloth. Normally a woman cuts an opening through which she can put her head. She then adds sleeves and sews up the two sides.). His authority among the Quraysh during his life and after his death was like a religious law which could not be infringed. He chose for himself the house of meeting and made a door which led to the mosque of the Kaaba; in it the Quraysh used to settle their affairs (105).

Abdul-Malik b. Rashid told me that his father said that he heard al-Saib b. Khabbab, author of al-Maqsurah, reporting that he heard a man telling Umar b. al-Khattab when he was caliph the story of Qusayy, how he united (the) Quraysh and expelled Khuza'a and B. Bakr from Mecca, and how he gained control of the temple and the affairs of Mecca. Umar made no attempt to gainsay him. (Tabari: Qusayy's authority in Mecca, where he enjoyed great esteem, remained uncontested. He left the pilgrimage unchanged because he deemed it a religious taboo. The Sufa continued, until they were cut off, in the family of Safwan b. al-Harith b. Shijna by right of inheritance. Adwan, the Nasa of B. Malik b. Kinana, and Murra b. Auf continued as before until Islam came and God destroyed all these offices.)

When Qusayy's war was over his brother Rizah b. Rabla went away to his own land with his countrymen.

Concerning his response to Qusayy he composed the following poem:

When a messenger came from Qusayy
And said 'Respond to your friend's request,'
We sprang to his aid leading our horses,
Casting from us the half-hearted and slow-moving.
We rode all night until the dawn
Hiding ourselves by day lest we should be attacked.
Our steeds were swift as grouse hurrying to water
Bringing our answer to the call of Qusayy.

We collected tribesmen from Sirr and the two Ashmadhs (It is disputed whether these are two tribes or two mountains between Medina and Khaybar.)
From every tribe a clan.

What a fine force of cavalry that night,
More than a thousand, swift, smooth-paced!
When they passel by al-Asjad

And took the easy road from Mustanakh
And passed by the edge of Wariqan
And passed by al-Arj, a tribe encamped there,

They passed by the thornbushes without cropping them (The reading is uncertain; 'they passed by water without tasting it', as some Manuscripts propose, is improbable.)

Running hard the livelong night from Marr.

We brought the colts near their mothers

That their neighing might be gentle,

And when we came to Mecca we

Subdued the men tribe by tribe.

We smote them there with the edge of the sword

And with every stroke we deprived them of their wits.

We trod them down with our horses' hooves

As the strong tread down the weak and helpless.

We killed Khuza'a in their homeland

And Bakr we killed group by group.

We drove them from God's land,

We would not let them possess a fertile country.

We kept them bound in iron fetters (It seems improbable that such a rare and valuable metal would be used for such a purpose at this date.)

On every tribe we quenched our vengeance.

Thalaba b. Abdullah b. Dhubyān b. al-Harith b. Sad Hudhaym Qudai said concerning Qusayy's invitation and their response:

We urged on our slender high-stepping horses

From the sandhills, the sandhills of al-Jinab

To the lowlands of Tihama, and we met our foe

In a barren depression of a desert.

As for Sufa the effeminate,

They forsook their dwellings in fear of the sword.

But the sons of Ali when they saw us

Leaped to their swords like camels that yearn for home.

Qusayy b. Kilab said:

I am the son of the protectors, the B. Lu'ayy,

In Mecca is my home where I grew up.

Mine is the valley as Ma'Add knows,

Its Marwa I delight in.

I should not have conquered had not

The sons of Qaydhar and Nabit settled there.

Rizah was my helper and through him I am great,

I fear no injustice as long as I live.

When Rizah was established in his country God increased him and Hunn in numbers. (They are the two tribes of Udhra today.) Now when he came to his country there had been a matter in dispute between Rizah on the one hand and Nahd b. Zayd and Hautaka
b. Aslum on the other, they being two clans of Quda'a.
He put them in fear so that they clave to the Yaman and left the Quda'a country and remain in the Yaman to this day. Now Qusayy was well disposed to Quda'a and wanted them to increase and be united in their land because of his kinship with Rizah and because of their goodwill to him when they responded to his appeal for help. He disliked what Rizah had done to them and said:

Who will tell Rizah from me
That I blame him on two accounts,
I blame you for the Banu Nahd b. Zayd
Because you drove a wedge between them and me,
And for Hautaka b. Aslum; of a truth
He who treats them badly has badly treated me (106).

When Qusayy grew old and feeble, he spoke to Abdul-Dar. He was his first born but (Tabari: they say he was weak) Abdu Manaf had become famous during his father's lifetime and done all that had to be done along with Abdul-Uzza and Abd. He said: 'By God, my son I will put you on a par with the others; though they have a greater reputation than yours; none of them shall enter the Kaaba until you open it for them;
none shall give the Quraysh the war banner but you with your own hand; none shall drink in Mecca except you allow it; and no pilgrim shall eat food unless you provide it; and (the) Quraysh shall not decide any matter except in your house.'

He gave him his house, it being the only place where
(the) Quraysh could settle their affairs, and he gave him the formal rights mentioned above.

The Rifada was a tax which (the) Quraysh used to pay from their property to Qusayy at every festival.
With it he used to provide food for the pilgrims who were unable to afford their own provisions. Qusayy had laid this as a duty upon (the) Quraysh, saying:
'You are God's neighbours, the people of his temple and sanctuary. The pilgrims are God's guests and the visitors to His temple and have the highest claim on your generosity; so provide food and drink for them during the pilgrimage until they depart out of your territory.' Accordingly they used to pay him every year a tax on their flocks and he used to provide food for the people therefrom, while they were at Mina, and his people carried out this order of his during the time of ignorance until Islam came. To this very day it is the food which the sultan provides every year in Mina until the pilgrimage is over.

My father Ishaq b. Yasar from al-Hasan b.
Mohammed b. Ali b. Abu Talib told me about this affair of Qusayy's and what he said to Abdul-Dar concerning the transfer of his power to him in these words, I heard him saying this to a man of B. Abdul-Dar called Nubaih b. Wahb b. Amir b. Ikrima b. Amir
b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf b. Abdul-Dar b. Qusayy.
'al-Hasan said: 'Qusayy gave him all the authority that he had over his people. Qusayy was never contradicted nor was any measure of his overthrown.'

THE RIFT IN THE QURAYSH AFTER QUSAYY AND THE CONFEDERACY OF THE SCENTED ONES

After the death of Qusayy his sons assumed his authority over the people and marked out Mecca in quarters, after he had allotted space there for his own tribe. They allotted quarters among their people and among other allies, and sold them. (The) Quraysh took part in this with them without any discord or dispute.
Then the sons of Abdu Manaf — Abdu Shams and Hashim and al-Muttalib and Naufal — agreed to seize the rights that the sons of Abdul-Dar possessed which Qusayy had given to Abdul-Dar himself, namely those mentioned above. They considered that they had a better right to them because of their superiority and their position among their people. This caused dissension among (the) Quraysh, one section siding with B. Abdu Manaf, and the other with B. Abdul-Dar.
The former held that the new claimants had a better right; the latter that rights which Qusayy had given to one branch should not be taken away from them. The leader of B. Abdu Manaf was Abdu Shams, because he was the eldest son of his father; and the leader of B.

Abdul-Dar was Amir b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf b. Abdul-Dar. The B. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy and B. Zuhra b. Kilab and B. Taym b. Murra b. Kab and B. al-Harith b. Fihri b. Malik b. al-Nadr were with B. Abdu Manaf, while with B. Abdul-Dar were B. Makhzum b. Yaqaza b. Murra, and B. Sahn b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab and B. Jumah b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab and B. Adiyb b. Kab. The men who remained neutral were Amir b. Luayy and Muharib b. Fihri.

They all made a firm agreement that they would not abandon one another and would not betray one another as long as the sea wetted seaweed.

The B. Abdu Manaf brought out a bowl full of scent (they assert that some of the women of the tribe brought it out to them) and they put it for their allies in the mosque beside the Kaaba; then they dipped their hands into it and they and their allies took a solemn oath. Then they rubbed their hands on the Kaaba strengthening the solemnity of the oath.

For this reason they were called the Scented Ones.

The other side took a similar oath at the Kaaba and they were called the Confederates. Then the tribes formed groups and linked up one with another. The B. Abdu Manaf were ranged against B. Sahn; B. Asad against B. Abdul-Dar; Zuhra against B. Jumah; B. Taym against B. Makhzum; and B. al-Harith against Adiyb b. Kab. They ordered that each tribe should exterminate the opposing units.

When the people had thus decided on war, suddenly they demanded peace on the condition that B. Abdu Manaf should be given the rights of watering the pilgrims and collecting the tax; and that access to the Kaaba, the standard of war, and the assembly house, should belong to the Abdul-Dar as before. The arrangement commended itself to both sides and was carried out, and so war was prevented. This was the state of affairs until God brought Islam, when the apostle of God said, 'Whatever alliance there was in the days of ignorance Islam strengthens it.'

THE CONFEDERACY OF THE FUDUL*

(* Fudul is explained as meaning that the confederates did not allow wrongdoers to retain any stolen property. Fudul sometimes means 'remains of spoil'. Another and somewhat far-fetched explanation is that this covenant was modelled on an older covenant of the same character in which three men each with the name of Fadl took part.)

Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai related to me the following as from Ibn Ishaq: The tribes of (the) Quraysh decided to make a covenant and assembled for that purpose in the house of Abdullah b. Judan b. Amr b. Kab b. Sad b. Taym b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy because of his seniority and the high reputation he enjoyed. Those party to the agreement with him were B. Hashim, B. al-Muttalib, Asad b. Abdul-Uzza, Zuhra b. Kilab, and Taym b. Murra. They bound themselves by a solemn agreement that if they found that anyone, either a native of Mecca or an outsider, had been wronged they would take his part against the aggressor and see that the stolen property was restored to him. (The) Quraysh called that confederacy 'The Confederacy of the Fudul'.

Mohammed b. Zayd b. al-Muhajir b. Qunfudh al-Taymi told me that he heard Talha b. Abdullah b. Auf al-Zuhri say: The apostle of God said, I witnessed in the house of Abdullah b. Judan a covenant which I would not exchange for any number of fine camels: if I were invited to take part in it during Islam I should do so.'

Yazid b. Abdullah b. Usama b. al-Hadi al-Laythi told me that Mohammed b. Ibrahim b. al-Harith al-Taymi told him that there was a dispute between al-Husayn b. Ali b. Abu Talib and al-Walid b. Utba b. Abu Sufyan about some property they held in Dhul-Marwa. At that time al-Walid was governor of Medina, his uncle, Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan having given him the appointment. Al-Walid had defrauded al-Husayn of his rights, for as governor he had the power to do so. Husayn said to him: 'By God you shall do me justice or I will take my sword and stand in the apostle's mosque and invoke the confederacy of the Fudul!' Abdullah b. al-Zubayr who was with al-Walid at the time said: And I swear by God that if he invokes it I will take my sword and stand with him until he gets justice, or we will die together.' When the news reached al-Miswar b. Makhrama b. Naufal al-Zuhri and Abdul-Rahman b. Uthman b. Ubaydullah al-Taymi they said the same. As soon as he realised what was happening al-Walid gave al-Husayn satisfaction.

This same Yazid, on the same authority, told me that Mohammed b. Jubayr b. Mutim b. Adiyb b. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf, who was the most learned of the Quraysh, met Abdul-Malik b. Marwan b. al-Hakam when he had killed Ibn al-Zubayr and the people had gathered against Abdul-Malik. When he went in to see him he said: O Abu Said, were not we and you—meaning B. Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf and B. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf — partners in the confederacy of the Fudul? 'You should know best,' he replied. Abdul-Malik said, 'No, you tell me, Abu Said, the truth of the matter.' He answered: 'No, by God, you and we kept out of that!' 'You are right,' said Abdul-Malik.

Hashim b. Abdu Manaf superintended the feeding and watering of the pilgrims because Abdu Shams was a great traveller who was seldom to be found in Mecca; moreover he was a poor man with a large family, while Hashim was a well-to-do man. It is alleged that when the pilgrims were there he got up and addressed (the) Quraysh thus: 'You are God's neighbours and the people of His temple. At this feast there come to you God's visitors and pilgrims to His temple. They are God's guests, and His guests have the best claim on your generosity; so get together what food they will need for the time they have to stay here. If my own means were sufficient I would not lay this burden upon you.' Thereupon they taxed themselves each man according to his capacity and used to provide food for the pilgrims until they left Mecca.

It is alleged that Hashim was the first to institute the two caravan journeys of (the) Quraysh, summer and winter, and the first to provide tharid (broth in which bread is broken up) in Mecca. Actually his name was Amr, but he was called Hashim because he broke up bread in this way for his people in Mecca. A Quraysh poet, or one of the Arabs, composed this poem:

Amr who made bread-and-broth for his people,
A people in Mecca who suffered lean years.
He it was who started the two journeys,
The winter's caravan and the summer's train (107).

Hashim b. Abdu Manaf died in Ghazza in the land of Syria while travelling with his merchandise, and al-Muttalib b. Abdu Manaf assumed the right of feeding and watering the pilgrims. He was younger than Abdu Shams and Hashim. He was held in high esteem among his people, who called him al-Fayd on account of his liberality and high character.

Hashim had gone to Medina and married Salma d. Amr, one of B. Adiyb b. al-Najjar. Before that she had been married to Uhayba b. al-Julah b. al-Harish b. Jahjaba b. Kulfa b. Auf b. Amr b. Auf b. Malik b. al-Aus and bore him a son called Amr. On account of the high position she held among her people she would only marry on condition that she should retain control of her own affairs. If she disliked a man she left him.

To Hashim she bore Abdul-Muttalib and called his name Shayba.

Hashim left him with her while he was a little boy. Then his uncle al-Muttalib came to take him away and bring him up among his people in his town. But Salma declined to let him go with him. His uncle argued that his nephew was now old enough to travel and was as an exile away from his own tribe who were the people of the temple, of great local reputation, holding much of the government in their hands. Therefore it was better for the boy that he should be among his own family, and therefore he refused to go without him. It is popularly asserted that Shayba refused to leave his mother without her consent; and this she ultimately gave. So his uncle took him away to Mecca, riding behind him on his camel, and the people cried: 'It's al-Muttalib's slave whom he has bought' and that is how he got the name of Abdul-Muttalib. His uncle called out: 'Rubbish!

This is my nephew whom I have brought from Medina.'

Subsequently al-Muttalib died in Radman in the Yaman, and an Arab mourned him in the following lines:

Thirsty are the pilgrims now al-Muttalib is gone.
No more bowls with overflowing brims.
Now that he is gone would that (the) Quraysh were in torment!

Matrud b. Kab al-Khuzai wrote this elegy over al-Muttalib and all the sons of Abdu Manaf when the news came that Naufal the last of them was dead:

O night! most miserable night,
Disturbing all other nights,
With thoughts of what I suffer
From sorrow and the blows of fate.
When I remember my brother Naufal,
He reminds me of days gone by,
He reminds me of the red waist-sashes,
The fine new yellow robes.
There were four of them, everyone a prince,
Sons and grandsons of princes.
One dead in Radman, one in Salman,
A third lies near Ghazza,
A fourth lies in a grave by the Kaaba
To the east of the sacred buildings.
Abdu Manaf brought them up virtuously
Safe from the reproof of all men.
Yea there are none like Mughira's children
Among the living or the dead.

Abdu Manaf's name was al-Mughira. Hashim was the first of his sons to die at Ghazza in Syria, followed by Abdu Shams in Mecca, then al-Muttalib in Radman in the Yaman (Yemen), and lastly Naufal in Salman in Iraq. It was said to Matrud—at least they assert so—'Your lines are very good, but if you had done more justice to the theme they would have been still better.' 'Give me a night or two,' he replied, and after a few days he produced the following:

O eye, weep copiously, pour down thy tears,
Weep over Mughira's sons, that noble breed of Ka'b,
O eye, cease not to weep thy gathering tears,
Bewail my heartfelt sorrow in life's misfortunes.
Weep over all those generous trustworthy men,
Lavish in gifts, magnificent, bounteous,
Pure in soul, of high intent,
Firm in disposition, resolute in grave affairs,
Strong in emergency, no churls, not relying on others,
Quick to decide, lavish in generosity.
If Kab's line is reckoned, a hawk,
The very heart and summit of their glory,
Weep for generosity and Muttalib the generous,
Release the fountain of thy tears,
Gone from us in Radman today as a foreigner,
My heart grieves for him among the dead.
Woe to you, weep if you can weep,
For Abdu Shams on the east of the Kaaba,
For Hashim in the grave in the midst of the desert
Where the wind of Ghazza blows o'er his bones.
Above all for my friend Naufal
Who found in Salman a desert grave.
Never have I known their like, Arab or foreigner,
When their white camels bore them along.
Now their camps know them no more

Who used to be the glory of our troops.
Has time annihilated them or were their swords
blunt,
Or is every living thing food for the Fates?
Since their death I have come to be satisfied
With mere smiles and friendly greetings.
Weep for the father of the women with dishevelled hair

Who weep for him with faces unveiled as camels doomed to die (The word, 'camels doomed to die' refer to the she-camel which used to be tethered by the grave of her dead master until she died of hunger and thirst.
The heathen Arabs believed he would ride her in the next world.).

They mourn the noblest man who ever walked,
Bewailing him with floods of tears.
They mourn a man generous and liberal,
Rejecting injustice, who settled the greatest matters.
They weep for Amr al-Ula ('The lofty one') when his time came,
Benign was his nature as he smiled at the night's guests.

They weep prostrated by sorrow,
How long was the lamentation and woe!
They mourned him when time exiled them from him,
Their faces pale like camels denied water.
With their loins girded because of fate's hard blows.
I passed the night in pain watching the stars
I wept and my little daughters wept to share my grief.
No prince is their equal or peer,
Among those left behind none are like their offspring.

Their sons are the best of sons,
And they are the best of men in the face of disaster.
How many a smooth running fast horse have they given,

How many a captive mare have they bestowed,
How many a fine mettled Indian sword,
How many a lance as long as a well rope,
How many slaves did they give for the asking,
Lavishing their gifts far and wide.
Were I to count and others count with me
I could not exhaust their generous acts;
They are the foremost in pure descent
Wherever men boast of their forbears,
The ornament of the houses which they left
So that they have become solitary and forsaken,
I say while my eye ceases not to weep,
May God spare the unfortunate (family)! (108)

By the 'father of the women with dishevelled hair'
the poet means Hashim b. Abdu Manaf.

Following his uncle al-Muttalib, Abdul-Muttalib b.
Hashim took over the duties of watering and feeding the pilgrims and carried on the practices of his forefathers with his people. He attained such eminence as none of his forefathers enjoyed; his people loved him and his reputation was great among them.

THE DIGGING OF ZAMZAM

While Abdul-Muttalib was sleeping in the hijr (The hijr is the semicircular spot between the wall called Hatim and the Kaaba, which is said to contain the graves of Hagar and Ishmael. Cf. Azraqi, 28a f.), he was ordered in a vision to dig Zamzam. Yazid b. Abu Habib al-Misri from Marthad b. Abdullah al-Yazani from Abdullah b. Zurayr al-Ghafiqi told me that he heard Ali b. Abu Talib telling the story of Zamzam.
He said that Abdul-Muttalib said: I was sleeping in the hijr when a supernatural visitant came and said, "Dig Tiba". I said "And what is Tiba?"; then he left me. I went to bed again the next day and slept, and he came to me and said "Dig Barra"; when I asked what Barra was he left me. The next day he came and said "Dig al-Madnuna"; when I asked what that was he went away again. The next day he came while I was sleeping and said "Dig Zamzam". I said, "What is Zamzam?"; he said:

'Twill (= it will) never fail or ever run dry,
'Twill water the pilgrim company.
It lies 'twixt (= betwixt = between) the dung and the flesh bloody*,
By the nest where the white-winged ravens fly,
By the nest where the ants to and fro do ply.'

(* The language is characteristic of Arabian oracles composed in doggerel known as Saj. The words
'between the dung and the blood' occur in the Koran, Sura 16, verse 68. 'We give you to drink of what is in their bellies between the faeces and the blood, pure milk easily swallowed by the drinkers.' But this throws no light on the meaning of the passage here, which plainly has a local significance. Abu Dharr passed it by without comment. Al-Suhayli, p. 98, sees that the term must go with the two following terms, and serve to show exactly where Zamzam was to be found. He therefore repeats a story to the effect that Abdul-Muttalib saw the ants' nest and the ravens' nest when he went to dig the well, but saw neither dung nor blood. At that moment a cow escaped her would-be butcher and entered the haram. There she was slaughtered, and where the dung and blood flowed, Abdul-Muttalib proceeded to dig. This gallant attempt to explain the ancient oracle cannot be accepted for the reason that it gives no point to the precise reference that the well was to be found between the dung and the blood, which in this story obviously must have occupied pretty much the same space, and indeed would render the following indications superfluous by giving the exact site. Most probably, therefore, we should assume that the sacrificial victims were tethered at a certain spot and there they would void ordure before they were led to the foot of the image at which they were slaughtered. A point between these two spots is more closely defined by the ants' and the ravens' neat.)

When the exact spot had been indicated to him and he knew that it corresponded with the facts, he took a pick-axe and went with his son al-Harith —for he had no other son at that time— and began to dig. When the top of the well appeared he cried Allah akbar! (Allah is great!) Thus

(the) Quraysh knew that he had obtained his object and they came to him and said, 'This is the well of our father Ishmael, and we have a right to it, so give us a share in it.' I will not,' he answered, I was specially told of it and not you, and I was the one to be given it.'
They said: 'Do us justice, for we shall not leave you until we have got a judicial decision in the matter.' He said: 'Appoint anyone you like as umpire between us.'
He agreed to accept a woman diviner of B. Sad Hudhaym, who dwelt in the uplands of Syria. So

Abdul-Muttalib, accompanied by some of his relations and a representative from all the tribes of
(the) Quraysh, rode away. They went on through desolate country between the Hijaz and Syria until Abdul-Muttalib's company ran out of water and they feared that they would die of thirst.

They asked the Quraysh tribes to give them water, but they refused, on the ground that if they gave them their water they too would die of thirst. In his desperation Abdul-Muttalib consulted his companions as to what should be done, but all they could do was to say that they would follow his instructions: so he said, I think that every man should dig a hole for himself with the strength that he has left so that whenever a man dies his companions can thrust him into the hole and bury him until the last man, for it is better that one man should lie unburied than a whole company.'
They accepted his advice and every man began to dig a hole for himself. Then they sat down until they should die of thirst. After a time Abdul-Muttalib said to his companions, 'By God, to abandon ourselves to death in this way and not to scour the country in search of water is sheer incompetence; perhaps God will give us water somewhere. To your saddles!' So they got their beasts ready while the Quraysh watched them at work.

Abdul-Muttalib went to his beast and mounted her and when she got up from her knees a flow of fresh water broke out from beneath her feet. Abdul-Muttalib and his companions, crying Allah akbar!, dismounted and drank and filled their water-skins. Then they invited the Quraysh to come to the water which God had given them and to drink freely. After they had done so and filled their water-skins they said: 'By God, the judgement has been given in your favour Abdul-Muttalib. We will never dispute your claim to Zamzam. He who has given you water in this wilderness is He who has given you Zamzam.

Return to your office of watering the pilgrims in peace.' So they all went back without going to the diviner. This is the story which I heard as from Ali b.
Abu Talib about Zamzam and I have heard one report on Abdul-Muttalib's authority that when he was ordered to dig Zamzam it was said to him:

Then pray for much water as crystal clear
To water God's pilgrims at the sites they revere
As long as it lasts you have nothing to fear.

On hearing these words he went to the Quraysh and said, 'You know that I have been ordered to dig Zamzam for you,' and they asked, 'But have you been told where it is?' When he replied that he had not, they told him to go back to his bed where he had the vision and if it really came from God it would be made plain to him; but if it had come from a demon, he would not return to him. So Abdul-Muttalib went back to his bed and slept and received the following message:

Dig Zamzam, 'twill not to your hopes give lie,
'Tis (= it is) yours from your father eternally.

'Twill never fail or ever run dry,
'Twill water the pilgrim company
Like an ostrich flock a fraternity,
Their voice God hears most graciously.
A pact most sure from days gone by Nought like it canst thou descry,
It lies 'twixt the dung and the flesh bloody (109)*.

(* As these lines are in part identical with those mentioned above, clearly this is a rival account of the vision.)

It is alleged that when this was said to him and he inquired where Zamzam was, he was told that it was by the ants' nest where the raven will peck tomorrow, but God knows how true this is. The next day Abdul Muttalib with his son al-Harith, who at that time was his only son, went and found the ants' nest and the raven pecking beside it between the two idols Isaf and Naila at which (the) Quraysh used to slaughter their sacrifices. He brought a pick-axe and began to dig where he had been commanded. (The) Quraysh seeing him at work came up and refused to allow him to dig between their two idols where they sacrificed. Abdul-Muttalib then told his son to stand by and protect him while he dug, for he was determined to carry out what he had been commanded to do. When they saw that he was not going to stop work they left him severely alone. He had not dug deeply before the stone top of the well appeared and he gave thanks to God knowing that he had been rightly informed. As digging went further, he found the two gazelles of gold which Jurhum had buried there when they left Mecca. He also found some swords and coats of mail from Qala*. (* A mountain in Syria, though other sites have been suggested. See Yaqut.)

(the) Quraysh claimed that they had a right to share in this find. Abdul-Muttalib denied this, but was willing to submit the matter to the sacred lot. He said that he would make two arrows for the Kaaba, two for them, and two for himself. The two arrows which came out from the quiver would determine to whom the property belonged. This was agreed, and accordingly he made two yellow arrows for the Kaaba, two black ones for himself, and two white ones for (the) Quraysh. They were then given to the priest in charge of the divinatory arrows, which were thrown beside Hubal. (Hubal was an image in the middle of the Kaaba, indeed the greatest of their images. It is that referred to by Abu Sufyan ibn Harb at the battle of Uhud when he cried 'Arise Hubal', i.e. Make your religion victorious!)

Abdul-Muttalib began to pray to God, and when the priest threw the arrows the two yellow ones for the gazelles came out in favour of the Kaaba. The two black ones allotted the swords and coats of mail to Abdul-Muttalib, and the two arrows of (the) Quraysh remained behind. Abdul-Muttalib made the swords into a door for the Kaaba and overlaid the door with the gold of the gazelles. This was the first golden ornament of the Kaaba, at any rate so they allege. Then Abdul-Muttalib took charge of the supply of Zamzam water to the pilgrims.

WELLS BELONGING TO THE CLANS OF THE QURAYSH IN MECCA

Before the digging of Zamzam (the) Quraysh had already dug wells in Mecca, according to what Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai told me from Mohammed b. Ishaq. He said that Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf dug al-Tawiy which is a well in the upper part of Mecca near al-Bayda, the house of Mohammed b. Yusuf al-Thaqafi.

Hashim b. Abdu Manaf dug Badhdhar which is near al-Mustandhar, a spur of Mount al-Khandama at the mouth of the pass of Abu Talib. They allege that when he had dug it he said: 'I will make it a means of subsistence for the people' (110).

He* dug Sajla which is a well belonging to al-Mutim b. Adly b. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf which is still used today. (* The editor has been untidy here. Commentators point out that Hashim did not dig this well, and al-Suhayli quotes a poem beginning 'I am Quaaayy and I dug Sajla'.) The B. Naufal allege that al-Mutim bought it from Asad b. Hashim, while B. Hashim allege that he gave it to him when Zamzam was uncovered and people had no further use for the other wells.

Umayya b. Abdu Shams dug al-Hafir for himself. The B. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza dug Suqayya (Neither Yiqut (iii. 105 and 305) nor the ancients knew whether the well was called Suqayya or Shufayya. Azr. ii. 177 names only Shufayya.) which belongs to them. The B. Abdul-Dar dug Uram Ahrad. The B. Jumah dug al-Sunbula which belongs to Khalaf b. Wahb. The B. Sahn dug al-Ghamr which belongs to them.

There were some old wells outside Mecca dating from the time of Murra b. Kab and Kilab b. Murra from which the first princes of (the) Quraysh used to draw water, namely Rumm and Khumm. Rumm was dug by Murra b. Kab b. Luayy, and Khumm by B. Kilab b. Murra, and so was al-Hafir (It has just been said that Umayya b. Abdu Shams dug al-Hafir. Yiqut says Hafir . . . belongs to B. Taym b. Murra . . . al-Hazimi spelt it Jafr.' This may account for the inconsistency, as it seems that there were two wells, Hafir and Jafr, in Mecca.)

There is an old poem of Hudhayfa b. Ghanim, brother of B. Adly b. Kab b. Luayy (in), which runs:

In the good old days we were long satisfied
To get our water from Khumm or al-Hafir.

Zamzam utterly eclipsed the other wells from which the pilgrims used to get their water, and people went to it because it was in the sacred enclosure and because its water was superior to any other; and, too, because it was the well of Ismail b. Ibrahim. Because of it B. Abdu Manaf behaved boastfully towards (the) Quraysh and all other Arabs.

Here are some lines of Musafir b. Abu Amr b. Umayya b. Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf boasting over (the) Quraysh that they held the right of watering and feeding the pilgrims, and that they discovered Zamzam, and that B. Abdu Manaf were one family in which the honour and merit of one belonged to all:

Glory came to us from our fathers.
We have carried it to greater heights.
Do not we give the pilgrims water
And sacrifice the fat milch camels?
When death is at hand we are found
Brave and generous.

Though we perish (for none can live for ever)
A stranger shall not rule our kin.
Zamzam belongs to our tribe.
We will pluck out the eyes of those who look enviously at us.

Hudhayfa b. Ghanim [mentioned above] said:

(Weep for him) who watered the pilgrims, son of him who broke bread,
And Abdu Manaf that Fihri lord.
He laid bare Zamzam by the Maqam,
His control of the witter was a prouder boast than any man's (112).

ABDUL MUTTALIB'S VOW TO SACRIFICE HIS SON

It is alleged, and God only knows the truth, that when Abdul-Muttalib encountered the opposition of (the) Quraysh when he was digging Zamzam, he vowed that if he should have ten sons to grow up and protect him, he would sacrifice one of them to God at the Kaaba. Afterwards when he had ten sons who could protect him he gathered them together and told them about his vow and called on them to keep faith with God. They agreed to obey him and asked what they were to do. He said that each one of them must get an arrow, write his name on it, and bring it to him: this they did, and he took them before Hubal in the middle of the Kaaba. (The statue of) Hubal* stood by a well there. It was that well in which gifts made to the Kaaba were stored. (* Tabari adds the statue of Hubal being the greatest or most revered of the idols of the Quraysh in Mecca.)

Now beside Hubal there were seven arrows, each of them containing some words. One was marked 'bloodwit'. When they disputed about who should pay the bloodwit they cast lots with the seven arrows and he on whom the lot fell had to pay the money. Another was marked 'yes', and another 'no', and they acted accordingly on the matter on which the oracle had been invoked. Another was marked 'of you'; another mulsaq (Not a member of the tribe.), another 'not of you'; and the last was marked 'water'. If they wanted to dig for water, they cast lots containing this arrow and wherever it came forth they set to work. If they wanted to circumcise a boy, or make a marriage, or bury a body, or doubted someone's genealogy, they took him to Hubal with a hundred dirhams and a slaughter camel and gave them to the man who cast the lots; then they brought near the man with whom they were concerned saying, 'O our god this is A the son of B with whom we intend to do so and so; so show the right course concerning him.' Then they would say to the man who cast the arrows 'Cast!' and if there came out 'of you' then he was a true member of their tribe; and if there came out 'not of you' he was an ally; and if there came out mulsaq he had no blood relation to them and was not an ally. Where 'yes' came out in other matters, they acted accordingly; and if the answer was 'no' they deferred the matter for a year until they could bring it up again. They used to conduct their affairs according to the decision of the arrows.

Abdul-Muttalib said to the man with the arrows, 'Cast the lots for my sons with these arrows', and he told him of the vow which he had made.

Each man gave him the arrow on which his name was written. Now Abdullah was his father's youngest son, he and al-Zubayr and Abu Talib were born to Fatima

d. Amr b. Aidh b. Abd b. Imran b. Makhzum b. Yaqaza b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihri (113). It is alleged that Abdullah was Abdul-Muttalib's favourite son, and his father thought that if the arrow missed him he would be spared. (He was the father of the apostle of Allah.) When the man took the arrows to cast lots with them, Abdul-Muttalib stood by Hubal praying to Allah. Then the man cast lots and Abdullah's arrow came out. His father led him by the hand and took a large knife; then he brought him up to Isaf and Naila (Tabari: two idols of (the) Quraysh at which they slaughtered their sacrifices) to sacrifice him; but (the) Quraysh came out of their assemblies and asked what he was intending to do. When he said that he was going to sacrifice him they and his sons said 'By God! you shall never sacrifice him until you offer the greatest expiatory sacrifice for him. If you do a thing like this there will be no stopping men from coming to sacrifice their sons, and what will become of the people then?' Then said al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Amr b. Makhzum b. Yaqaza, Abdullah's mother being from his tribe, 'By God, you shall never sacrifice him until you offer the greatest expiatory sacrifice for him. Though his ransom be all our property we will redeem him.' (the) Quraysh and his sons said that he must not do it, but take him to the Hijaz* for there there was a sorceress who had a familiar spirit, and he must consult her. (* The region of which Medina was the centre. See: Lammens, Islamic Occidentals 300 f.). Then he would have liberty of action. If she told him to sacrifice him, he would be no worse off; and if she gave him a favourable response, he could accept it. So they went off as far as Medina and found that she was in Khaybar, so they allege. So they rode on until they got to her, and when Abdul-Muttalib acquainted her with the facts she told them to go away until her familiar spirit visited her and she could ask him. When they had left her Abdul-Muttalib prayed to Allah, and when they visited her the next day she said, 'Word has come to me. How much is the blood money among you?' They told her that it was ten camels, as indeed it was. She told them to go back to their country and take the young man and ten camels. Then cast lots for them and for him; if the lot falls against your man, add more camels, until your lord is satisfied. If the lot falls against the camels then sacrifice them in his stead, for your lord will be satisfied and your client escape death. So they returned to Mecca, and when they had agreed to carry out their instructions, Abdul-Muttalib was praying to Allah. Then they brought near Abdullah and ten camels while Abdul-Muttalib stood by Hubal praying to Allah. Then they cast lots and the arrow fell against Abdullah. They added ten more camels and the lot fell against Abdullah, and so they went on adding ten at a time, until there were one hundred camels, when finally the lot fell against them. (The) Quraysh and those who were present said, 'At last your lord is satisfied Abdul-Muttalib.' 'No, by God,* he answered (so they say), 'not until I cast lots three times.' This they did and each time the arrow fell against the camels. They were duly slaughtered and left there and no man was kept back or hindered (from eating them) (114).

OF THE WOMAN WHO OFFERED HERSELF IN MARRIAGE TO ABDULLAH B. ABDUL-MUTTALIB

Taking Abdullah by the hand Abdul-Muttalib went away and they passed—so it is alleged—a woman of B. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy b. Kilab b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihri who was the sister of Waraq b. Naufal b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza, who was at the Kaaba. When she looked at him she asked, 'Where are you going Abdullah?' He replied, 'With my father.' She said, 'If you will take me you can have as many camels as were sacrificed in your stead.' 'I am with my father and I cannot act against his wishes and leave him', he replied.

Abdul-Muttalib brought him to Wahb b. Abdu Manaf b. Zuhra b. Kilab b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir who was the leading man of B. Zuhra in birth and honour, and he married him to his daughter Amina, she being the most excellent woman among the Quraysh in birth and position at that time. Her mother was Barra d. Abdul-Uzza b. Uthman b. Abdul-Dar b. Qusayy b. Kilab b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir. Barra's mother was Umm Habib d. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy by Kilab b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir. Umm Habib's mother was Barra d. Auf b. Ubayd b. Uwayj b. Adiy b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir.

It is alleged that Abdullah consummated his marriage immediately and his wife conceived the apostle of God (Mohammed). Then he left her presence and met the woman who had proposed to him. He asked her why she did not make the proposal that she made to him the day before; to which she replied that the light that was with him the day before had left him, and she no longer had need of him. She had heard from her brother Waraqa b. Naufal, who had been a Christian and studied the scriptures, that a prophet would arise among this people.

My father Ishaq b. Yasar told me that he was told that Abdullah went in to a woman that he had beside Amina d. Wahb when he had been working in clay and the marks of the clay were on him. She put him off when he made a suggestion to her because of the dirt that was on him. He then left her and washed and bathed himself, and as he made his way to Amina he passed her and she invited him to come to her. He refused and went to Amina who conceived Mohammed. When he passed the woman again he asked her if she wanted anything and she said 'No! When you passed me there was a white blaze between your eyes and when I invited you you refused me and went in to Amina, and she has taken it away.'

It is alleged that that woman of his used to say that when he passed by her between his eyes there was a blaze like the blaze of a horse. She said:

I invited him hoping that that would be in me, but he refused me and went to Amina and she conceived the apostle of God.' So the apostle of God was the noblest of his people in birth and the greatest in honour both on his father's and his mother's side. God bless and preserve him!

WHAT WAS SAID TO AMINA WHEN SHE HAD CONCEIVED THE APOSTLE

It is alleged in popular stories (and only God knows the truth) that Amina d. Wahb, the mother of God's apostle, used to say when she was pregnant with God's apostle that a voice said to her, "You are pregnant with the lord of this people and when he is born say, "I put him in the care of the One from the evil of every envier; then call him Mohammed.'" As she was pregnant with him she saw a light come forth from her by which she could see the castles of Busra in Syria. Shortly afterwards Abdullah the apostle's father died while his mother was still pregnant.

THE BIRTH OF THE APOSTLE AND HIS SUCKLING

The apostle was born on Monday, 12th Rabiul-awwal, in the year of the elephant. Al-Muttalib b. Abdullah who had it from his grandfather Qays b. Makhrama said, I and the apostle were born at the same time in the year of the elephant.' (Tabari: It is said that he was born in the house known as Ibn Yusuf's; and it is said that the apostle gave it to Aqil b. Abu Talib who kept it until he died. His son sold it to Mohammed b. Yusuf, the brother of al-Hajjaj, and he incorporated it in the house he built. Later Khayzuran separated it therefrom and made it into a mosque.) (Guillame: Khayzuran was the wife of the caliph al-Mahdi (158-69), and as he did not give her her freedom until after his accession and Ibn Ishaq died a few years before in the reign of Mansur, it would seem unlikely that Ibn Ishaq should have recorded this tradition.).

Salih b. Ibrahim b. Abdul-Rahman b. Auf b. Yahya b. Abdullah b. Abdul-Rahman b. Sad b. Zurara al-Ansari said that his tribesmen said that Hassan b. Thabit said: I was a well-grown boy of seven or eight, understanding all that I heard, when I heard a Jew calling out at the top of his voice from the top of a fort in Yathrib (Medina) "O company of Jews" until they all came together and called out "Confound you, what is the matter?" He answered: "Tonight has risen a star under which Ahmad is to be born."

I asked Said b. Abdul-Rahman b. Hassan b. Thabit how old Hassan was when the apostle came to Medina and he said he was sixty when the apostle came, he being fifty-three. So Hassan heard this when he was seven years old.

After his birth his mother sent to tell his grandfather Abdul-Muttalib that she had given birth to a boy and asked him to come and look at him.

When he came she told him what she had seen when she conceived him and what was said to her and what she was ordered to call him. It is alleged that Abdul-Muttalib took him (before Hubal) in the (middle of the) Kaaba, where he stood and prayed to Allah thanking him for this gift.

Then he brought him out and delivered him to his mother, and he tried to find foster-mothers for him (115).

Halima d. Abu Dhuayb of B. Sad b. Bakr was asked to suckle him.

Abu Dhuayb was Abdullah b. al-Harith b. Shijna b. Jabir b. Rizam b. Nasira b. Qusayya b. Nasr b. Sad b. Bakr b. Hawazin b. Mansur b. Ikrima b. Khasafa b. Qays b. Aylan.

The prophet's foster-father was al-Harith b. Abdul-Uzza b. Rifaa b. Mallan b. Nasira b. Qusayya b. Nasr b. Sad b. Bakr b. Hawazin (116).

His foster-brother was Abdullah b. al-Harith; Unaysa and Hudhafa (or Judhama, name uncertain) were his foster-sisters. The latter was called al-Shayma, her people not using her proper name. These were the children of Hallma d. Abdullah b. al-Harith. It is reported that al-Shayma used to carry him in her arms to help her mother.

Jahm b. Abu Jahm the client of al-Harith b. Hatib al-Jumahi on the authority of Abdullah b. Jafar b. Abu Talib or from one who told him it as from him, informed me that Hallma the apostle's foster-mother used to say that she went forth from her country with her husband and little son whom she was nursing, among the women of her tribe, in search of other babies to nurse. This was a year of famine when they were destitute. She was riding a dusky she-donkey of hers with an old she-camel which did not yield a drop of milk. They could not sleep the whole night because of the weeping of her hungry child. She had no milk to give him, nor could their she-camel provide a morning draught, but we were hoping for rain and relief. I rode upon my donkey which had kept back the other riders through its weakness and emaciation so that it was a nuisance to them.

When we reached Mecca, we looked out for foster children, and the apostle of God was offered to everyone of us, and each woman refused him when she was told he was an orphan, because we hoped to get payment from the child's father. We said, "An orphan! and what will his mother and grandfather do?", and so we spurned him because of that. Every woman who came with me got a suckling except me, and when we decided to depart I said to my husband: "By God, I do not like the idea of returning with my friends without a suckling; I will go and take that orphan." Her eplied, "Do as you please; perhaps God will bless us on his account." So I went and took him for the sole reason that I could not find anyone else. I took him back to my baggage, and as soon as I put him in my bosom, my breasts overflowed with milk which he drank until he was satisfied, as also did his foster-brother. Then both of them slept, whereas before this we could not sleep with him. My husband got up and went to the old she-camel and lo, her udders were full; he milked it and he and I drank of her milk until we were completely satisfied, and we passed a happy night. In the morning my husband said: "Do you know, Hallma, you have taken a blessed creature?" I said, "By God, I hope so." Then we set out and I was riding my she-ass and carrying him with me, and she went at such a pace that the other donkeys could not keep up so that my companions said to me, "Confound you! stop and wait for us. Is this not the donkey on which you started?" "Certainly it is," I said. They replied, "By God, something extraordinary has happened." Then we came to our dwellings in the Banu Sa'd country and I do not know a country more barren than that.

When we had him with us my flock used to yield milk in abundance. We milked them and drank while other people had not a drop, nor could they find anything in their animals' udders, so that our people were saying to their shepherds, "Woe to you! send your flock to graze where the daughter of Abu Dhuayb's shepherd goes." Even so, their flocks came back hungry not yielding a drop of milk, while mine had milk in abundance. We ceased not to recognize this bounty as coming from God for a period of two years, when I weaned him. He was growing up as none of the other children grew and by the time he was two he was a well-made child. We brought him to his mother, though we were most anxious to keep him with us because of the blessing which he brought us. I said to her: "I should like you to leave my little boy with me until he becomes a big boy, for I am afraid on his account of the pest in Mecca." We persisted until she sent him back with us. (* Tabari here inserts Ya Ziru 'O nurse!' implying that Amina was not his mother. A strange reading.). ( Yersinia pestis, also known as 'The Plague of Justinian' which came from Central Asia and broke out between 541 and 542 AD and ravaged the classic civilisations until circa 750. In 600 AD Smallpox, an additional plague, spread from India via Arabia into Europe. One of the deadliest plagues in history, the devastating pandemic resulted in the deaths of an estimated 25-50 million people during two centuries, circa 20 - 30% of the entire population of Persia and the Eastern Roman Empire. In about 620 AD it devastated the population of the Arabic capital Petra and also killed Mohammed's family members, including his wife Khadija and his uncle Abu Talib who were his main supporters. After their loss, the often ill-tempered Mohammed became a robber, killer, and conqueror. The plague and the following famines contributed to the swift success of the Islamic conquest.).

Some months after our return he and his brother were with our lambs behind the tents when his brother came running and said to us, "Two men clothed in white have seized that (a) Qurayshi brother of mine and thrown him down and opened up his belly, and are stirring it up." We ran towards him and found him standing up with a livid face. We took hold of him and asked him what was the matter. He said, "Two men in white raiment came and threw me down and opened up my belly and searched therein for I know not what." (Koran: 94,1) So we took him back to our tent.

His father said to me, "I am afraid that this child has had a stroke, so take him back to his family before the result appears." So we picked him up and took him to his mother who asked why we had brought him when I had been anxious for his welfare and desirous of keeping him with me.

I said to her, "God has let my son live so far and I have done my duty. I am afraid that ill will befall him, so I have brought him back to you as you wished." She asked me what happened and gave me no peace until I told her. When she asked if I feared a demon possessed him, I replied that I did. She answered that no demon had any power over her son who had a great future before him, and then she told how when she was pregnant with him a light went out from her which illumined the castles of Busra in Syria, and that she had borne him with the least difficulty imaginable. When she bore him he put his hands on the ground lifting his head towards the heavens. "Leave him then and go in peace," she said.'

Thaur b. Yazid from a learned person who I think was Khalid b. Madan al Kalai told me that some of the apostle's companions asked him to tell them about himself. He said: I am what Abraham my father prayed for and the good news of (Tabari: my brother) Jesus. When my mother was carrying me she saw a light proceeding from her which showed her the castles of Syria. I was suckled among the B. Sad b. Bakr, and while I was with a brother of mine behind our tents shepherding the lambs, two men in white raiment came to me with a gold basin full of snow. Then they seized me and opened up my belly, extracted my heart and split it; then they extracted a black drop from it and threw it away; then they washed my heart and my belly with that snow until they had thoroughly cleaned them. Then one said to the other, weigh him against ten of his people; they did so and I outweighed them. Then they weighed me against a hundred and then a thousand, and I outweighed them. He said, "Leave him alone, for by God, if you weighed him against all his people he would outweigh them."

The apostle of God used to say, There is no prophet but has shepherded a flock. When they said, 'You, too, apostle of God?', he said Yes.'

The apostle of God used to say to his companions, I am the most Arab of you all. I am of (the) Quraysh, and I was suckled among the B. Sad b. Bakr.

It is alleged by some, but God knows the truth, that when his foster-mother brought him to Mecca he escaped her among the crowd while she was taking him to his people. She sought him and could not find him, so she went to Abdul-Muttalib and said: I brought Mohammed tonight and when I was in the upper part of Mecca he escaped me and I don't know where he is.' So Abdul-Muttalib went to the Kaaba praying to God to restore him. They assert that Waraqa b. Naufal b. Asad and another man of (the) Quraysh found him and brought him to Abdul-Muttalib saying, 'We have found this son of yours in the upper part of Mecca.' Abdul-Muttalib took him and put him on his shoulder as he went round the Kaaba confiding him to God's protection and praying for him; then he sent him to his mother Amina.

A learned person told me that what urged his foster-mother to return him to his mother, apart from what she told his mother, was that a number of Abyssinian Christians saw him with her when she brought him back after he had been weaned. They looked at him, asked questions about him, and studied him carefully, then they said to her, 'Let us take this boy, and bring him to our king and our country; for he will have a great future.'

We know all about him.' The person who told me this alleged that she could hardly get him away from them.

Amina dies and the apostle lives with his grandfather. The apostle lived with his mother Amina d. Wahb and his grandfather Abdul-Muttalib in God's care and keeping like a fine plant, God wishing to honour him. When he was six years old his mother Amina died.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm told me that the apostle's mother died in Abwa' between Mecca and Medina on her return from a visit with him to his maternal uncles of B. Adiy b. al-Najjar when he was six years old (117). Thus the apostle was left to his grandfather for whom they made a bed in the shade of the Kaaba. His sons used to sit round the bed until he came out to it, but none of them sat upon it out of respect for him. The apostle, still a little boy, used to come and sit on it and his uncles would drive him away. When Abdul-Muttalib saw this he said: 'Let my son alone, for by Allah he has a great future.' Then he would make him sit beside him on his bed and would stroke his back with his hand. It used to please him to see what he did.

THE DEATH OF ABDUL-MUTTALIB AND THE ELEGIES THEREON

When the apostle was eight years of age, eight years after the 'year of the elephant', his grandfather died. This date was given me by al-Abbas b. Abdullah b. Mabad b. al-Abbas from one of his family.

Mohammed b. Said b. al-Musayyib told me that when Abdul-Muttalib knew that death was at hand he summoned his six daughters Safiya, Barra, Atika, Umm Hakim al-Bayda, Umayma, and Arwa, and said to them, 'Compose elegies over me so that I may hear what you are going to say before I die.' (118)

Safiya d. Abdul-Muttalib said in mourning her father:

I could not sleep for the voices of the keening women,
Bewailing a man on the crown of life's road,
It caused the tears to flow
Down my cheeks like falling pearls
For a noble man, no wretched weakling,
Whose virtue was plain to all.
The generous Shayba, full of merits,
Thy good father inheritor of all virtue,
Truthful at home, no weakling,
Standing firm and self-reliant.
Powerful, fear-inspiring, massive,
Praised and obeyed by his people,
Of lofty lineage, smiling, virtuous,
A very rain when camels had no milk.
Noble was his grandfather without spot of shame,
Surpassing all men, bond or free,
Exceeding mild, of noble stock,
Who were generous, strong as lions,
Could men be immortal through ancient glory,
(Alas immortality is unobtainable!)
He would make his last night endure for ever
Through his surpassing glory and long descent.

His daughter Barra said:

Be generous, O eyes, with your pearly tears,
For the generous nature who never repelled a beggar.
Of glorious race, successful in undertaking,
Of handsome face, of great nobility.
Shayba, the laudable, the noble,
The glorious, the mighty, the renowned,
The clement, decisive in misfortunes,
Full of generosity, lavish in gifts,
Excelling his people in glory,
A light shining like the moon in its splendour.
Death came to him and spared him not,
Change and fortune and fate overtook him.

His daughter Atika said:

Be generous, O eyes, and not niggardly
With your tears when others sleep,
Weep copiously, O eyes, with your tears,
While you beat your faces in weeping.
Weep, O eyes, long and freely
For one, no dotard weakling,
The strong, generous in time of need,
Noble in purpose, faithful to his word.
Shayba the laudable, successful in undertaking,
The reliable and the steady,
A sharp sword in war
Destroying his enemies in battle,
Easy natured, open handed,
Loyal, stout, pure, good.
His house proudly rooted in high honour
Mounted to glory unobtainable by others.

His daughter Umm Hakim al-Bayda said:

Weep, O eye, generously, hide not thy tears,

Weep for the liberal and generous one,
Fie upon thee O eye, help me
With fast falling tears!

Weep for the best man who ever rode a beast,
Thy good father, a fountain of sweet water.
Shayba the generous, the virtuous,
Liberal in nature, praised for his gifts,
Lavish to his family, handsome,
Welcome as rain in years of drought.
A lion when the spears engage,
His womenfolk look on him proudly.
Chief of Kinana on whom their hopes rest,
When evil days brought calamity,
Their refuge when war broke out,
In trouble and dire distress.
Weep for him, refrain not from grief,
Make women weep for him as long as you live.

His daughter Umayma said:

Alas, has the shepherd of his people, the generous one, perished,
Who gave the pilgrims their water, the defender of our fame,
Who used to gather the wandering guest into his tents,
When the heavens begrudged their rain.
You have the noblest sons a man could have
And have never ceased to grow in fame, O Shayba!
Abul Harith, the bountiful, has left his place,
Go not far for every living thing must go far.
I shall weep for him and suffer as long as I live.
His memory deserves that I suffer.
May the Lord of men water thy grave with rain!
I shall weep for him though he lies in the grave.
He was the pride of all his people,
And was praised wherever praise was due.

His daughter Arwa said:

My eye wept and well it did
For the generous modest father,
The pleasant natured man of Mecca's vale,
Noble in mind, lofty in aim,
The bountiful Shayba full of virtues,
Thy good father who has no peer,
Long armed, elegant, tall,
'Twas (= it was) as though his forehead shone with light,
Lean waisted, handsome, full of virtues,
Glory, rank, and dignity were his,
Resenting wrong, smiling, able,
His ancestral fame could not be hid,
The refuge of Malik, the spring of Fihir,
When judgement was sought he spoke the last word.
He was a hero, generous, liberal,
And bold when blood was to be shed,
When armed men were afraid of death
So that the hearts of most of them were as air (Koran: 14.44 And their hearts were air).
Forward he went with gleaming sword,
The cynosure of all eyes.

Mohammed b. Said b. al-Musayyib told me that Abdul-Muttalib made a sign to the effect that he was satisfied with the elegies, for he could not speak (119).
Hudhayfa b. Ghanim, brother of B. Adiy b. Kab b. Luayy, mentioned his superiority and that of Qusayy and his sons over the Quraysh, because he had been seized for a debt of 4,000 dirhams* in Mecca and Abu Lahab Abdul Uzza b. Abdul-Muttalib passed by and redeemed him:

O eyes, let the generous tears flow down the breast,
Weary not, may you be washed with falling rain,
Be generous with your tears, every morn
Weeping for a man whom fate did not spare.
(* Dirham, dirhem or dirhm was and, in some cases, still is a unit of currency in several Arab states. It was formerly the related unit of mass, the Ottoman 'dram', in the Ottoman Empire and old Persian states. One silver dirham used to weigh circa 3.36 grammes, 4,000 dirhams weigh almost 14.5 kg. The name derives from the name of the ancient Greek currency, drachma or drachmon. The dirham / drachma is equivalent to one denarius. One denarius was equal to 4 sesterces. Religious literature, such as the Pahlavi Vīdevdad, provide an idea of the purchasing power of the drachma: One sheep cost three sters or sestertius (Vd. 4.2); a cow 12, 14, or 30 sters, depending on whether it was of inferior, medium, or superior quality (Vd. 7.41); and a man 125 sters. According to Madayan i hazar dadestan (12.7-9), a slave was sold for 500 drachmas and a sheep for 10 (104.6), but a good piece of land was worth more than 500 drachmas (Vd. 4.2). According to this, 4,000 dirhams are a huge amount of money.)

Weep floods of tears while life does last,
Over (the) Quraysh's modest hero who concealed his good deeds,

A powerful zealous defender of his dignity,
Handsome of face, no weakling, and no braggart,
The famous prince, generous and liberal,
Spring rain of LuAyy in drought and dearth,
Best of all the sons of Maadd,
Noble in action, in nature and in race,
Their best in root and branch and ancestry.
Most famous in nobility and reputation,
First in glory, kindness and sagacity,
And in virtue when the lean years exact their toll.
Weep over Shayba the praiseworthy, whose face
Illumined the darkest night, like the moon at the full,
Who watered the pilgrims, son of him who broke bread

(Cf. p. 66. Or, 'then for the good Hashim; Ulkhayr for Iikhubz),

And Abdu Manaf that Fihri lord,
Who uncovered Zamzam by the Sanctuary,
Whose control of the water was a prouder boast than any man's.

Let every captive in his misery weep for him
And the family of Qusayy, poor and rich alike.
Noble are his sons, both young and old,
They have sprung from the eggs of a hawk,
Qusayy who opposed Kinana all of them,
And guarded the temple in weal and woe.
Though fate and its changes bore him away,
He lived happy in successful achievement,
He left behind well armed men
Bold in attack, like very spears.
Abu Utba who gave me his gift,
White blood camels of the purest white.
Hamza like the moon at the full rejoicing to give,
Chaste and free from treachery,
And Abdu Manaf the glorious, defender of his honour,

Kind to his kindred, gentle to his relatives.
Their men are the best of men,
Their young men like the offspring of kings who neither perish nor diminish.

Whenever you meet one of their scions
You will find him going in the path of his forefathers.
They filled the vale with fame and glory
When rivalry and good works had long been practised (Cf. Sura 2.143 'Vie with one another in good works', and cf. 5.53 for this use of the verb istabaqa),

Among them are great builders and buildings,
Abdu Manaf their grandfather being the repairer of their fortunes,

When he married Auf to his daughter to give us protection

From our enemies when the Banu Fihri betrayed us,
We went through the land high and low under his protection,

Until our camels could plunge into the sea.
They lived as townsmen while some were nomads

None but the sheikhs of Banu Amr (The sons of Hashim are meant: his name was Amr. So Cairo editors.) were there,

They built many houses and dug wells
Whose waters flowed as though from the great sea
That pilgrims and others might drink of them,
When they hastened to them on Three days their camels lay
Quietly between the mountains and the hijr.
Of old we had lived in plenty,
Drawing our water from Khumm or al-Hafr.
They forgot wrongs normally avenged,
And overlooked foolish slander,
They collected all the allied tribesmen,
And turned from us the evil of the Banu Bakr.
O Kharija (i.e. Kharija b. Hudhafa.), when I die cease not to thank them

Until you are laid in the grave,
And forget not Ibn Lubna's kindness,
A kindness that merits thy gratitude.
And thou Ibn Lubna art from Qusayy when genealogies are sought

Where man's highest hope is attained,
Thyself has gained the height of glory
And joined it to its root in valour.
Surpassing and exceeding thy people in generosity
As a boy thou wast superior to every liberal chief.
Thy mother will be a pure pearl of Khuzaa,
When experienced genealogists one day compile a roll.

To the heroes of Sheba she can be traced and belongs.
How noble her ancestry in the summit of splendour!
Abu Shamir is of them and Amr b. Malik
And Dhu Jadan and Abul-Jabr are of her people, and AsAd who led the people for twenty years
Assuring victory in those lands (120).

Matrud b. Kab the Khuzaite bewailing Abdul-Muttalib and the sons of Abdu Manaf said:

O wanderer ever changing thy direction,
Why hast thou not asked of the family of Abdu Manaf?

Good God, if you had lived in their homeland
They would have saved you from injury and unworthy marriages;

Their rich mingle with their poor
So that their poor are as their wealthy.
Munificent when times were bad,
Who travel with the caravans of (the) Quraysh
Who feed men when the winds are stormy
Until the sun sinks into the sea.

Since you have perished, O man of great deeds, Never has the necklace of a woman drooped over your like*

Save your father alone, that generous man, and
The bountiful Muttalib, father of his guests.

(* i.e. 'never has your equal been born'. The figure is that of a woman nursing a baby while her necklace falls over the child at her breast. The correct reading would seem to be iqd not aqd; dhd nifd means 'possessor of pendant earrings', i.e. a woman. Dr. Arafat suggests that Aqd 'girdle' should be read and the line would then run: 'Never has the knot of a woman's girdle run over your like. The general sense would be the same, but the particular reference would be to a pregnant woman.)

When Abdul-Muttalib died his son al-Abbas took charge of Zamzam and the watering of the pilgrims, although he was the youngest of his father's sons. When Islam came it was still in his hands and the apostle confirmed his right to it and so it remains with the family of al-Abbas to this day.

ABU JALIB BECOMES GUARDIAN OF THE APOSTLE

After the death of Abdul-Muttalib the apostle lived with his uncle Abu Talib, for (so they allege) the former had confided him to his care because he and Abdullah, the apostle's father, were brothers by the same mother, Fatima d. Amr b. Aidh b. Abd b. Imran b. Makhzum (121). It was Abu Talib who used to look after the apostle after the death of his grandfather and he became one of his family.

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr told me that his father told him that there was a man of Lihb (122) who was a seer. Whenever he came to Mecca the (the) Quraysh used to bring their boys to him so that he could look at them and tell their fortunes. So Abu Talib brought him along with the others while he was still a boy. The seer looked at him and then something claimed his attention. That disposed of he cried, 'Bring me that boy.'

When Abu Talib saw his eagerness he hid him and the seer began to say, 'Woe to you, bring me that boy I saw just now, for by Allah he has a great future.'

THE STORY OF BAHIRA

Abu Talib had planned to go in a merchant caravan to Syria, and when all preparations had been made for the journey, the apostle of God, so they allege, attached himself closely to him so that he took pity on him and said that he would take him with him, and that the two of them should never part; or words to that effect. When the caravan reached Busra in Syria, there was a monk there in his cell by 'the name of Bahira, who was well versed in the knowledge of Christians. A monk had always occupied that cell. There he gained his knowledge from a book that was in the cell, so they allege, handed on from generation to generation. They had often passed by him in the past and he never spoke to them or took any notice of them until this year, and when they stopped near his cell he made a great feast for them. It is alleged that that was because of something he saw while in his cell. They allege that while he was in his cell he saw the apostle of God in the caravan when they approached, with a cloud overshadowing him among the people. Then they came and stopped in the shadow of a tree near the monk. He looked at the cloud when it overshadowed the tree, and its branches were bending and drooping over the apostle of God until he was in the shadow beneath it. When Bahira saw that, he came out of his cell and sent word to them. I have prepared food for you, O men of (the) Quraysh, and I should like you all to come both great and small, bond and free.' One of them said to him, 'By God, Bahira! something extraordinary has happened today, you used not to treat us so, and we have often passed by you. What has befallen you today?' He answered, 'You are right in what you say, but you are guests and I wish to honour you and give you food so that you may eat.' So they gathered together with him, leaving the apostle of God behind with the baggage under the tree, on account of his extreme youth. When Bahira looked at the people he did not see the mark which he knew and found in his books (Lit. 'with him'), so he said, 'Do not let one of you remain behind and not come to my feast.' They told him that no one who ought to come had remained behind except a boy who was the youngest of them and had stayed with their baggage. Thereupon he told them to invite him to come to the meal with them. One of the men of (the) Quraysh said, 'By al-Lat and al-Uzza, we are to blame for leaving behind the son of Abdullah b. Abdul-Muttalib.' Then he got up and embraced him and made him sit with the people. When Bahira saw him he stared at him closely, looking at his body and finding traces of his description (in the Christian books). When the people had finished eating and gone away, Bahira got up and said to him, 'Boy, I ask you by al-Lat and al-Uzza to answer my question.' Now Bahira said this only because he had heard his people swearing by these gods. They allege that the apostle of God said to him, 'Do not ask me by al-Lat and al-Uzza, for by Allah nothing is more hateful to me than these two.' Bahira answered, 'Then by Allah, tell me what I ask'; he replied, Ask me what you like'; so he began to ask him about what happened in his (waking and in his) sleep, and his habits (haya, perhaps 'his body'), and his affairs generally, and what the apostle of God told him coincided with what Bahira knew of his description. Then he looked at his back and saw the seal of prophethood between his shoulders in the very place described in his book (123). When he had finished he went to his uncle Abu Talib and asked him what relation this boy was to him, and when he told him he was his son, he said that he was not, for it could not be that the father of this boy was alive. 'He is my nephew,' he said, and when he asked what had become of his father he told him that he had died before the child was born. 'You have told the truth,' said Bahira. 'Take your nephew back to his country and guard him carefully against the Jews, for by Allah! if they see him and know about him what I know, they will do him evil; a great future lies before this nephew of yours, so take him home quickly.'

So his uncle took him off quickly and brought him back to Mecca when he had finished his trading in Syria. People allege that Zurayr and Tammam and Daris, who were people of the scriptures, had noticed in the apostle of God what Bahira had seen during that journey which he took with his uncle, and they tried to get at him, but Bahira kept them away and reminded them of God and the mention of the description of him which they would find in the sacred books, and that if they tried to get at him they would not succeed. He gave them no peace until they recognized the truth of what he said and left him and went away. The apostle of God grew up, God protecting him and keeping him from the vileness of heathenism because he wished to honour him with apostleship, until he grew up to be the finest of his people in manliness, the best in character, most noble in lineage, the best neighbour, the most kind, truthful, reliable, the furthest removed from filthiness and corrupt morals, through loftiness and nobility, so that he was known among his people as 'The trustworthy' because of the good qualities which God had implanted in him. The apostle, so I was told, used to tell how God protected him in his childhood during the period of heathenism, saying, I found myself among the boys of (the) Quraysh carrying stones such as boys play with; we had all uncovered ourselves, each taking his shirt (Properly a wrapper which covered the lower part of the body.) and putting it round his neck as he carried the stones.

I was going to and fro in the same way, when an unseen figure slapped me most painfully saying, "Put your shirt on"; so I took it and fastened it on me and then began to carry the stones upon my neck wearing my shirt alone among my fellows*.

(* Suhayli, 120, after pointing out that a somewhat similar story is told of the prophet's modesty and its preservation by supernatural means, at the time that the rebuilding of the Kaaba was undertaken when Mohammed was a grown man, says significantly that if the account here is correct divine intervention must have occurred twice. It may well be that he was led to make this comment by the fact that Tabari omits the story altogether and in its place (Tabari 1126. 10) writes: Ibn Hamid said that Salama told him that Ibn Ishaq related from Mohammed b. Abdullah b. Qays b. Makhrama from al-Hasan b. Mohammed b. Ali b. Abu Talib from his father Mohammed b. Ali from his grandfather Ali b. Abu Talib: I heard the apostle say, "I never gave a thought to what the people of the pagan era used to do but twice, because God came between me and my desires. Afterwards I never thought of evil when God honoured me with apostleship. Once I said to a young Qurayshi who was shepherding with me on the high ground of Mecca, I should like you to look after my beasts for me while I go and spend the night in Mecca as young men do.' He agreed and I went off with that intent, and when I came to the first house in Mecca I heard the sound of tambourines and flutes and was told that a marriage had just taken place. I sat down to look at them when God smote my ear and I fell asleep until I was woken by the sun. I came to my friend and in reply to his questions told him what had happened. Exactly the same thing occurred on another occasion. Afterwards I never thought of evil until God honoured me with his apostleship."*)

THE SACRILEGIOUS WAR (124)

This war broke out when the apostle was twenty years of age. It was so called because these two tribes, Kinana and Qays Aylan, fought in the sacred month. The chief of (the) Quraysh and Kinana was Harb b. Umayya b. Abdu Shams. At the beginning of the day Qays got the upper hand but by midday victory went to Kinana (125).

THE APOSTLE OF GOD MARRIES KHADIJA (126)

(Khadija was a merchant woman of dignity and wealth. She used to hire men to carry merchandise outside the country on a profit-sharing basis, for Quraysh were a people given to commerce. Now when she heard about the prophet's truthfulness, trustworthiness, and honourable character, she sent for him and proposed that he should take her goods to Syria and trade with them, while she would pay him more than she paid others. He was to take a lad of hers called Maysara. The apostle of God accepted the proposal, and the two set forth until they came to Syria.

The apostle stopped in the shade of a tree near a monk's cell, when the monk came up to Maysara and asked who the man was who was resting beneath the tree. He told him that he was of (the) Quraysh, the people who held the sanctuary; and the monk exclaimed: 'None but a prophet ever sat beneath this tree.'

Then the prophet sold the goods he had brought and bought what he wanted to buy and began the return journey to Mecca. The story goes that at the height of noon when the heat was intense as he rode his beast Maysara saw two angels shading the apostle from the sun's rays. When he brought Khadija her property she sold it and it amounted to double or thereabouts. Maysara for his part told her about the two angels who shaded him and of the monk's words. Now Khadija was a determined, noble, and intelligent woman possessing the properties with which God willed to honour her. So when Maysara told her these things she sent to the apostle of God and—so the story goes—said: 'O son of my uncle I like you because of our relationship and your high reputation among your people, your trustworthiness and good character and truthfulness.' Then she proposed marriage. Now Khadija at that time was the best born woman in (the) Quraysh, of the greatest dignity and, too, the richest. All her people were eager to get possession of her wealth if it were possible.

Khadija was the daughter of Khuwaylid b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy b. Kilab b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir. Her mother was Fatima d. Zaida b. al-Asamm b. Rawaha b. Hajar b. Abd b. Mais b. Amir b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir. Her mother was Hala d. Abdu Manaf b. al-Harith b. Amr b. Munqidh b. Amr b. Mais b. Amir b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir. Hala's mother was Qilaba d. Suayd b. Sad b. Sahn b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir.

The apostle of God told his uncles of Khadija's proposal, and his uncle Hamza b. Abdul-Muttalib went with him to Khuwaylid b. Asad and asked for her hand and he married her (127).

She was the mother of all the apostle's children except Ibrahim, namely al-Qasim (whereby he was known as Abul-Qasim); al-Tahir, al-Tayyib*, Zaynab, Ruqayya, Umm Kulthum, and Fatima (128). (* Commentators point out that these are not names but epithets (The Pure, The Good) applied to the one son Abdullah.)

Al-Qasim, al-Tayyib, and al-Tahir died in paganism. All his daughters lived into Islam, embraced it, and migrated with him to Medina (129).

Khadija had told Waraqa b. Naufal b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza, who was her cousin and a Christian who had studied the scriptures and was a scholar, what her slave Maysara had told her that the monk had said and how he had seen the two angels shading him. He said, If this is true, Khadija, verily Mohammed is the prophet of this people. I knew that a prophet of this people was to be expected. His time has come,' or words to that effect. Waraqa was finding the time of waiting wearisome and used to say 'How long?' Some lines of his on the theme are:

I persevered and was persistent in remembering An anxiety which often evoked tears. And Confirmatory evidence kept coming from Khadija.
Long have I had to wait, O Khadija,
In the vale of Mecca in spite of my hope
That I might see the outcome of thy words.
I could not bear that the words of the monk
You told me of should prove false:
That Mohammed should rule over us
Overcoming those who would oppose him.
And that a glorious light should appear in the land
To preserve men from disorders.
His enemies shall meet disaster
And his friends shall be victorious.
Would that I might be there then to see,
For I should be the first of his supporters,
Joining in that which Quraysh hate
However loud they shout in that Mecca of theirs.
I hope to ascend through him whom they all dislike
To the Lord of the Throne though they are cast down.
Is it folly not to disbelieve in Him
Who chose him Who raised the starry heights?
If they and I live, things will be done
Which will throw the unbelievers into confusion.
And if I die, 'tis but the fate of mortals
To suffer death and dissolution.

THE REBUILDING OF THE KAABA WHEN THE APOSTLE ACTED AS UMPIRE

The Quraysh decided to rebuild the Kaaba when the apostle was thirty-five years of age (fifteen years after the sacrilegious war). They were planning to roof it and feared to demolish it, for it was made of loose stones above a man's height, and they wanted to raise it and roof it because men had stolen part of the treasure of the Kaaba which used to be in a well in the middle of it. The treasure was found with Duwayk a freedman of B. Mulayh b. Amr of Khuzaa (130). The Quraysh cut his hand off; they say that the people who stole the treasure deposited it with Duwayk.

(Tabari: Among those suspected were al-Harith b. Amir b. Naufal, and Abu Ihab b. Aziz b. Qays b. Suwayd al-Tamimi who shared the same mother, and Abu Lahab b. Abdul-Muttalib. The Quraysh alleged that it was they who took the Kaaba's treasure and deposited it with Duwayk, a freedman of B. Mulayh, and when (the) Quraysh suspected them they informed against Duwayk and so his hand was cut off. It was said that they had left it with him, and people say that when (the) Quraysh felt certain that the treasure had been with al-Harith they took him to an Arab sorceress and in her rhymed utterances she decreed that he should not enter Mecca for ten years because he had profaned the sanctity of the Kaaba. They allege that he was driven out and lived in the surrounding country for ten years.)

Now a ship belonging to a Greek merchant had been cast ashore at Judda and became a total wreck. They took its timbers and got them ready to roof the Kaaba. It happened that in Mecca there was a Copt (Egyptian Christian) who was a carpenter, so everything they needed was ready to hand. Now a snake used to come out of the well in which the sacred offerings were thrown and sun itself every day on the wall of the Kaaba. It was an object of terror because whenever anyone came near it it raised its head and made a rustling noise and opened its mouth, so that they were terrified of it. While it was thus sunning itself one day, God sent a bird which seized it and flew off with it. Thereupon (the) Quraysh said, 'Now we may hope that God is pleased with what we propose to do. We have a friendly craftsman, we have got the wood and God has rid us of the snake.' When they had decided to pull it down and rebuild it Abu Wahb b. Amr b. Aidh b. Abd b. Imran b.

Makhzum (131) got up and took a stone from the Kaaba and it leapt out of his hand so that it returned to its place. He said, 'O Quraysh, do not bring into this building ill-gotten gains, the hire of a harlot, nor money taken in usury, nor anything resulting from wrong and violence.' People ascribe this saying to al-Walid b. al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum.

Abdullah b. Abu Najih al-Makki told me that he was told on the authority of Abdullah b. Safwan b. Umayya b. Khalaf b. Wahb b. Hudhafa b. Jumah b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab b. Luayy that he saw a son of Jada b. Hubayra b. Abu Wahb b. Amr circumambulating the temple, and when he inquired about him he was told who he was. Abdullah b. Safwan said, It was the grandfather of this man (meaning Abu Wahb), who took the stone from the Kaaba when (the) Quraysh decided to demolish it and it sprang from his hand and returned to its place, and it was he who said the words which have just been quoted.'

Abu Wahb was the maternal uncle of the apostle's father. He was a noble of whom an Arab poet said:

If I made my camel kneel at Abu Wahb's door,
It would start the morrow's journey with well filled saddle-bags;
He was the noblest of the two branches of LuAyy b.
Ghalib,

When noble lineage is reckoned.
Refusing to accept injustice, delighting in giving,
His ancestors were of the noblest stock.
A great pile of ashes lie beneath his cooking-pot,
He fills his dishes with bread topped by luscious meat.
(Guillaume: The second half of this verse is reminiscent of Imruul-Qays (1.12) where the fine fat flesh of the camel is compared with white silk finely woven.)

Then Quraysh divided the work among them; the section near the door was assigned to B. Abdu Manaf and Zuhra. The space between the black stone and the southern corner, to B. Makhzum and the Qurayshite tribes which were attached to them. The back of the Kaaba to B. Jumah and Sahn, the two sons of Amr b. Husays b. Kab b. Luayy. The side of the hijr to B. Abdul-Dar b. Qusayy and to B. Asad b. al-Uzza b. Qusayy, and to B. Adiy b. Kab b. Luayy which is the Hatim.

The people were afraid to demolish the temple, and withdrew in awe from it. Al-Walid b. al-Mughira said, 'I will begin the demolition.' So he took a pick-axe, went up to it saying the while, 'O God, do not be afraid (The feminine form indicates that the Kaaba itself is addressed.)

(132), O God, we intend only what is best.' Then he demolished the part at the two corners (Or 'two sacred stones'). That night the people watched, saying, 'We will look out; if he is smitten we won't destroy any more of it and will restore it as it was; but if nothing happens to him then God is pleased with what we are doing and we will demolish it.' In the morning al-Walid returned to the work of demolition and the people worked with him, until they got down to the foundation of Abraham (Guillaume: Abraham does not appear here in Tabari) They came on green stones like camel's humps joined one to another.

A certain traditionist told me that a man of (the) Quraysh inserted a crowbar between two stones in order to get one of them out, and when he moved the stone the whole of Mecca shuddered so they left the foundation alone (so they had reached the foundation.)

I was told that (the) Quraysh found in the corner a writing in Syriac. They could not understand it until a Jew read it for them. It was as follows: I am Allah the Lord of Bakka, I created it on the day that I created heaven and earth and formed the sun and moon, and I surrounded it with seven pious angels. It will stand while its two mountains stand, a blessing to its people with milk and water,' and I was told that they found in the maqdm a writing, 'Mecca is God's holy house, its sustenance comes to it from three directions; let its people not be the first to profane it.'

Layth b. Abu Sulaym alleged that they found a stone in the Kaaba forty years before the prophet's mission, if what they say is true, containing the inscription 'He that soweth good shall reap joy; he that soweth evil shall reap sorrow; can you do evil and be rewarded with good? Nay, as grapes cannot be gathered from thorns.' (Guillaume: A strange place in which to find a quotation from the Gospel; cf. Matthew 7. 16.)

The tribes of (the) Quraysh gathered stones for the building, each tribe collecting them and building by itself until the building was finished up to the black stone, where controversy arose, each tribe wanting to lift it to its place, until they went their several ways, formed alliances, and got ready for battle. The B. Abdul-Dar brought a bowl full of blood; then they and the B. Adiy b. Kab b. Luayy pledged themselves unto death and thrust their hands into the blood. For this reason they were called the blood-lickers. Such was the state of affairs for four or five nights, and then (the) Quraysh gathered in the mosque and took counsel and were equally divided on the question.

A traditionist alleged that Abu Umayya b. al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum who was at that time the oldest man of (the) Quraysh, urged them to make the first man to enter the gate of the mosque umpire in the matter in dispute. They did so and the first to come in was the apostle of God. When they saw him they said, 'This is the trustworthy one. We are satisfied. This is Mohammed.' When he came to them and they informed him of the matter he said, 'Give me a cloak,' and when it was brought to him he took the black stone and put it inside it and said that each tribe should take hold of an end of the cloak and they should lift it together. They did this so that when they got it into position he placed it with his own hand, and then building went on above it.

(The) Quraysh used to call the apostle of God before revelation came to him, 'the trustworthy one'; and when they had finished the building, according to their desire, al-Zubayr the son of Abdul-Muttalib said about the snake which made the Quraysh dread rebuilding the Kaaba:

I was amazed that the eagle went straight
To the snake when it was excited.
It used to rustle ominously
And sometimes it would dart forth.
ia6 When we planned to rebuild the Kaaba
It terrified us for it was fearsome.
When we feared its attack, down came the eagle,
Deadly straight in its swoop,
It bore it away, thus leaving us free
To work without further hindrance.
We attacked the building together,
We had its foundations (Qawaid perhaps = Uprights') and the earth.

On the morrow we raised the foundation,
None of our workers wore clothes.
Through it did God honour the sons of Luayy,
Its foundation was ever associated with them,

Banu Adly and Murra had gathered there,
Kilab having preceded them.
For this the King settled us there in power,
For reward is to be sought from God (133).

THE HUMS

I do not know whether it was before or after the year of the elephant that (the) Quraysh invented the idea of Hums and put it into practice. They said, 'We are the sons of Abraham, the people of the holy territory, the guardians of the temple and the citizens of Mecca. No other Arabs have rights like ours or a position like ours. The Arabs recognize none as they recognize us, so do not attach the same importance to the outside country as you do to the sanctuary, for if you do the Arabs will despise your taboo and will say, "They have given the same importance to the outside land as to the sacred territory."' So they gave up the halt at Arafat and the departure from it, while they recognised that these were institutions of the pilgrimage and the religion of Abraham. They considered that other Arabs should halt there and depart from the place; but they said, 'We are the people of the sanctuary, so it is not fitting that we should go out from the sacred territory and honour other places as we, the Hums, honour that; for the Hums are the people of the sanctuary.' They then proceeded to deal in the same way with Arabs who were born within and without the sacred territory. Kinana and Khuzaa joined with them in this (134).

The Hums went on to introduce innovations for which they had no warrant. They thought it wrong that they should eat cheese made of sour milk or clarify butter while they were in a state of taboo. They would not enter tents of camel-hair or seek shelter from the sun except in leather tents while they were in this state. They went further and refused to allow those outside the haram to bring food in with them when they came on the great or little pilgrimage. Nor could they circumambulate the house except in the garments of the Hums. If they had no such garments they had to go round naked. If any man or woman felt scruples when they had no hums garments, then they could go round in their ordinary clothes; but they had to throw them away afterwards so that neither they nor anyone else could make use of them. (The survival of the idea of contagious 'holiness' which on the one hand prohibited the introduction of profane food into the sanctuary, and when it could not prevent the introduction of profane clothes, forbade their use for common purposes after they had come in contact with taboo, would seem to indicate an antiquity far greater than that ascribed to these practices here.)

The Arabs called these clothes 'the cast-off'. They imposed all these restrictions on the Arabs, who accepted them and halted at Arafat, hastened from it, and circumambulated the house naked. The men at least went naked while the women laid aside all their clothes except a shift wide open back or front. An Arab woman who was going round the house thus said:

Today some or all of it can be seen,
But what can be seen I do not make common property!

Those who went round in the clothes in which they came from outside threw them away so that neither they nor anyone else could make use of them. An Arab mentioning some clothes which he had discarded and could not get again and yet wanted, said:

It's grief enough that I should return to her
As though she were a tabooed cast-off in front of the pilgrims.

i.e. she could not be touched.
This state of affairs lasted until God sent Mohammed and revealed to him when He gave him the laws of His religion and the customs of the pilgrimage: 'Then hasten onward from the place whence men hasten onwards, and ask pardon of God, for God is forgiving, merciful.' (Koran 2.195) The words are addressed to (the) Quraysh and 'men' refer to the Arabs. So in the rule of the hajj he hastened them up to Arafat and ordered them to halt there and to hasten thence.

In reference to their prohibition of food and clothes at the temple such as had been brought from outside the sacred territory God revealed to him: 'O Sons of Adam, wear your clothes at every mosque and eat and drink and be not prodigal, for He loves not the prodigal. Say, Who has forbidden the clothes which God has brought forth for His servants and the good things which He has provided? Say, They on the day of resurrection will be only for those who in this life believed. Thus do we explain the signs for people who have knowledge.' (Koran 7. 29) Thus God set aside the restrictions of the Hums and the innovations of (the) Quraysh against men's interests when He sent His apostle with Islam.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm from Uthman b. Abu Sulayman b. Jubayr b. Mutim from his uncle Nafi b. Jubayr from his father Jubayr b. Mutim said: I saw God's apostle before revelation came to him and lo he was halting on his beast in Arafat with men in the midst of his tribe until he quitted it with them—a special grace from God to him.'

(Azr. i. 115 f.: Uthman b. Saj from Mohammed b. Ishaq from al-Kalbi from Abu Salih, freedman of Umm Hani from Ibn Abbas: The Hums were (the) Quraysh, kinana, Khuzaa, al-Aus and al-Khazraj, Jutham, B. Rabia b. Amir b. Sasaa. Azd Shanua, Judham, Zubayd, B. Dhakwan of B. Salim, Amr al-Lat, Thaqif, Ghatafan, Ghauth, Adwan, Allaf, and Qudaa. When (the) Quraysh let an Arab marry one of their women they stipulated that the offspring should be an Ahmasi following their religion.

Al-Adram Taym b. Ghalib b. Fihir b. Malik b. al-Nadr b. Kinana married his son Majd to the daughter of Taym Rabia b. Amir b. Sasaa stipulating that his children from her should follow the sunna of (the) Quraysh. It is in reference to her that Labid b. Rabia b. Jafar al-Kilabi said:

My people watered the sons of Majd and Water Numayr and the tribes of Hilal.

Mansur b. Ikrima b. Khasafa b. Qays b. Aylan married Salma d. Dubaya b. Ali b. Yasur b. Sad b. Qays b. Aylan and she bore to him Hawazin. When he fell seriously ill she vowed that if he recovered she would make him a Hums, and when he recovered she fulfilled her vow. The Hums strictly observed the sacred months and never wronged their proteges therein nor wronged anyone therein. They went round the Kaaba wearing their clothes. If one of them before and at the beginning of Islam was in a state of taboo if he happened to be one of the housedwellers, i.e. living in houses or villages, he would dig a hole at the back of his house and go in and out by it and not enter by the door. The Hums used to say, 'Do not respect anything profane and do not go outside the sacred area during the hajj' so they cut short the rites of the pilgrimage and the halt at Arafat, it being in the profane area, and would not halt at it or go forth from it. They made their stopping-place at the extreme end of the sacred territory at Namira at the open space of al-Maziman, stopping there the night of Arafat and sheltering by day in the trees of Namira and starting from it to al-Muzdalifa. When the sun turbaned the tops of the mountains they set forth. They were called Hums because of their strictness in their religion.

... The year of Hdaybiya the prophet entered his house. One of the Ansar was with him and he stopped at the door, explaining that he was an Ahmasi. The apostle said, I am an Ahmasi too. My religion and yours are the same', so the Ansari went into the house by the door as he saw the apostle do.

Outsiders used to circumambulate the temple naked, both men and women. The B. Amir b. Sasaa and Akk were among those who did thus. When a woman went round naked she would put one hand behind her and the other in front.]' (* A great deal more follows in the name of Ibn Abbas. It is doubtful whether it comes from Ibn Ishaq, because though there is new matter in it, some statements which occur in the foregoing are repeated, so that it is probable that they reached Azraqi from another source. In the foregoing I have translated only passages which provide additional information.)

REPORTS OF ARAB SOOTHSAYERS, JEWISH RABBIS, AND CHRISTIAN MONKS

Jewish rabbis, Christian monks, and Arab soothsayers had spoken about the apostle of God before his mission when his time drew near. As to the rabbis and monks, it was about his description and the description of his time which they found in their scriptures and what their prophets had enjoined upon them. As to the Arab soothsayers they had been visited by satans from the jinn with reports which they had secretly overheard before they were prevented from hearing by being pelted with stars. Male and female soothsayers continued to let fall mention of some of these matters to which the Arabs paid no attention until God sent him and these things which had been mentioned happened and they recognised them. When the prophet's mission came the satans were prevented from listening and they could not occupy the seats in which they used to sit and steal the heavenly tidings for they were pelted with stars, and the jinn knew that that was due to an order which God had commanded concerning mankind. God said to His prophet Mohammed when He sent him as he was telling him about the jinn when they were prevented from listening and knew what they knew and did not deny what they saw; 'Say, It has been revealed to me that a number of the jinn listened and said "We have heard a wonderful Koran which guides to the right path, and we believe in it and we will not associate anyone with our Lord and that He (exalted be the glory of our Lord) hath not chosen a wife or a son. A foolish one among us used to speak lies against God, and we had thought men and jinn would not speak a lie against God and that when men took refuge with the jinn, they increased them in revolt," ending with the words: "We used to sit on places therein to listen; he who listens now finds a flame waiting for him. We do not know whether evil is intended against those that are on earth or whether their lord wishes to guide them in the right path".' (Koran 72.1 ff.) When the jinn heard the Koran they knew that they had been prevented from listening before that so that revelation should not be mingled with news from heaven so that men would be confused with the tidings which came from God about it when the proof came and doubt was removed: so they believed and acknowledged the truth. Then 'They returned to their people warning them, saying, O our people we have heard a book which was revealed after Moses confirming what went before it, guiding to the truth and to the upright path.' (Koran 46.28)

In reference to the saying of the jinn, 'that men took refuge with them and they increased them in revolt', Arabs of the Quraysh and others when they were journeying and stopped at the bottom of a vale to pass a night therein used to say, I take refuge in the lord of this valley of the jinn tonight from the evil that is therein' (135).

Yaqub (Jacob) b. Utba b. al-Mughira b. al-Akhnas told me that he was informed that the first Arabs to be afraid of falling stars when they were pelted with them were this clan of Thaqif, and that they came to one of their tribesmen called Amr b. Umayya, one of B. Ila who was a most astute and shrewd man, and asked him if he had noticed this pelting with stars. He said: 'Yes, but wait, for if they are the well-known stars which guide travellers by land and sea, by which the seasons of summer and winter are known to help men in their daily life, which are being thrown, then by God! it means the end of the world and the destruction of all that is in it. But if they remain constant and other stars are being thrown, then it is for some purpose which God intends towards mankind.'

Mohammed b. Muslim b. Shihab al-Zuhri on the authority of Ali b. al-Husayn b. Ali b. Abu Talib from Abdullah b. al-Abbas from a number of the Ansar mentioned that the apostle of God said to them, 'What were you saying about this shooting star?' They replied, 'We were saying, a king is dead, a king has been appointed, a child is born, a child has died.' He replied, It is not so, but when God has decreed something concerning His creation the bearers of the throne hear it and praise Him, and those below them praise Him, and those lower still praise Him because they have praised, and this goes on until the praise descends to the lowest heaven where they praise. Then they ask each other why, and are told that it is because those above them have done so and they say, "Why do you not ask those above you the reason?", and so it goes on until they reach the bearers of the throne who say that God has decreed so and so concerning His creation and the news descends from heaven to heaven to the lowest heaven where they discuss it, and the satans steal it by listening, mingling it with conjecture and false intelligence. Then they convey it to the soothsayers and tell them of it, sometimes being wrong and sometimes right, and so the soothsayers are sometimes right and sometimes wrong. Then God shut off the satans by these stars with which they were pelted, so soothsaying has been cut off today and no longer exists.'

Amr b. Abu Jafar from Mohammed b. Abdul-Rahman b. Abu Labiba from Ali b. al-Husayn b. Ali told me the same tradition as that of Ibn Shihab.

A learned person told me that a woman of B. Sahn called al-Ghaytala who was a soothsayer in the time of ignorance was visited by her familiar spirit one night. He chirped beneath her, then he said,

I know what I know,
The day of wounding and slaughter.

(* The reading here varies; the word anqada means the shriek of birds or the creaking noise of a door, and can be applied to a man's voice. If we read inqadda, it means the fall or the swoop of a bird. In view of the chirping and muttering of soothsayers all the world over, the first reading seems preferable.)

When the Quraysh heard of this they asked what he meant. The spirit came to her another night and chirped beneath her saying,

Death, what is death?
In it bones are thrown here and there*.

(* This ominous oracle can vie with any oracle from Delphi in obscurity. We can render, 'Glens what are glens?', and this, as the sequel shows, is the way Ibn Ishaq understood the enigma when the battles of Badr and Uhud took place in glens. But such a translation ignores the fact that the antecedent fihi (not fiha) must be a singular, and no form shuub is known in the singular. This translation carries with it the necessity of rendering the following line thus, 'Wherein Kab is lying prostrate', and commentators are unanimous that Kab refers to the tribe of Kab b. Luayy, who provided most of the slain in the battles of Badr and Uhud and so were found 'Thrown on their sides'. In view of the proof text cited by Lane, 2616b, where shab (people) and Kab (the tribe) and kiab (bones used as dice like our knuckle bones) are all found in a single couplet, I am inclined to think that the oracle is still further complicated and that a possible translation is that given above. This, at any rate, has the merit of correct syntax since it requires us to read shaub. The selection of a word susceptible of so many meanings which contains the name of a well-known tribe provides an excellent example of oracular prophecy.)

When (the) Quraysh heard of this they could not understand it and decided to wait until the future should reveal its meaning. When the battle of Badr and Uhud took place in a glen, they knew that this was the meaning of the spirit's message (136).

Ali b. Nafi al-Jurashi told me that Janb, a tribe from the Yaman, had a soothsayer in the time of ignorance, and when the news of the apostle of God was blazed abroad among the Arabs, they said to him, 'Look into the matter of this man for us', and they gathered at the bottom of the mountain where he lived. He came down to them when the sun rose and stood leaning on his bow. He raised his head toward heaven for a long time and began to leap about and say:

O men, God has honoured and chosen Mohammed,
Purified his heart and bowels.
His stay among you, O men, will be short.

Then he turned and climbed up the mountain whence he had come.

A person beyond suspicion told me on the authority of Abdullah b. Kab a freedman of Uthman b. Affan that he was told that when Umar b. al-Khattab was sitting with the people in the apostle's mosque, an Arab came in to visit him. When Umar saw him he said, 'This fellow is still a polytheist, he has not given up his old religion yet, (or, he said), he was a soothsayer in the time of ignorance.' The man greeted him and sat down and Umar asked him if he was a Muslim; he said that he was. He said, 'But were you a soothsayer in the time of ignorance?' The man replied, 'Good God, commander of the faithful, you have thought ill of me and have greeted me in a way that I never heard you speak to anyone of your subjects since you came into power.' Umar said, I ask God's pardon. In the time of ignorance (Jahiliyyah = The 'House of War') we did worse than this; we worshipped idols and images until God honoured us "with his apostle and" ("Not in Tabari 1145) with Islam.' The man replied, 'Yes, by God, I was a soothsayer.' Umar said, 'Then tell me what was the most amazing thing your familiar spirit communicated to you.' He said, 'He came to me a month or so before Islam and said:

Have you considered the jinn and their confusion,
Their religion a despair and a delusion,
Clinging to their camels' saddle cloths in profusion?'
(137).

Abdullah b. Kab said, Thereupon Umar said, I was standing by an idol with a number of the Quraysh in the time of ignorance when an Arab sacrificed a calf. We were standing by expecting to get a part of it, when I heard a voice more penetrating than I have ever heard coming out of the belly of the calf (this was a month or so before Islam), saying:

O blood red one,
The deed is done,
A man will cry
Beside God none.' (138)

Such is what I have been told about soothsayers among the Arabs.

THE JEWISH WARNING ABOUT THE APOSTLE OF GOD

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that some of his tribesmen said: 'What induced us to accept Islam, apart from God's mercy and guidance, was what we used to hear the Jews say. We were polytheists worshipping idols, while they were people of the scriptures with knowledge which we did not possess. There was continual enmity between us, and when we got the better of them and excited their hate, they said, "The time of a prophet (or Messiah) who is to be sent has now come. We will kill you with his aid as "Ad and Iram perished". (* If this report is true, it indicates that the Messianic hope was still alive among the Arabian Jews.) We often used to hear them say this. When God sent His apostle we accepted him when he called us to God and we realised what their threat meant and joined him before them. We believed in him but they denied him. Concerning us and them, God revealed the verse in the chapter of the Cow: "And when a book from God came to them confirming what they already had (and they were formerly asking for victory over the unbelievers), when what they knew came to them, they disbelieved it. The curse of God is on the unbelievers." (139) (Koran 2. 83).

Salih b. Ibrahim b. Abdul-Rahman b. Auf from Mahmud b. Labid, brother of B. Abdul-Ashhal, from Salama b. Salama b. Waqsh (Salama was present at Badr) said: 'We had a Jewish neighbour among B. Abdul-Ashhal, who came out to us one day from his house. (At that time I was the youngest person in my house, wearing a small robe and lying in the courtyard.)

He spoke of the resurrection, the reckoning, the scales, paradise, and hell. When he spoke of these things to the polytheists who thought that there could be no rising after death, they said to him, "Good gracious man! Do you think that such things could be that men can be raised from the dead to a place where there is a garden and a fire in which they will be recompensed for their deeds?" "Yes," he said, "and by Him whom men swear by, he would wish that he might be in the largest oven in his house rather than in that fire: that they would heat it and thrust him into it and plaster it over if he could get out from that fire on the following day."

When they asked for a sign that this would be, he said, pointing with his hand to Mecca and the Yaman, "A prophet will be sent from the direction of this land." When they asked when he would appear, he looked at me, the youngest person, and said: "This boy, if he lives his natural term, will see him," and by God, a night and a day did not pass before God sent Mohammed his apostle and he was living among us. We believed in him, but he denied him in his wickedness and envy. When we asked, "Are you not the man who said these things?" he said, "Certainly, but this is not theman."

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada on the authority of a shaykh of the B. Qurayza said to me, 'Do you know how Thalaba b. Saya and Asid b. Saya and Asad b. Ubayd of B. Hadl, brothers of B. Qurayza, became Muslims? They were with them during the 'days of ignorance' (Jahiliyyah is often translated as the "Age or Days of Ignorance" and refers to the "House of War". Meaning: all non-Muslim countries today are in the state of Jahiliyyah and must be freed from it by the supremacy of Islam. This includes also the annihilation and destruction of anything that happened or was made before Islam, such as ancient books and monuments.); then they became their masters in Islam.'

When I said that I did not know, he told me that a Jew from Syria, Ibnul-Hayyaban, came to us some years before Islam and dwelt among us. I have never seen a better man than he who was not a Muslim. When we were living in the time of drought we asked him to come with us and pray for rain. He declined to do so unless we paid him something, and when we asked how much he wanted, he said, "A bushel of dates or two bushels of barley." When we had duly paid up he went outside our harra and prayed for rain for us; and by God, hardly had he left his place when clouds passed over us and it rained. Not once nor twice did he do this. Later when he knew that he was about to die he said, "O Jews, what do you think made me leave a land of bread and wine to come to a land of hardship and hunger?" When we said that we could not think why, he said that he had come to this country expecting to see the emergence of a prophet whose time was at hand. This was the town where he would migrate and he was hoping that he would be sent so that he could follow him. "His time has come," he said, "and do not let anyone get to him before you, O Jews; for he will be sent to shed blood and to take captive the women and children of those who oppose him. Let not that keep you back from him."

When the apostle of God was sent and besieged B. Qurayza, those young men who were growing youths said, 'This is the prophet of whom Ibnul-Hayyaban testified to you.' They said that he was not; but the others asserted that he had been accurately described, so they went and became Muslims and saved their lives, their property, and their families. Such is what I have been told about the Jewish reports (So C, but the beginning of the story suggests that we should read ahbar 'from the Jewish rabbis').

HOW SALMAN BECAME A MUSLIM

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada al-Ansari told me on the authority of Mahmud b. Labid from Abdullah b. Abbas as follows: Salman said while I listened to his words: I am a Persian from Ispahan from a village called Jayy. My father was the principal landowner in his village and I was dearer to him than the whole world. His love for me went to such lengths that he shut me in his house as though I were a slave girl. I was such a zealous Magian that I became keeper of the sacred fire, replenishing it and not letting it go out for a moment. Now my father owned a large farm, and one day when he could not attend to his farm he told me to go to it and learn about it, giving me certain instructions. "Do not let yourself be detained," he said, "because you are more important to me than my farm and worrying about you will prevent me going about my business." So I started out for the farm, and when I passed by a Christian church I heard the voices of the men praying. I knew nothing about them because my father kept me shut up in his house. When I heard their voices I went to see what they were doing; their prayers pleased me and I felt drawn to their worship and thought that it was better than our religion, and I decided that I would not leave them until sunset. So I did not go to the farm. When I asked them where their religion originated, they said "Syria". I returned to my father who had sent after me because anxiety on my account had interrupted all his work. He asked me where I had been and reproached me for not obeying his instructions. I told him that I had passed by some men who were praying in their church and was so pleased with what I saw of their religion that I stayed with them until sunset. He said, "My son, there is no good in that religion; the religion of your fathers is better than that." "No," I said, "It is better than our religion." My father was afraid of what I would do, so he bound me in fetters and imprisoned me in his house.

I sent to the Christians and asked them if they would tell me when a caravan of Christian merchants came from Syria. They told me, and I said to them: "When they have finished their business and want to go back to their own country, ask them if they will take me." They did so and I cast off the fetters from my feet and went with them to Syria. Arrived there I asked for the most learned person in their religion and they directed me to the bishop. I went to him and told him that I liked his religion and should like to be with him and serve him in his church, to learn from him and to pray with him. He invited me to come in and I did so. Now he was a bad man who used to command people to give alms and induced them to do so and when they brought him money he put it in his own coffers and did not give it to the poor, until he had collected seven jars of gold and silver. I conceived a violent hatred for the man when I saw what he was doing. Sometime later when he died and the Christians came together to bury him I told them that he was a bad man who exhorted them and persuaded them to give alms, and when they brought money put it in his coffers and gave nothing to the poor. They asked how I could possibly know this, so I led them to his treasure and when I showed them the place they brought out seven jars full of gold and silver. As soon as they saw them they said, "By God, we will never bury the fellow," so they crucified him and stoned him and appointed another in his place.

I have never seen any non-Muslim whom I consider more virtuous, more ascetic, more devoted to the next life, and more consistent night and day than he. I loved him as I had never loved anyone before. I stayed with him a long time until when he was about to die I told him how I loved him and asked him to whom he would confide me and what orders he would give me now that he was about to die. He said, "My dear son, I do not know anyone who is as I am. Men have died and have either altered or abandoned most of their true religion, except a man in Mausil (Mossul, Iraq); he follows my faith, so join yourself to him. So when he died and was buried, I attached myself to the bishop of Mausil telling him that so-and-so had confided me to him when he died and told me that he followed the same path. I stayed with him and found him just as he had been described, but it was not long before he died and I asked him to do for me what his predecessor had done. He replied that he knew of only one man, in Nasibin, who followed the same path and he recommended me to go to him (Guillaume: I have abbreviated the repetitive style of the narrative which is that of popular stories all the world over. The same words, and the same details, occur in each paragraph with the change of names: Mausil, Nasibin, Ammuriya, leading up to the obvious climax, Mohammed.).

I stayed with this good man in Nasibin for some time and when he died he recommended me to go to a colleague in Ammuriya. I stayed with him for some time and laboured until I possessed some cows and a small flock of sheep; then when he was about to die I asked him to recommend me to someone else. He told me that he knew of no one who followed his way of life, but that a prophet was about to arise who, would be sent with the religion of Abraham; he would come forth in Arabia and would migrate to a country between two lava belts, between which were palms. He has unmistakable marks. He will eat what is given to him but not things given as alms. Between his shoulders is the seal of prophecy. "If you are able to go to that country, do so." Then he died and was buried and I stayed in Ammuriya as long as God willed. Then a party of Kalbite merchants passed by and I asked them to take me to Arabia and I would give them those cows and sheep of mine. They accepted the offer and took me with them until we reached Wadiil-Qura, when they sold me to a Jew as a slave. I saw the palm-trees and I hoped that this would be the town which my master had described to me, for I was not certain. Then a cousin of his from B. Qurayza of Medina came and bought me and carried me away to Medina, and, by God, as soon as I saw it I recognised it from my master's description. I dwelt there and the apostle of God was sent and lived in Mecca; but I did not hear him mentioned because I was fully occupied as a slave. Then he migrated to Medina and as I was in the top of a palm-tree belonging to my master, carrying out my work while my master sat below, suddenly a cousin of his came up to him and said: "God smite the B. Qayla! They are gathering at this moment in Quba round a man who has come to them from Mecca today asserting that he is a prophet." (140)

"When I heard this I was seized with trembling (141), so that I thought I should fall on my master; so I came down from the palm and began to say to his cousin, "What did you say? What did you say?" My master was angered and gave me a smart blow, saying, "What do you mean by this? Get back to your work." I said, "Never mind, I only wanted to find out the truth of his report." Now I had a little food which I had gathered, and I took it that evening to the apostle of God who was in Quba and said, "I have heard that you are an honest man and that your companions are strangers in want; here is something for alms, for I think that you have more right to it than others." So I gave it to him. The apostle said to his companions, "Eat!" but he did not hold out his own hand and did not eat. I said to myself, "That is one;" then I left him and collected some food and the apostle went to Medina. Then I brought it to him and said, "I see that you do not eat food given as alms, here is a present which I freely give you." The apostle ate it and gave his companions some. I said, "That's two;" then I came to the apostle when he was in Baqiu-I-Gharqad (The cemetery of Medina which lies outside the town.) where he had followed the bier of one of his companions. Now I had two cloaks, and as he was sitting with his companions, I saluted him and went round to look at his back so that I could see whether the seal which my master had described to me was there. When the apostle saw me looking at his back he knew that I was trying to find out the truth of what had been described to me, so he threw off his cloak laying bare his back and I looked at the seal and recognised it. Then I bent over him kissing him and weeping. The apostle said, "Come here;" so I came and sat before him and told him my story as I have told you, O b. Abbas. The apostle wanted his companions to hear my story. Then servitude occupied Salman so that he could not be at Badr and Uhud with the apostle.

Salman continued: 'Then the apostle said to me, "Write an agreement;" so I wrote to my master agreeing to plant three hundred palm-trees for him, digging out the base, and to pay forty okes of gold. The apostle called on his companions to help me, which they did: one with thirty little palms, another with twenty, another with fifteen, and another with ten, each helping as much as he could until the three hundred were complete. The apostle told me to go and dig the holes for them, saying that when I had done so he would put them in with his own hand. Helped by my companions I dug the holes and came and told him; so we all went out together, and as we brought him the palm shoots he planted them with his own hand; and by God, not one of them died. Thus I had delivered the palm-trees, but the money was still owing. Now the apostle had been given a piece of gold as large as a hen's egg from one of the mines (For an interesting account of the reopening of an ancient mine in the Wajh-Yanbu' area of the Hijaz see K. S. Twitchell, Saudi Arabia, Princeton, 1947, pp. 159 f. Kufic inscriptions, said to date from A.D. 750, were found there, and this may well have been one of 'King Solomon's mines') and he summoned me and told me to take it and pay my debt with it. "How far will this relieve e of my debt, O Apostle of God?" I said. "Take it," he replied, "for God will pay your debt with it." So I took it and weighed it out to them, and by God, it weighed forty okes, and so I paid my debt with it and Salman was free. I took part with the Apostle in the battle of the Ditch as a free man and thereafter I was at every other battle.'

Yazid b. Abu Habib from a man of Abdul-Qays from Salman told me that the latter said: 'When I said, "How far will this relieve me of my debt?" the apostle took it and turned it over upon his tongue, then he said, "Take it and pay them in full"; so I paid them in full, forty okes.' (The oke being roughly an ounce, a miracle is implied.)

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada on the authority of a trustworthy informant from Umar b. Abdul-Aziz b. Marwan said that he was told that Salman the Persian told the apostle that his master in Ammuriya told him to go to a certain place in Syria where there was a man who lived between two thickets. Every year as he used to go from one to the other, the sick used to stand in his way and everyone he prayed for was healed. He said, Ask him about this religion which you seek, for he can tell you of it.' So I went on until I came to the place I had been told of, and I found that people had gathered there with their sick until he came out to them that night passing from one thicket to the other. The people came to him with their sick and everyone he prayed for was healed. They prevented me from getting to him so that I could not approach him until he entered the thicket he was making for, but I took hold of his shoulder. He asked me who I was as he turned to me and I said, 'God have mercy on you, tell me about the Hanifiya, the religion of Abraham.' He replied, 'You are asking about something men do not inquire of today; the time has come near when a prophet will be sent with this religion from the people of the haram. Go to him, for he will bring you to it.' Then he went into the thicket. The apostle said to Salman, If you have told me the truth, you met Jesus the son of Mary.'

FOUR MEN WHO BROKE WITH POLYTHEISM

One day when the Quraysh had assembled on a feast day to venerate and circumambulate the idol to which they offered sacrifices, this being a feast which they held annually, four men drew apart secretly and agreed to keep their counsel in the bonds of friendship. They were (1st) Waraqa b. Naufal b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy b. Kilab b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy; (2nd) Ubaydullah b. Jahsh b. Riab b. Yamar b. Sabra b. Murra b. Kabir b. Ghanm b. Dudan b. Asad b. Khuzayma, whose mother was Umayma d. Abdul-Muttalib; (3rd) Uthman b. al-Huwayrith b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy; and (4th) Zayd b. Amr b. Nufayl b. Abdul-Uzza b. Abdullah b. Qurt b. Riyah b. Razah b. Adiyb b. Kab b. Luayy. They were of the opinion that their people had corrupted the religion of their father Abraham, and that the stone they went round was of no account; it could neither hear, nor see, nor hurt, nor help. 'Find for yourselves a religion,' they said; 'for by God you have none.' So they went their several ways in the lands, seeking the Hanifiya, the religion of Abraham.

Waraqa attached himself to (Roman) Christianity and studied its scriptures until he had thoroughly mastered them. Ubaydullah went on searching until Islam came; then he migrated with the Muslims to Abyssinia (Ethiopia) taking with him his wife who was a Muslim, Umm Habiba, d. Abu Sufyan. When he arrived there he adopted (Roman) Christianity, parted from Islam, and died a Christian in Abyssinia.

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr told me that when he had become a (Roman) Christian Ubaydullah as he passed the prophet's companions who were there used to say: 'We see clearly, but your eyes are only half open,' i.e. 'We see, but you are only trying to see and cannot see yet.' He used the word sasa "because when a puppy tries to open its eyes to see, it only half sees. The other word faqqaha means to open the eyes. After his death the apostle married his widow Umm Habiba. Mohammed b. Ali b. Husayn told me that the apostle sent Amr b. Umayya al-Damri to the Negus (the Emperor of Ethiopia) to ask for her and he married him to her. He gave her as a dowry, on the apostle's behalf, four hundred dinars. Mohammed b. Ali said, 'We think that Abdul-Malik b. Marwan fixed the maximum dowry of women at four hundred dinars because of this precedent.' The man who handed her over to the prophet was Khalid b. Said b. al-As.

Uthman b. al-Huwayrith went to the Roman emperor and became a (Roman) Christian (and was granted Roman citizenship). He was given high office there (142).

Zayd b. Amr stayed as he was: he accepted neither Judaism nor Christianity. He abandoned the religion of his people and abstained from idols, animals that had died, blood, and things offered to idols (The influence of the Jewish formula, also used by James the Brother of Jesus, and the taken over by early Christianity is clear; see Acts 15.29). He forbade the killing of infant daughters, saying that he worshipped the God of Abraham, and he publicly rebuked his people for their practices.

Hisham b. Urwa from his father on the authority of his mother Asma d. Abu Bakr said that she saw Zayd as a very old man leaning his back on the Kaaba and saying, 'O Quraysh, By Him in whose hand is the soul of Zayd, not one of you follows the religion of Abraham but I.' Then he said: 'O God, if I knew how you wished to be worshipped I would so worship you; but I do not know.' Then he prostrated himself on the palms of his hands.

I was told that his son, Said b. Zayd, and Umar b. al-Khattab, who was his nephew, said to the apostle, 'Ought we to ask God's pardon for Zayd b. Amr?' He replied, 'Yes, for he will be raised from the dead as the sole representative of a whole people.'

Zayd b. Amr. b. Nufayl composed the follow people and the treatment he received from them:

Am I to worship one lord or a thousand?
If there are as many as you claim,
I renounce al-Lat and al-Uzza both of them
As any strong-minded person would.
I will not worship al-Uzza and her two daughters,
Nor will I visit the two images of the BanG Amr.
I will not worship Hubal (This is the reading of al-Kalbi, but all Manuscripts have Ghanm, a deity unknown. Cf. also Yaq. iii. 665. 8) though he was our lord

In the days when I had little sense.
I wondered (for in the night much is strange
Which in daylight is plain to the discerning),
That God had annihilated many men
Whose deeds were thoroughly evil
And spared others through the piety of a people
So that a little child could grow to manhood.
A man may languish for a time and then recover
As the branch of a tree revives after rain.
I serve my Lord the compassionate
That the forgiving Lord may pardon my sin,
So keep to the fear of God your Lord;
While you hold to that you will not perish.
You will see the pious living in gardens,
While for the infidels hell fire is burning.
Shamed in life, when they die
Their breasts will contract in anguish.
Zayd also said: (143)
To God I give my praise and thanksgiving,
A sure word that will not fail as long as time lasts,
To the heavenly King —there is no God beyond Him

And no lord can draw near to Him.
Beware, O men, of what follows death!
You can hide nothing from God.
Beware of putting another beside God,
For the upright way has become clear.
Mercy I implore, others trust in the jinn,
But thou, my God, art our Lord and our hope.
I am satisfied with thee, O God, as a Lord,
And will not worship another God beside thee.
Thou of thy goodness and mercy
Didst send a messenger to Moses as a herald.
Thou saidst to him, Go thou and Aaron,
And summon Pharaoh the tyrant to turn to God
And say to him, 'Did you spread out this (earth)
without a support
Until it stood fast as it does?'
Say to him 'Did you raise this (heaven) without support?
What a fine builder then you were!
Say to him, 'Did you set the moon in the middle thereof

As a light to guide when night covered it?'
Say to him, 'Who sent forth the sun by day
So that the earth it touched reflected its splendour?'

Say to him, 'Who planted seeds in the dust
That herbage might grow and wax great?
And brought forth its seeds in the head of the plant?'
Therein are signs for the understanding.
Thou in thy kindness did deliver Jonah
Who spent nights in the belly of the fish.
Though I glorify thy name, I often repeat
'O Lord forgive my sins.' (Or: I should add to my sins unless thou forgavest me').

O Lord of creatures, bestow thy gifts and mercy upon me And bless my sons and property.

Zayd b. Amr in reproaching his wife Safiya, d. al-Hadrami (144) said:

Now Zayd had determined to leave Mecca to travel about in search of the Hanifiya, the religion of Abraham, and whenever Safiya saw that he had got ready to travel she told al-Khattab b. Nufayl, who was his uncle and his brother by the same mother (This was because his mother was first married to Nufayl and gave birth to al-Khattab; then she married her step-son Amr and gave birth to Zayd; thus the double relationship came into being.) He used to reproach him for forsaking the religion of his people. He had instructed Safiya to tell him if she saw him getting ready to depart; and then Zayd said:

Don't keep me back in humiliation,
O Safiya. It is not my way at all.
When I fear humiliation

I am a brave man whose steed is submissive (So A.Dh. Perhaps mushayya means 'quick to take leave').

A man who persistently frequents the gates of kings
Whose camel crosses the desert;

One who severs ties with others
Whose difficulties can be overcome without (the aid of) friends.

A donkey only accepts humiliation
When its coat is worn out.

It says, I will never give in
Because the load chafes my sides.' (So A.Dh., but one would expect silabuh to mean 'his tough ones').

My brother, (my mother's son and then my uncle),
Uses words which do not please me.

When he reproaches me I say,
I have no answer for him.'

Yet if I wished I could say things
Of which I hold the keys and door.

I was told by one of the family of Zayd b. Amr b. Nufayl that when Zayd faced the Kaaba inside the mosque he used to say,

'Labbayka in truth, in worship and in service (i.e. 'Here I am as a sincere worshipper'.) I take refuge in what Abraham took refuge
When he stood and faced the qibla.'

Then he said:

A humble prisoner, O God, my face in the dust,
Whatever thy commandment do I must.
Pride I seek not, but piety's boon.
The traveller at midday is not as he who sleeps at noon (145).

And Zayd said:
I submit myself to him to whom
The earth which bears mighty rocks is subject.
I le spread it out and when He saw it was settled
Upon the waters, He fixed the mountains on it.
I submit myself to Him to whom clouds which bear
Sweet water are subject.
When they are borne along to a land
They obediently pour copious rain upon it.

Now al-Khattab had so harassed Zayd that he forced him to withdraw to the upper part of Mecca, and he stopped in the mountain of Hira facing the town. Al-Khattab gave instructions to the young irresponsible men of (the) Quraysh that they should not let him enter Mecca and he was able to do so in secret only. When they got to know of that they told al-Khaftab and drove him out and harassed him because of their fear that he would show their religion in its true colours and that some would join him in seceding from it. He said, making much of its sanctity against those of his people who treated it as ordinary:

O God, I am of the holy land, no outsider,
My house is in the centre of the place
Hard by al-Safa.

It is no home of error. (Guillaume: One would expect mizalla for madalla in view of what has been said about the Hums.)

Then he went forth seeking the religion of Abraham, questioning monks and Rabbis until he had traversed al-Mausil and the whole of Mesopotamia; then he went through the whole of Syria until he came to a monk in the high ground of Balqa (The district of which Amman in Jordan was the capital.). This man, it is alleged, was well instructed in Christianity. He asked him about the Hanifiya, the religion of Abraham, and the monk replied, 'You are seeking a religion to which no one today can guide you, but the time of a prophet who will come forth from your own country which you have just left has drawn near. He will be sent with the Hanifiya, the religion of Abraham, so stick to it, for he is about to be sent now and this is his time.' Now Zayd had sampled Judaism and Christianity and was not satisfied with either of them; so at these words he went away at once making for Mecca; but when he was well inside the country of Lakhm he was attacked and killed.

Waraqa b. Naufal b. Asad composed this elegy over him:

You were altogether on the right path Ibn Amr,
You have escaped hell's burning oven
By serving the one and only God
And abandoning vain idols.
And by attaining the religion which you sought
Not being unmindful of the unity of your Lord
You have reached a noble dwelling
Wherein you will rejoice in your generous treatment.
You will meet there the friend of God, (i.e. Abraham.)

Since you were not a tyrant ripe for hell,
For the mercy of God reaches men,
Though they be seventy valleys deep below the earth (146).

THE WORD APPLIED TO THE APOSTLE OF GOD IN THE GOSPEL

Among the things which have reached me about what Jesus the Son of Mary stated in the Gospel which he received from God for the followers of the Gospel, in applying a term to describe the apostle of God, is the following. It is extracted from what John the Apostle set down for them when he wrote the Gospel for them from the Testament of Jesus Son of Mary: 'He that hatcth me hath hated the Lord. And if I had not done in their presence works which none other before me did, they had not. had sin: but from now they are puffed up with pride and think that they will overcome me and also the Lord. But the word that is in the law must be fulfilled, "They hated me without a cause" (i.e. without reason). But when the Comforter has come whom God will send to you from the Lord's presence, and the spirit of truth which will have gone forth from the Lord's presence he (shall bear) witness of me and ye also, because ye have been with me from the beginning. I have spoken unto you about this that ye should not be in doubt'.

The Munahhemana (God bless and preserve him!) in Syriac is Mohammed; in Greek he is the paraclete.

(* The passage quoted is John 15.23 ff. It is interesting to note that the citation comes from the Palestinian Syriac Lectionary and not from the ordinary Bible of the Synac-speaking Churches. The text is corrupt in one or two places; e.g. the phrase 'puffed up with pride and think that they will overcome me'. Bafiru is an obvious corruption of nazaru, which agrees with the Syriac and underlying Greek. Wasannu seems to be another attempt to make sense of the passage. The next word I am unable to explain. The most interesting word is that rendered 'Comforter' which we find in the Palestinian Lectionary, but all other Syriac versions render 'paraclete', following the Greek. This word was well established in the Hebrew- and Aramaic-speaking world. The menahemana in Syriac means the lifegiver and especially one who raises from the dead. Obviously such a meaning is out of place here and what is meant is one who consoles and comforts people for the loss of one dear to them. This is the meaning in the Talmud and Targum. It ought to be pointed out that by the omission of the words 'that is written' before in the law' quite another meaning is given to the prophecy. The natural rendering would be 'the word that concerns the Namis must be fulfilled'. To Muslims the Namus was the angel Gabriel. Furthermore, the last words are translated as the ordinary Arab reader would understand tashukkil; but in Syrian Arabic it could bear the meaning of the Gospel text 'stumble'. See further my article in Al-Andalus, xv, fasc. 2 (1950), 289-96)

THE PROPHET'S MISSION

When Mohammed the apostle of God reached the age of forty God sent him in compassion to mankind, As an evangelist to all men' (Koran 34. 27). Now God had made a covenant with every prophet whom he had sent before him that he should believe in him, testify to his truth and help him against his adversaries, and he required of them that they should transmit that to everyone who believed in them, and they carried out their obligations in that respect. God said to Mohammed, 'When God made a covenant with the prophets (He said) this is the scripture and wisdom which I have given you, afterwards an apostle will come confirming what you know that you may believe in him and help him.' He said, 'Do you accept this and take up my burden?' i.e. the burden of my agreement which I have laid upon you.

They said, 'We accept it.' He answered, 'Then bear witness and I am a witness with you (Koran 3. 75).' Thus God made a covenant with all the prophets that they should testify to his truth and help him against his adversaries and they transmitted that obligation to those who believed in them among the two monotheistic religions.

(Tabari 1142: One whom I do not suspect told me from Said b. Abu Aruba from Qatada b. Dama al-Sadusi from Abul-Jald: 'The Furqan came down on the 14th night of Ramadan. Others say, No, but on the 17th; and in support of this they appeal to God's word: And what we sent down to our servant on the day of al-Furqan, the day the two companies met' [Koran 5. 42] which was the meeting of the apostle and the polytheists at Badr, and that took place on the morning of Ramadan 17th.)

Al-Zuhri related from Urwa b. Zubayr that Aisha told him that when Allah desired to honour Mohammed and have mercy on His servants by means of him, the first sign of prophethood vouchsafed to the apostle was true visions, resembling the brightness of daybreak, which were shown to him in his sleep. And Allah, she said, made him love solitude so that he liked nothing better than to be alone.

Abdul-Malik b. Ubaydullah b. Abu Sufyan b. al-Ala b. Jariya the Thaqafite who had a retentive memory related to me from a certain scholar that the apostle at the time when Allah willed to bestow His grace upon him and endow him with prophethood would go forth for his affair and journey far afield until he reached the glens of Mecca and the beds of its valleys where no house was in sight; and not a stone or tree that he passed by but would say, 'Peace unto thee, O apostle of Allah.' And the apostle would turn to his right and left and look behind him and he would see naught but trees and stones. Thus he stayed seeing and hearing so long as it pleased Allah that he should stay. Then Gabriel came to him with the gift of God's grace whilst he was on Hira in the month of Ramadan.

Wahb b. Kaisan a client of the family of al-Zubayr told me: I heard Abdullah b. al-Zubayr say to Ubayd b. Umayr b. Qatada the Laythite, 'O Ubayd tell us how began the prophethood which was first bestowed on the apostle when Gabriel came to him.' And Ubayd in my presence related to Abdullah and those with him as follows: The apostle would pray in seclusion on Hira every year for a month to practise tahannuth as was the custom of (the) Quraysh in heathen days. Tahannuth is religious devotion.

Abu Talib said:

By Thaur and him who made Thabir firm in its place And by those going up to ascend Hira and coming down (147), (Thaur and Thabir are mountains near Mecca. The poem is given on p. 173; cf. Yaq. i. 938.)

Wahb b. Kaisan told me that Ubayd said to him: Every year during that month the apostle would pray in seclusion and give food to the poor that came to him. And when he completed the month and returned from his seclusion, first of all before entering his house he would go to the Kaaba and walk round it seven times or as often as it pleased God; then he would go back to his house until in the year when God sent him, in the month of Ramadan in which God willed concerning him what He willed of His grace, the apostle set forth to Hira' as was his wont, and his family with him.

When it was the night on which God honoured him with his mission and showed mercy on His servants thereby, Gabriel brought him the command of God. 'He came to me,' said the apostle of God, 'while I was asleep, with a coverlet of brocade whereon was some writing, and said, "Read!" I said, "What shall I read?" He pressed me with it so tightly that I thought it was death; then he let me go and said, "Read!" I said, "What shall I read?" He pressed me with it again so that I thought it was death; then he let me go and said "Read!" I said, "What shall I read?" He pressed me with it the third time so that I thought it was death and said "Read!" I said, "What then shall I read?"— and this I said only to deliver myself from him, lest he should do the same to me again. He said:

"Read in the name of thy Lord who created,
Who created man of blood coagulated.
Read! Thy Lord is the most beneficent,
Who taught by the pen,
Taught that which they knew not unto men."
(Koran 96. 1-5)

So I read it, and he departed from me. And I awoke from my sleep, and it was as though these words were written on my heart. (Now none of God's creatures was more hateful to me than an (ecstatic) poet or a man possessed: I could not even look at them. I thought, Woe is me poet or possessed—Never shall (the) Quraysh say this of me! I will go to the top of the mountain and throw myself down that I may kill myself and gain rest. So I went forth to do so and then) when I was midway on the mountain, I heard a voice from heaven saying, "O Mohammed! thou art the apostle of God and I am Gabriel." I raised my head towards heaven to see (who was speaking), and lo, Gabriel in the form of a man with feet astride the horizon, saying, "O Mohammed! thou art the apostle of God and I am Gabriel."

I stood gazing at him, (and that turned me from my purpose) moving neither forward nor backward; then I began to turn my face away from him, but towards whatever region of the sky I looked, I saw him as before.

And I continued standing there, neither advancing nor turning back, until Khadija sent her messengers in search of me and they gained the high ground above Mecca and returned to her while I was standing in the same place; then he parted from me and I from him, returning to my family. And I came to Khadija and sat by her thigh and drew close to her. She said, "O Abul-Qasim (The kunya or 'name of honour' of Mohammed.), where hast thou been? By God, I sent my messengers in search of thee, and they reached the high ground above Mecca and returned to me." (I said to her, "Woe is me poet or possessed." She said, "I take refuge in God from that O Abul-Qasim (Mohammed). God would not treat you thus since he knows your truthfulness, your great trustworthiness, your fine character, and your kindness. This cannot be, my dear. Perhaps you did see something." "Yes, I did," I said.) Then I told her of what I had seen; and she said, "Rejoice, O son of my uncle, and be of good heart. Verily, by Him in whose hand is Khadija's soul, I have hope that thou wilt be the prophet of this people." Then she rose and gathered her garments about her and set forth to her cousin Waraqa b. Naufal b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy, who had become a Christian and read the scriptures and learned from those that follow the Torah and the Gospel. And when she related to him what the apostle of God told her he had seen and heard, Waraqa cried, "Holy! Holy! Verily by Him in whose hand is Waraqa's soul, if thou hast spoken to me the truth, O Khadija, there hath come unto him the greatest Namus (meaning Gabriel) who came to Moses aforetime, and lo, he is the prophet of this people. Bid him be of good heart."

So Khadija returned to the apostle of God and told him what Waraqa had said. (and that calmed his fears somewhat.) And when the apostle of God had finished his period of seclusion and returned (to Mecca), in the first place he performed the circumambulation of the Kaaba, as was his wont. While he was doing it, Waraqa met him and said, "O son of my brother, tell me what thou hast seen and heard." The apostle told him, and Waraqa said, "Surely, by Him in whose hand is Waraqa's soul, thou art the prophet of this people. There hath come unto thee the greatest Namus, who came unto Moses. Thou wilt be called a liar, and they will use thee spitefully and cast thee out and fight against thee. Verily, if I live to see that day, I will help God in such wise as He knoweth." Then he brought his head near to him and kissed his forehead; and the apostle went to his own house.

(Waraqa's words added to his confidence and lightened his anxiety.) Ismail b. Abu Hakim, a freedman of the family of al-Zubayr, told me on Khadija's authority that she said to the apostle of God, "O son of my uncle, are you able to tell me about your visitant, when he comes to you?"

He replied that he could, and she asked him to tell her when he came. So when Gabriel came to him, as he was wont, the apostle said to Khadija, "This is Gabriel who has just come to me." 'Get up, O son of my uncle,' she said, 'And sit by my left thigh'. The apostle did so, and she said, 'Can you see him?' 'Yes,' he said. She said, 'Then turn round and sit on my right thigh.' He did so, and she said, 'Can you see him?' When he said that he could she asked him to move and sit in her lap. When he had done this she again asked if he could see him, and when he said yes, she disclosed her form and cast aside her veil while the apostle was sitting in her lap. Then she said, 'Can you see him?' And he replied, 'No.' She said, 'O son of my uncle, rejoice and be of good heart, by God he is an angel and not a satan.'

I told Abdullah b. Hasan this story and he said, I heard my mother Fatima, daughter of Husayn, talking about this tradition from Khadija, but as I heard it she made the apostle of God come inside her shift, and thereupon Gabriel departed, and she said to the apostle of God, "This verily is an angel and not a satan."

PART II
MOHAMMED'S CALL AND
PREACHING IN MECCA

THE BEGINNING OF THE SENDING DOWN OF
THE KORAN

The apostle began to receive revelations in the month of Ramadan. In the words of God, 'The month of Ramadan in which the Koran was brought down as a guidance to men, and proofs of guidance and a decisive criterion (Koran 2. 181).'

And again, 'Verily we have sent it down on the night of destiny, and what has shown you what the night of destiny is? The night of destiny is better than a thousand months. In it the angels and the spirit descend by their Lord's permission with every matter. It is peace until the rise of dawn (Koran 97).'

Again, 'H.M. by the perspicuous book, verily we have sent it down in a blessed night. Verily, we were warning. In it every wise matter is decided as a command from us. Verily we sent it down (Koran 44.1-4).'

And again, 'Had you believed in God and what we sent down to Our servant on the day of decision, the day on which the two parties met' (Koran 8.42), i.e. the meeting of the apostle with the polytheists in Badr. Abu Jafar Mohammed b. Ali b. al-Husayn told me that the apostle of God met the polytheists in Badr on the morning of Friday, the 17th of Ramadan.

Then revelation came fully to the apostle while he was believing in Him and in the truth of His message. He received it willingly, and took upon himself what it entailed whether of man's goodwill or anger. Prophecy is a troublesome burden—only strong, resolute messengers can bear it by God's help and grace, because of the opposition which they meet from men in conveying God's message. The apostle carried out God's orders in spite of the opposition and ill treatment which he met with.

KHADIJA, DAUGHTER OF KHUWAYLID,
ACCEPTS ISLAM

Khadija believed in him and accepted as true what he brought from God, and helped him in his work. She was the first to believe in God and His apostle, and in the truth of his message. By her God lightened the burden of His prophet. He never met with contradiction and charges of falsehood, which saddened him, but God comforted him by her when he went home. She strengthened him, lightened his burden, proclaimed his truth, and belittled men's opposition. May God Almighty have mercy upon her!

Hisham b. Urwa told me on the authority of his father Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Abdullah b. Jafar b. Abu Talib that the apostle said, I was commanded to give Khadija the good news of a house of qasab wherein would be no clamour and no toil' (148).

Then revelations stopped for a time so that the apostle of God was distressed and grieved. Then Gabriel brought him the Sura of the Morning, in which his Lord, who had so honoured him, swore that He had not forsaken him, and did not hate him. God said, 'By the morning and the night when it is still, thy Lord hath not forsaken nor hated thee (Koran 93.),' meaning that He has not left you and forsaken you, nor hated you after having loved you. And verily, the latter end is better for you than the beginning (Koran 93.),' i.e. What I have for you when you return to Me is better than the honour which I have given you in the world. And your Lord will give you and will satisfy you,' i.e. of victory in this world and reward in the next. 'Did he not find you an orphan and give you refuge, going astray and guided you, found you poor and made you rich? God thus told him of how He had begun to honour him in his earthly life, and of His kindness to him as an orphan poor and wandering astray, and of His delivering him from all that by His compassion (149).

'Do not oppress the orphan and do not repel the beggar.' That is, do not be a tyrant or proud or harsh or mean towards the weakest of God's creatures. 'Speak of the kindness of thy Lord,' i.e. tell about the kindness of God in giving you prophecy, mention it and call men to it.

So the apostle began to mention secretly God's kindness to him and to his servants in the matter of prophecy to everyone among his people whom he could trust.

THE PRESCRIPTION OF PRAYER

The apostle was ordered to pray and so he prayed. Salih b. Kaisan from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Aisha told me that she said, 'When prayer was first laid on the apostle it was with two prostrations for every prayer: then God raised it to four prostrations at home while on a journey the former ordinance of two prostrations held.'

A learned person told me that when prayer was laid on the apostle Gabriel came to him while he was on the heights of Mecca and dug a hole for him with his heel in the side of the valley from which a fountain gushed forth, and Gabriel performed the ritual ablution as the apostle watched him. This was in order to show him how to purify himself before prayer. Then the apostle performed the ritual ablution as he had seen Gabriel do it. Then Gabriel said a prayer with him while the apostle prayed with his prayer. Then Gabriel left him. The apostle came to Khadija and performed the ritual for her as Gabriel had done for him, and she copied him. Then he prayed with her as Gabriel had prayed with him, and she prayed his prayer.

Utba b. Muslim freedman of B. Taym from Nan b. Jubayr b. Mutim (who was prolific in relating tradition) from Ibn Abbas told me: 'When prayer was laid upon the apostle Gabriel came to him and prayed the noon prayer when the sun declined. Then he prayed the evening prayer when his shadow equalled his own length. Then he prayed the sunset prayer when the sun set. Then he prayed the last night prayer when the twilight had disappeared. Then he prayed with him the morning prayer when the dawn rose. Then he came to him and prayed the noon prayer on the morrow when his shadow equalled his height. Then he prayed the evening prayer when his shadow equalled the height of both of them. Then he prayed the sunset prayer when the sun set at the time it had the day before. Then he prayed with him the last night prayer when the first third of the night had passed. Then he prayed the dawn prayer when it was clear but the sun was not shining. Then he said, "O Mohammed, prayer is in what is between your prayer today and your prayer yesterday".'" ("Suhayli takes the author to task for saying what he should not. Traditionists are agreed that this story belongs to the morrow of the prophet's night journey some five years later. Opinions differ as to whether this occurred eighteen months or a year before the hijra, but that would have been long after the beginning of revelation).

(Tabari 1161:) Yunus b. Bukayr said that Mohammed b. Ishaq told him that Yahya b. Abul-Ashath al-Kindi of the people of Kufa said that Ismail b. Iyas b. Afif from his father from his grandfather said, 'When I was a merchant I came to al-Abbas during the days of pilgrimage; and while we were together a man came out to pray and stood facing the Kaaba; then a woman came out and stood praying with him; then a young man came out and stood praying with him. I said to Abbas, "What is their religion? It is some thing new to me." He said, "This is Mohammed b. Abdullah who alleges that God has sent him with it and that the treasures of Chosroes and Caesar will be opened to him. The woman is his wife Khadija who believes in him, and this young man is his nephew Ali who believes in him." Afif said, "Would that I could have believed that day and been a third!" (This may be one of the traditions which Ibn Ishaq was accused of producing or recording in support of the Alids. It is certainly open to criticism.)

(Tabari 1162:) Ibn Hamid said that Salama b. al-Fadl and Ali b. Mujahid told him. Salama said, Mohammed b. Ishaq told me from Yahya b. Abul-Ashath—Tabari said, It is in another place in my book from Yahya b. al-Ashath from Ismail b. Iyas b. Afif al-Kindi, Afif being the brother of al-Ashath b. Qays al-Kindi by the same mother and the son of his uncle—from his father, from his grandfather Afif: Al-Abbas b. Abdul-Muttalib was a friend of mine who used to go often to the Yaman to buy aromatics and sell them during the fairs. While I was with him in Mina there came a man in the prime of life and performed the full rites of ablution and then stood up and prayed. Then a woman came out and did her ablutions and stood up and prayed. Then out came a youth just approaching manhood, did his ablutions, then stood up and prayed by his side.

When I asked al-Abbas what was going on, he said that it was his nephew Mohammed b. Abdullah b. Abdul-Muttalib who alleges (A hit at al-Abbas.) that Allah has sent him as an apostle; the other is my brother's son Ali b. Abu Talib who has followed him in his religion; the third is his wife Khadija d. Khuwaylid who also follows him in his religion.' Afif said after he had become a Muslim and Islam was firmly established in his heart, "Would that I had been a fourth!"

ALI B. ABU TALIB THE FIRST MALE TO ACCEPT ISLAM

Ali was the first male to believe in the apostle of God, to pray with him and to believe in his divine message, when he was a boy of ten. God favoured him in that he was brought up in the care of the apostle before Islam began.

Abdullah b. Abu Najih on the authority of Mujahid b. Jabr Abul-Hajjaj told me that God showed His favour and goodwill towards him when a grievous famine overtook (the) Quraysh. Now Abu Talib had a large family, and the prophet approached his uncle, Al-Abbas, who was one of the richest of B. Hashim, suggesting that in view of his large family and the famine which affected everyone, they should go together and offer to relieve him of the burden of some of his family. Al-Abbas agreed, and so they went to Abu Talib offering to relieve him from his responsibility of two boys until conditions improved. Abu Talib said, 'Do what you like so long as you leave me Aqil' (150). So the apostle took Ali and kept him with him and Al-Abbas took Jafar. Ali continued to be with the apostle until God sent him forth as a prophet. Ali followed him, believed him, and declared his truth, while Jafar remained with Al-Abbas until he became a Muslim and was independent of him.

A traditionist mentioned that when the time of prayer came the apostle used to go out to the glens of Mecca accompanied by Ali, who went unbeknown to his father, and his uncles and the rest of his people. There they used to pray the ritual prayers, and return at nightfall. This went on as long as God intended that it should, until one day Abu Talib came upon them while they were praying, and said to the apostle, 'O nephew, what is this religion which I see you practising?' He replied, 'O uncle, this is the religion of God, His angels, His apostles, and the religion of our father Abraham.' Or, as he said, 'God has sent me as an apostle to mankind, and you, my uncle, most deserve that I should teach you the truth and call you to guidance, and you are the most worthy to respond and help me,' or words to that effect. His uncle replied, I cannot give up the religion of my fathers which they followed, but by God you shall never meet with anything to distress you so long as I live.' They mention that he said to Ali, 'My boy, what is this religion of yours?' He answered, I believe in God and in the apostle of God, and I declare that what he has brought is true, and I pray to God with him and follow him.' They allege that he said, 'He would not call you to anything but what is good so stick to him.'

Zayd the freedman of the apostle was the first male to accept Islam after Ali (151). Then Abu Bakr b. Abu Quhafa whose name was Atiq became a Muslim. His father's name was Uthman b. Amir b. Amr b. Kab b. Sad b. Taym b. Murra b. Kab b. Luayy b. Ghalib b. Fihir. When he became a Muslim, he showed his faith openly and called others to God and his apostle. He was a man whose society was desired, well liked and of easy manners. He knew more about the genealogy of (the) Quraysh than anyone else and of their faults and merits. He was a merchant of high character and kindness. His people used to come to him to discuss many matters with him because of his wide knowledge, his experience in commerce, and his sociable nature. He began to call to God and to Islam all whom he trusted of those who came to him and sat with him (152).

[I.K. iii, 24.: The following day Ali b. Abu Talib came as the two of them were praying and asked, 'What is this, Mohammed?' He replied, 'It is God's religion which He has chosen for Himself and sent His apostles with it. I call you to God, the One without an associate, to worship Him and to disavow al-Lat and al-Uzza.' Ali said, 'This is something that I have never heard of before today. I cannot decide a matter until I have talked about it with Abu Talib.' Now the apostle did not want his secret to be divulged before he applied himself to the publication of his message, so he said, 'If you do not accept Islam, then conceal the matter.' Ali tarried that night until God put Islam into his heart. Early next morning he went to the apostle and asked him what his orders were. He said, 'Bear witness that there is no god but Allah alone without associate, and disavow al-Lat and al-Uzza, and renounce rivals.' Ali did so and became a Muslim. He refrained from coming to him out of fear of Abu Talib and concealed his Islam and did not let it be seen.

Zayd b. Haritha became a Muslim and the two of them tarried nearly a month. (Then) Ali kept coming to the apostle. It was a special favour to Ali from God that he was in the closest association with the apostle before Islam.]

THE COMPANIONS WHO ACCEPTED ISLAM AT THE INVITATION OF ABU BAKR

THE APOSTLE'S PUBLIC PREACHING AND THE RESPONSE

People began to accept Islam, both men and women, in large numbers until the fame of it was spread throughout Mecca, and it began to be talked about. Then God commanded His apostle to declare the truth of what he had received and to make known His commands to men and to call them to Him. Three years elapsed from the time that the apostle concealed his state until God commanded him to publish his religion, according to information which has reached me. Then God said, 'Proclaim what you have been ordered and turn aside from the polytheists (Koran 15. 94).' And again, 'Warn thy family, thy nearest relations, and lower thy wing to the followers who follow thee (Koran 26.214, i.e. 'deal gently with').' And 'Say, I am the one who warns plainly' (Koran 15.8,9.) (164).

(Tabari 1171:) Ibn Hamid from Salama from Ibn Ishaq from Abdullah b. al-Ghaffar b. al-Qasim from al-Minhal b. Amr from Abdullah b. al-Harith b. Naufal b. al-Harith b. Abdul-Muttalib from Abdullah b. Abbas from Ali b. Abu Talib said: When these words 'Warn thy family, thy nearest relations' came down to the apostle he called me and said, 'God has ordered me to warn my family, my nearest relations and the task is beyond ray strength. I know that when I made this message known to them I should meet with great unpleasantness so I kept silence until Gabriel came to me and told me that if I did not do as I was ordered my Lord would punish me. So get some food ready with a leg of mutton and fill a cup with milk and then get together the sons of Abdul-Muttalib so that I can address them and tell them what I have been ordered to say.' I did what he ordered and summoned them. There were at that time forty men more or less including his uncles Abu Talib, Hamza, al-Abbas, and Abu Lahab. When they were assembled he told me to bring in the food which I had prepared for them, and when I produced it the apostle took a bit of the meat and split it in his teeth and threw it into the dish. Then he said, 'Take it in the name of God.' The men ate till they could eat no more, and all I could see (in the dish) was the place where their hands had been. And as sure as I live if there had been only one man he could have eaten what I put before the lot of them. Then he said, 'Give the people to drink', so I brought them the cup and they drank until they were all satisfied, and as sure as I live if there had been, only one man he could have drunk that amount. When the apostle wanted to address them Abu Lahab got in first and said, 'Your host has bewitched you'; so they dispersed before the apostle could address them. On the morrow he said to me, 'This man spoke before I could, and the people dispersed before I could address them, so do exactly as you did yesterday.' Everything went as before and then the apostle said, 'O Sons of Abdul-Muttalib, I know of no Arab who has come to his people with a nobler message than mine. I have brought you the best of this world and the next. God has ordered me to call you to Him. So which of you will co-operate with me in this matter, my brother, my executor, and my successor being among you?' The men remained silent and I, though the youngest, most rheumy-eyed, fattest in body and thinnest in legs, said: 'O prophet of God, I will be your helper in this matter.' He laid his hand on the back of my neck and said, 'This is my brother, my executor, and my successor among you. Harken to him and obey him.' The men got up laughing and saying to Abu Talib, 'He has ordered you to listen to your son and obey him!'

(Tabari 1173.: Ibn Hamid from Salama from Ibn Ishaq from Amr b. Ubayd from al-Hasan b. Abul-Hasan said: When this verse came down to the apostle, he stood in the vaie and said, 'O Sons of Abdul-Muttalib; O Sons of Abdu Manaf; O Sons of Qusayy.' —Then he named (the) Quraysh tribe by tribe until he came to the end of them— I call you to God and I warn you of his punishment.)

When the apostle's companions prayed they went to the glens so that their people could not see them praying, and while Sad b. Abu Waqqas was with a number of the prophet's companions in one of the glens of Mecca, a band of polytheists came upon them while they were praying and rudely interrupted them. They blamed them for what they were doing until they came to blows, and it was on that occasion that Sa'd smote a polytheist with the jawbone of a camel and wounded him. This was the first blood to be shed in Islam.

When the apostle openly displayed Islam as God ordered him his people did not withdraw or turn against him, so far as I have heard, until he spoke disparagingly of their gods. When he did that they took great offence and resolved unanimously to treat him as an enemy, except those whom God had protected by Islam from such evil, but they were a despised minority. Abu Talib his uncle treated the apostle kindly and protected him, the latter continuing to obey God's commands, nothing turning him back. When (the) Quraysh saw that he would not yield to them and withdrew from them and insulted their gods and that his uncle treated him kindly and stood up in his defence and would not give him up to them, some of their leading men went to Abu Talib, namely Utba and Shayba, both sons of Rabia b. Abdu Shams ... and Abu Sufyan (165) b. Harb ... and Abul-Bakhtari whose name was al-As b. Hisham b. al-Harith b. Asad ... and al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib b. Asad ... and Abu Jahl (whose name was Amr, his title being Abul-Hakam) b. Hisham b. al-Mughira ... and al-Walid b. al-Mughira ... and Nubayh and Munabbih two sons of al-Hajjaj b. Amir b. Hudhayfa ... and al-As b. Wall (166). They said,

'O Abu Talib, your nephew has cursed our gods, insulted our religion, mocked our way of life (Ahlam means the civilisation and virtues of the pre-Islamic Arabs.) and accused our forefathers of error; either you must stop him or you must let us get at him, for you yourself are in the same position as we are in opposition to him and we will rid you of him.' He gave them a conciliatory reply and a soft answer and they went away.

The apostle continued on his way, publishing God's religion and calling men thereto. In consequence his relations with (the) Quraysh deteriorated and men withdrew from him in enmity. They were always talking about him and inciting one another against him. Then they went to Abu Talib a second time and said, 'You have a high and lofty position among us, and we have asked you to put a stop to your nephew's activities but you have not done so. By God, we cannot endure that our fathers should be reviled, our customs mocked and our gods insulted. Until you rid us of him we will fight the pair of you until one side perishes,' or words to that effect. Thus saying, they went off. Abu Talib was deeply distressed at the breach with his people and their enmity but he could not desert the apostle and give him up to them.

Yaqub (Jacob) b. Utba b. al-Mughira b. al-Akhnas told me that he was told that after hearing these words from the Quraysh Abu Talib sent for his nephew and told him what his people had said. 'Spare me and yourself,' he said. 'Do not put on me a burden greater than I can bear.' The apostle thought that his uncle had the idea of abandoning and betraying him, and that he was going to lose his help and support. He answered, 'O my uncle, by God, if they put the sun in my right hand and the moon in my left on condition that I abandoned this course, until God has made it victorious, or I perish therein, I would not abandon it.' Then the apostle broke into tears, and got up. As he turned away his uncle called him and said, 'Come back, my nephew,' and when he came back, he said, 'Go and say what you please, for by God I will never give you up on any account.'

When the Quraysh perceived that Abu Talib had refused to give up the apostle, and that he was resolved to part company with them, they went to him with Umara b. al-Walid b. al-Mughira and said, according to my information, 'O Abu Talib, this is Umara, the strongest and most handsome young man among (the) Quraysh, so take him and you will have the benefit of his intelligence and support; adopt him as a son and give up to us this nephew of yours, who has opposed your religion and the religion of your fathers, severed the unity of your people, and mocked our way of life, so that we may kill him. This will be man for man.' He answered, 'By God, this is an evil thing that you would put up upon me, would you give me your son that I should feed him for you, and should I give you my son that you should kill him? By God, this shall never be.' Al-Mutim b. Adly said, 'Your people have treated you fairly and have taken pains to avoid what you dislike. I do not think that you are willing to accept anything from them.' Abu Talib replied, 'They have not treated me fairly, by God, but you have agreed to betray me and help the people against me, so do what you like,' or words to that effect. So the situation worsened, the quarrel became heated and people were sharply divided, and openly showed their animosity to their opponents. Abu Talib wrote the following verses, indirectly attacking Mutim, and including those who had abandoned him from the Abdu Manaf, and his enemies among the tribes of (the) Quraysh. He mentions therein what they had asked of him and his estrangement from them.

Say to Amr and al-Walid and Mutim
Rather than your protection give me a young camel,
Weak, grumbling and murmuring,
Sprinkling its flanks with its urine
Lagging behind the herd, and not keeping up.

When it goes up the desert ridges, you would call it a weasel.

I see our two brothers, sons of our mother and father,
When they are asked for help, say It is not our business.'

Nay, it is their affair, but they have fallen away,
As a rock falls from the top of Dhu Alaq (A mountain in the Banu Asad country.). I mean especially Abdu Shams and Naufal,
Who have flung us aside like a burning coal.

They have slandered their brothers among the people;
Their hands are emptied of them.

They shared their fame with men of low birth,
With men whose fathers were whispered about;
And Taym, and Makhzum, and Zuhra, are of them
Who Ijad been friends of ours when help was sought;
By God, there will always be enmity between us
As long as one of our descendants lives.

Their minds and thoughts were foolish,
They were entirely without judgement (To say that a man's well is demolished is to accuse him of losing all common sense.(167).

Then the Quraysh incited people against the companions of the apostle who had become Muslims. Every tribe fell upon the Muslims among them, beating them and seducing them from their religion. God protected His apostle from them through his uncle, who, when he saw what (the) Quraysh were doing, called upon B. Hashim and B. al-Muttalib to stand with him in protecting the apostle. This they agreed to do, with the exception of Abu Lahab, the accursed enemy of God.

Abu Talib was delighted at the response of his tribe and their kindness, and began to praise them and to bring to men's memory their past. He mentioned the superiority of the apostle among them and his position so that he might strengthen their resolve and that they might extend their kindness to him. He said:

If one day (the) Quraysh gathered together to boast,
Abdu Manaf would be their heart and soul;
And if the nobles of Abdu Manaf were reckoned,
Amongst Hashim would be their noblest and chief;
If they boast one day, then Mohammed
Would be the chosen noble and honourable one.

(The) Quraysh summoned everyone against us;
They were not successful and they were beside themselves.

Of old we have never tolerated injustice;
When people turned away their faces in pride we made them face us.

We protected their sanctuary whenever danger threatened
And drove the assailant from its buildings.

Through us the dry wood becomes green,
Under our protection its roots expand and grow.

AL-WALID B. AL-MUGHIRA

When the fair was due, a number of the Quraysh came to al-Walid b. al-Mughira, who was a man of some standing, and he addressed them in these words: 'The time of the fair has come round again and representatives of the Arabs will come to you and they will have heard about this fellow of yours, so agree upon one opinion without dispute so that none will give the lie to the other.' They replied, 'You give us your opinion about him.' He said, 'No, you speak and I will listen.' They said, 'He is a kahin: He said, 'By God, he is not that, for he has not the unintelligent murmuring and rhymed speech of the kahin.' 'Then he is possessed,' they said. 'No, he is not that,' he said, 'we have seen possessed ones, and here is no choking, spasmodic movements and whispering.' 'Then he is a poet,' they said. 'No, he is no poet, for we know poetry in all its forms and metres.' 'Then he is a sorcerer.' 'No, we have seen sorcerers and their sorcery, and here is no spitting and no knots.' 'Then what are we to say, O Abu Abdu Shams?' they asked. He replied, 'By God, his speech is sweet, his root is a palm-tree whose branches are fruitful (168), and everything you have said would be known to be false. The nearest thing to the truth is your saying that he is a sorcerer, who has brought a message by which he separates a man from his father, or from his brother, or from his wife, or from his family.'

At this point they left him, and began to sit on the paths which men take when they come to the fair. They warned everyone who passed them about Mohammed's doings. God revealed concerning al-Walid:

Leave to Me him I made,
Giving him wealth and trade,
While sons before him played,
The road for him I laid,
Then he coveted more of My aid,
Ay, Our signs hath he gainsaid

(Koran 74.11-25, Guillaume: It is strange that after al-Walid has made the point that Mohammed cannot be a kahin because he does not deliver messages in saj' the next quotation from the Koran should be an example (to which I fear I have not done justice) of that very form. (169).

I shall impose on him a grievous burden; he thought and planned; may he perish how he planned, may he perish how he planned. Then he looked, then he frowned, and showed anger' (170).

'Then he turned his back in pride and said, "This is nothing but ancient sorcery, this is nothing but the speech of a mortal".'

Then God revealed concerning the men who were with him, composing a term to describe the apostle and the revelation he brought from God, As we sent down upon the dividers who had split the Koran into parts, by thy Lord we will ask them all about what they used to do' (Koran 15. 90.) (171).

So these men began to spread this report about the apostle with everyone they met so that the Arabs went away from that fair knowing about the apostle, and he was talked about in the whole of Arabia. When Abu Talib feared that the multitude would overwhelm him with his family he composed the following ode, in which he claimed protection in the sanctuary of Mecca and by his position therein. He showed his affection for the nobles of his people while, nevertheless, he told them and others in his poetry that he was not going to give up the apostle or surrender him on any account whatever, but he would die in his defence.

When I saw the people had no love for us
And had severed every tie and relationship,
And shown us enmity and ill-will,
Obeying the orders of persecuting enemies,
And had allied themselves with treacherous people
against us,

Biting their fingers in rage at our backs,
I stood firm against them with my pliant spear,
And my shining sword, heirloom of princes.

Round the temple I gathered my clan and my brothers,

And laid hold of the striped red cloth that covered it,
Standing together, facing its gates,
Where everyone who takes an oath completes his vow,

Where the pilgrims make their camels kneel,
Where the blood flows between Isaf and Nalla,
Camels marked on the shoulders or neck,
Tamed ones, between six and nine years old;

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

You see amulets on them, and alabaster ornaments
Bound on their necks like date-bearing branches.
I take refuge with the Lord of men from every adversary

And every lying assailant;
From the hater with his hurtful slander,
And from him who adds to religion what we have not tried.

By Thaur and Him who fixed Thabir in his place,
And by him who goes up and down Hira (Hira, Thaur, and Thabir were all mountains round Mecca.);
By the true temple of the valley of Mecca;
By God who is never unmindful;
By the black stone, when they stroke it
When they go round it morning and evening;
By Abraham's footprint in the rock still fresh,
With both feet bare, without sandals;
By the running between Marwa and Safa,
And by the statues and images therein;
By every pilgrim riding to the house of God,
And everyone with a vow and everyone on foot;
By Hal, the furthest sacred spot* to which they go (* Hal in the Lisdn is said to be a strip of sand where the people halt, but the lines in Nabigha 17.22 and 19.14 show that it was the name of a sanctuary and possibly, as Wellhausen, p. 83, says, 'of the God of Arafa').

Where the streamlets open out;
By their halt at even above the mountains
When they help the camels by their hands to rise (Guillaume: The words suggest the way in which men get a reluctant camel to its feet. One man pushes up the camel's chest while the other pulls its head up by the reins. Here perhaps the latter action alone is meant as the 'poet' is speaking of a halt; even so. 'they raise the breasts of the camels with their hands' is an unnatural way to speak of pulling on the reins.);

By the night of the meeting, by the stations of Mina,
Are any holy places and stations superior?
By the crowd, when the home-going horses pass by quickly

As though escaping from a storm of rain;
By the great stone heap*, when they make for it
Aiming at its top with stones;

(* Guillaume: The largest of the three heaps of stones at Mina, presumably that known as Jamrata l-Aqaba.
Cf. Hassan b. Thabit's lament where the pilgrims throw seven stones. The rite is not mentioned in the Koran, but we shall meet it again in the Sira on pp.
534 and 970 of the Arabic text. See further Djamar in E.1.)

By Kinda, when they are at al-Hisab at even,
When the pilgrims of Bakr b. Wail pass by them
Two allies who strengthened the tie between them,
And directed to it all means of unity;

(Guillaume: The following line is very difficult, as C.'s notes show. Unfortunately the note of Abu Dharr to the effect that Sifah is a place-name is omitted. This seems to me to provide the key to the meaning of the line. Yaqut says that al-Sifah lies between Hunayn and the pillars of the Haram on the left of a man entering Mecca from Mushash. As the latter place lies on the hills of Arafat the rendering given above seems to suit the context. On the site of Hunayn see Yaqut sub voce.
Weil evades the difficulty, and so, strangely enough, does Suhayli. If al-Sifah is the plural of Safh, the side of a mountain, I cannot see how the passage can be construed.)

By their breaking the acacias and shrubs of al-Sifah,
And its bushes too, as they galloped like flying ostriches.

Is there any better refuge for one who seeks it?
Is there a righteous god-fearing man who will grant
it?

Our aggressors get their way with us, and wish
That the gates of Turk and Kabul* were blocked with our bodies.

(* The commentators say that Turk and Kabul are two mountains, but I can find no mention of them in Yaqut, who under 'Kabul' quotes a line from al-Asha which clearly refers to Turk and Kabul as people. It looks as if the two names point to a later forger.)

You lie, by God's house, we will not leave Mecca, and go forth,
Until your affairs are in confusion.

You lie, by God's house, Mohammed shall not be maltreated; (probable meaning: 'We will not be forcibly deprived of Mohammed.')

Before we shoot and thrust in his defence,
We will not give him up till we lie dead around him,
And be unmindful of our wives and children;
Until a people in arms rise and fight you,
As camels carrying water rise under empty water-skins (Or 'rattling, swishing water-skins'. If the comparison refers to the speed of their attack, the simile which Abu Dharr favours is correct. If not, the simile rests in the noise which the armed men make.),

Until you see the enemy falling face down in his blood

From the spear thrust weighed down and tottering.
By God, if what I see should become serious
Our swords will mingle with the best of them
In the hands of a young warrior, like a flame,
Trustworthy, defender of the truth, hero,
For days, months, a whole year,
And after next year, yet another.

What people, confound you, would abandon a chief,
Who protects his dependants? No foul-mouthed weaking,

A noble man, for whose sake the clouds drop rain,
The support of orphans, the defence of widows,
Hashim's family, ready to perish, resort to him,
There they find pity and kindness.

Asid and his firstborn made us hated
And cut us up for others to devour (A figure for 'malicious slander'.);

Neither Uthman nor Qunfudh sympathised with us
But obeyed the command of those tribes.

They obeyed Ubayy and the son of their Abdu Yaguth,

And did not observe what others said of us;
So, too, were we treated by Subay and Naufal,
And everyone who turned away from us, not treating us kindly.

If they throw down their arms, or God give us the better of them,

We will pay them measure for measure.
That fellow Abu Amr would do naught but hate us,
To send us away among shepherds and camel-drivers;
He talks about us confidentially night and morning.

Talk on, Abu Amr, with your guile!
He swears by God he will not deceive us,
But we see him openly doing nothing else;
He hates us so much that the hill-tops
Between Mecca's hills and Syria's forts
Are too narrow to hold him.

Ask Abul-Walid, what have you done to us with your slander

Turning away like a deceitful friend.
You were a man by whose opinion men guided their lives,

And you were kind to us, nor are you a fool.
O Utba, do not listen to an enemy's words against us;
Envious, lying, hating and malicious.

Abu Sufyan averted his face from me as he passed, Sweeping along as though he were one of the great ones of the earth,

He betook himself to the high ground and its cool
waters,
Pretending that he does not forget us.

He tells us that he is sorry for us like a good friend,
But he hides evil designs in his heart.

O, Mutim! I did not desert you when you called for help,

Nor on the day of battle when mighty deeds were called for,

Nor when they came against you full of enmity,
Opponents whose strength matched yours.

O Mutim, the people have given you a task to do,
I too when entrusted with a task do not try to evade
it.

God requite Abdu Shams and Naufal for us
With evil punishment quick and not delayed,
With an exact balance, not a grain too little,
The balance its own witness that it is exact.
Foolish are the minds of people who exchanged us
For Banu Khalaf and the Ghayatil.

We are the pure stock from the summit of Hashim
And the family of Qusayy in matters of import.
Sahm and Makhzum stirred up against us
Every scoundrel and low-born churl.
Abdu Manaf, you are the best of your people,
Do not make common cause with every outsider.
You have proved feeble and weak
And done a thing far from right.
You were till lately the sticks under one pot
But now you are the sticks under many pots and vessels.

Let the Band Abdu Manaf get satisfaction from parting from us,
Deserting us and leaving us imprisoned in our quarters.

If we are men we shall take revenge (Or 'bear a grudge') for what you have done
And you will suffer the full effects of war.

The best men among Luayy b. Ghalib,
Every bold chief exiled to us;
The family of Nufayl is the worst that ever trod the earth,

The most contemptible of all the sons of Maadd.
Tell Qusayy that our cause will be blazed abroad,
And give Qusayy the good news that after us there will be a falling apart (among our enemies).

Yet if calamity befell Qusayy one night,
We should have been the first to protect them;
If they fought bravely in defence of their houses,
We should show them how to protect the mothers of children.

Yet every friend and nephew on whom we ought to count

We find useless when put to the test
Except for certain men of Kilab b. Murra
Whom we exempt from the stigma of the deserter*;

(* The last 14 lines have an alternative. These seven verses are not in Wüstenfeld's text, and as he does not mention them in his critical notes it may be assumed that none of his manuscripts contained them. Further, there is not a note in Abu Dharr's commentary, and it is difficult to believe that he would have passed over the extraordinary word hindikiya without a note, if the line containing it were before him. Ibn Hisham at the end of the poem indicates that he has cut out some verses, possibly (though I think most improbably) these verses were among them, and even so he says some authorities reject the greater part. It will at once be apparent that the seven verses interrupt the sequence of thought which deals with the honourable exceptions to the general defection In vers 4 I conjecture khalafu for halafu:)

We came to them by night, they all scattered.
Every liar and fool disappeared from our sight.
Ours was the watering-place among them,
We are the rock-like defence of Ghalib.
The young men of the scented ones and Hashim
Are like sword blades in the hands of the polishers.
They took no revenge, nor shed blood,
Nor do they oppose any but the worst tribes.
In their fighting you see the youths
Like fierce lions quarrelling over lumps of meat;
Sons of a favourite Ethiopian slave girl,
Sons of Jumah, Ubayd Qays b. Aqil;
But we are the noblest stock of lords
Whose heroic deeds were sung in verse.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

( Hindikiya. Greek and Syrian writers use the term India for South Arabia and Ethiopia -as these two regions had a lot in common with India- and a slave girl from one of those countries is almost certainly meant here.)

Undeniably fine is Zuhayr, our nephew,
A sword loosed from belts,
The proudest of the proudest chiefs,
Belonging to the finest stock in glory.
I'faith I am devoted to Ahmad and his brethren,
As a constant lover.
For who among men can hope to be like him
When judges assess rival claim to merit,
Clement, rightly guided, just, serious,
The friend of God, ever mindful of Him.
By God! but that I might create a precedent
That would be brought against our sheikhs in assemblies,
We would follow him whatever fate might bring,
In deadly earnest, not in idle words.
They know that our son is not held a liar by us,
And is not concerned with foolish falsehood.
Ahmad has struck so deep a root among us
That the attacks of the arrogant fail to affect him.
I shielded and defended him myself by every means* (172).
(* C. adds:
The Lord of mankind strengthen him with his help,
And display a religion whose truth holds no falsehood!
Noble men, not swerving from right, whose fathers
Brought them up in the best of ways.
Though Kab is near to Luayy
The day must come when they must fall apart.
These verses are lacking in W.'s version.)

The Ghayatil are of B. Sahn b. Amr b. Husays; Abu Sufyan is Ibn Harb b. Umayya; Mutim is Ibn Adly b. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf; Zuhayr is Ibn Abu Umayya b. al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum, his mother being Atika d. Abdul-Muttalib. Asid and his firstborn, i.e. Attab b. Asid b. Abul-Is b. Umayya b. Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf. Uthman is Ibn Ubaydullah the brother of Talha b. Ubaydullah al-Taymi; Qunfudh is Ibn Umayr b. Judan b. Amr b. Kab b. Sad b. Taym b. Murra. Abul-Walid is Utba b. Rabia; and Ubayy is al-Akhnas b. Shariq al-Thaqafi ally of B. Zuhra b. Kilab (This and the following paragraph stands under the name of Ibn Hisham, but the context suggests that they are in part at least from Ibn Ishaq.) (173).

Al-Aswad is Ibn Abdu Yaghuth b. Wahb b. Abdu Manaf b. Zuhra b. Kilab; Subay is Ibn Khalid brother of B. al-Harith b. Fihri; Naufal is Ibn Khuwaylid b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy. He was Ibn al-Adawiya, one of the 'satans' of (the) Quraysh. He it was who roped together Abu Bakr and Talha b. Ubaydullah when they went over to Islam. They got the name 'the two-tied-together-ones' from this. Ali killed him at the baule of Badr. Abu Amr is Qurza b. Abdu Amr b. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf. The 'treacherous people' are B. Bakr b. Abdu Manaf b. Kinana. These are the Arabs whom Abu Talib enumerated in his verse (174). When the prophet's fame began to be blazed abroad throughout the land he was mentioned in Medina. There was no tribe among the Arabs who knew more about the apostle when and before he was mentioned than this tribe of Aus and Khazraj. The reason for this was that they were well acquainted with the sayings of Jewish rabbis and they lived side by side with them as allies. When the apostle was talked of in Medina and they heard of the trouble he had with (the) Quraysh, Abu Qays b. al-Aslat, brother of B. Waqif, composed the verses given below (175).

Abu Qays was warmly attached to (the) Quraysh since he was related to them through his wife Arnab d. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza b. Qusayy, and he with his wife used to stay with them for years at a time. He composed an ode in which he magnified the sanctity of the area, forbade (the) Quraysh to fight there, urged them to stand by one another, mentioned their merits and virtues, urged them to protect the apostle, and reminded them of how God had dealt with them and saved them in the War of the Elephant.

O rider, when you meet Luayy ibn Ghalib
Give him a message from me,
The tidings of a man who though far from you
Is distressed at what is between you, sad and worried.
I have become the caravanserai of cares,
Because of them I cannot do what I should.
I learn that you are divided into camps,
One party kindles the fire of war, the other provides the fuel.

I pray God to protect you from your evil act,
Your wicked quarrel and the insidious attack of scorpions,
Defamatory reports and secret plots
Like pricking awls which never fail to pierce.
Remind them of God, first of all things,
And the sin of breaking the taboo on travel-worn gazelles*.

(* The killing of game within the sacred area was taboo, and the poet means that if the blood of animals there is sacrosanct, afortiori bloodshed and war are forbidden by God.)

Say to them, (and God will give His judgement)
If you abandon war it will go far from you.
When you stir it up you raise an evil thing;
'Tis (= it is) a monster devouring everything near and far,

It severs kinship and destroys people;
It cuts the flesh from the hump and the back.
You will give up the finest clothes of Yaman
For a soldier's garb and coat of mail,
Musk and camphor for dust-coloured armour
With buttons like the eyes of a locust.
Beware of war! Do not let it cling to you;
A stagnant pool has a bitter draught.
War—it first seems fine to men
But afterwards they plainly recognize an old hag.
It scorches unsparingly the weak,
And aims death-dealing blows at the great.
Know you not what happened in the war of Dahis?
Or the war of Hatib? Take a lesson from them!
How many a noble chief it slew,
The generous host whose guest lacked naught,
A huge pile of ashes beneath his pot,
Praised by all, noble in character, his sword
Drawn only in righteous cause;
'Tis as water poured out at random,

As if winds from all quarters scattered the clouds*;
(* If the subject of the metaphor is war the reading daldl is right, and indiscriminate bloodshed is indicated; if the variant faldl 'porous soil' is adopted, the poet is continuing his description of the generous warrior whose hospitality extends to the most insatiable guest.)

A truthful, knowledgeable man will tell you of its battles

(For real knowledge is the result of experience).
So sell your spears to those who love war
And remember the account you must render, for God is the best reckoner.

Man's Lord has chosen a religion,
So let none guard you but the Lord of heaven,
Raise up for us a hamfl religion.
You are our object ; one is guided in travel by heights,

You are a light and protection to this people,
You lead the way, not lacking virtues.
If men were valued, you would be a jewel,
The best of the vale is yours in noble pride.
You preserve noble, ancient peoples
Whose genealogy shows no foreign blood;
You see the needy come to your houses
Wave after wave of starving wights.

The people know that your leaders
Are ever the best people of the stations of Mina,
Best in counsel, loftiest in custom,
Most truthful amid the assemblies.

( See Al-Suhayli, 182, who says that Ibn Ishaq so explains the word. He is quoting from p. 300 of the text. Al-Barqi says it was a well at Mina where the blood of the sacrificial victims was collected. It was a spot venerated by the Arabs. The word jubjuba apparently means the stomach of a ruminant, and naturally a large number of such skins used for carrying water would be available there; therefore it is possible that the term 'people of the stomach skins' simply means Arabs, the people who more than any other used this kind of vessel for carrying food and water, and so the meaning of the poet is that the tribe of Luayy is the finest tribe in Arabia.)

Rise and pray to your Lord and rub yourselves Against the corners of this house between the mountains.

He gave you a convincing test
On the day of Abu Yaksum, leader of the squadrons,
His cavalry was in the plains,
His infantry upon the passes of the hills.

When the help of the Lord of the throne reached you
His armies repulsed them, pelting them, and covering them with dust;

Quickly they turned tail in flight
And none but a few returned to his people from the army.

If you perish, we shall perish, and the fairs by which men live.

These are the words of a truthful man (176).

Hakim b. Umayya b. Hariitha b. al-Auqas al-Sulami, an ally of B. Umayya who had become a Muslim, composed the following verses to turn his people from their determined enmity to the apostle. He was a man of good birth and authority.

Does one who says what is right stick to it,
And is there one listening who would be angry at the truth?

Does the chief whose tribe hope to profit from him
Gather friends from near and far?

I disown all but Him who controls the wind
And I abandon you for ever.

I submit myself utterly to God
Though friends threaten me with terror.

HOW THE APOSTLE WAS TREATED BY HIS OWN PEOPLE

When the Quraysh became distressed by the trouble caused by the enmity between them and the apostle and those of their people who accepted his teaching, they stirred up against him foolish men who called him a liar, insulted him, and accused him of being a poet, a sorcerer, a diviner, and of being possessed. However, the apostle continued to proclaim what God had ordered him to proclaim, concealing nothing, and exciting their dislike by contemning their religion, forsaking their idols, and leaving them to their unbelief.

Yahya b. Urwa b. al-Zubayr on the authority of his father from Abdullah b. Amr b. al-As told me that the latter was asked what was the worst way in which (the) Quraysh showed their enmity to the apostle. He replied: I was with them one day when the notables had gathered in the Hijr and the apostle was mentioned. They said that they had never known anything like the trouble they had endured from this fellow; he had declared their mode of life foolish, insulted their forefathers, reviled their religion, divided the community, and cursed their gods. What they had borne was past all bearing, or words to that effect.'

While they were thus discussing him the apostle came towards them and kissed the black stone, then he passed them as he walked round the temple. As he passed they said some injurious things about him. This I could see from his expression. He went on and as he passed them the second time they attacked him similarly. This I could see from his expression. Then he passed the third time, and they did the same. He stopped and said, 'Will you listen to me O Quraysh? By him who holds my life in His hand I bring you slaughter.' This word so struck the people that not one of them but stood silent and still; even one who had hitherto been most violent spoke to him in the kindest way possible, saying, 'Depart, O Abul-Qasim, for by God you are not violent.' So the apostle went away, and on the morrow they assembled in the Hijr, I being there too, and they asked one another if they remembered what had taken place between them and the apostle so that when he openly said something unpleasant they let him alone. While they were talking thus the apostle appeared, and they leaped upon him as one man and encircled him, saying, Are you the one who said so-and-so against our gods and our religion? The apostle said, 'Yes, I am the one who said that.' And I saw one of them seize his robe. Then Abu Bakr interposed himself weeping and saying, 'Would you kill a man for saying Allah is my Lord?' Then they left him. That is the worst that I ever saw Quraysh do to him.

One of the family of Umm Kulthum, Abu Bakr's daughter, told me that she said, Abu Bakr returned that day with the hair of his head torn. He was a very hairy man and they had dragged him along by his beard' (177).

HAMZA ACCEPTS ISLAM

A man of Aslum, who had a good memory, told me that Abu Jahl passed by the apostle at al-Safa, insulted him and behaved most offensively, speaking spitefully of his religion and trying to bring him into disrepute. The apostle did not speak to him. Now a freedwoman, belonging to Abdullah b. Judan b. Amr b. Kab b. Sad b. Taym b. Murra, was in her house listening to what went on. When he went away he betook himself to the assembly of (the) Quraysh at the Kaaba and sat there. Within a little while Hamza b. Abdul-Muttalib arrived, with his bow hanging from his shoulder, returning from the chase, for he was fond of hunting and used to go out shooting. When he came back from a hunt he never went home until he had circumambulated the Kaaba, and that done when he passed by an assembly of the Quraysh he stopped and saluted and talked with them. He was the strongest man of (the) Quraysh, and the most unyielding. The apostle had gone back to his house when he passed by this woman, who asked him if he had heard of what Abul-Hakam b. Hisham had done just recently to his nephew, Mohammed; how he had found him sitting quietly there, and insulted him, and cursed him, and treated him badly, and that Mohammed had answered not a word. Hamza was filled with rage, for God purposed to honour him, so he went out at a run and did not stop to greet anyone, meaning to punish Abu Jahl when he met him. When he got to the mosque he saw him sitting among the people, and went up to him until he stood over him, when he lifted up his bow and struck him a violent blow with it, saying, 'Will you insult him when I follow his religion, and say what he says? Hit me back if you can!' Some of B. Makhzum got up to go to Abu Jahl's help, but he said, 'Let Abu Umara alone for, by God, I insulted his nephew deeply.' Hamza's Islam was complete, and he followed the apostle's commands. When he became a Muslim the Quraysh recognised that the apostle had become strong, and had found a protector in Hamza, and so they abandoned some of their ways of harassing him.

WHAT UTBA SAID ABOUT THE PROPHET

Yazid b. Ziyad from Mohammed b. Kab al-Qurazi told me that he was told that Utba b. Rabla, who was a chief, said one day while he was sitting in the Quraysh assembly and the apostle was sitting in the mosque by himself, 'Why should I not go to Mohammed and make some proposals to him which if he accepts in part, we will give him whatever he wants, and he will leave us in peace?' This happened when Hamza had accepted Islam and they saw that the prophet's followers were increasing and multiplying. They thought it was a good idea, and Utba went and sat by the prophet and said, 'O my nephew, you are one of us as you know, of the noblest of the tribe and hold a worthy position in ancestry. You have come to your people with an important matter, dividing their community thereby and ridiculing their customs, and you have insulted their gods and their religion, and declared that their forefathers were unbelievers, so listen to me and I will make some suggestions, and perhaps you will be able to accept one of them.' The apostle agreed, and he went on, 'If what you want is money, we will gather for you our property so that you may be the richest of us; if you want honour, we will make you our chief so that no one can decide anything apart from you: if you want sovereignty, we will make you king, and if this ghost which comes to you, which you see, is such that you cannot get rid of him, we will find a physician for you, and exhaust our means in getting you cured, for often a familiar spirit gets possession of a man until he can be cured of it,' or words to that effect. The apostle listened patiently, and then said: 'Now listen to me, "In the name of God, the compassionate and merciful, H.M., a revelation from the compassionate, the merciful, a book whose verses are expounded as an Arabic Koran for a people who understand, as an announcement and warning, though most of them turn aside not listening and say, 'Our hearts are veiled from that to which you invite us (Koran 41.1).'" 1 Then the apostle continued to recite it to him. When Utba heard it from him, he listened attentively, putting his hands behind his back and leaning on them as he listened. Then the prophet ended at the prostration (i.e. verse 37 'Prostrate yourselves to God') and prostrated himself, and said, 'You have heard what you have heard, Abul-Walid; the rest remains with you.' When Utba returned to his companions they noticed that his expression had completely altered, and they asked him what had happened. He said that he had heard words such as he had never heard before, which were neither poetry, spells, nor witchcraft. 'Take my advice and do as I do, leave this man entirely alone for, by God, the words which I have heard will be blazed abroad. If (other) Arabs kill him, others will have rid you of him; if he gets the better of the Arabs, his sovereignty will be your sovereignty, his power your power, and you will be prosperous through him.' They said, 'He has bewitched you with his tongue.' To which he answered, 'You have my opinion, you must do what you think fit.'

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN THE APOSTLE AND THE LEADERS OF THE QURAYSH AND AN EXPLANATION OF THE SURA OF THE CAVE

Islam began to spread in Mecca among men and women of the tribes of (the) Quraysh, though (the) Quraysh were imprisoning and seducing as many of the Muslims as they could. A traditionist told me from Said b. Jubayr and from Ikrima, freedman of Abdullah b. Abbas, that the leading men of every clan of (the) Quraysh—Utba b. Rabia, and Shayba his brother, and Abu Sufyan b. Harb, and al-Nadr b. al-Harith, brother of the Banu Abdul-Dar, and Abul-Bakhtari b. Hisham, and al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib b. Asad and Zamaa b. al-Aswad, and al-Walid b. al-Mughira, and Abu Jahl b. Hisham, and Abdullah b. Abu Umayya, and al-As b. Wail, and Nubayh and Munabbih, the sons of al-Hajjaj, both of Sahm, and Umayya b. Khalaf and possibly others—gathered together after sunset outside the Kaaba. They decided to send for Mohammed and to negotiate and argue with him so that they could not be held to blame on his account in the future. When they sent for him the apostle came quickly because he thought that what he had said to them had made an impression, for he was most zealous for their welfare, and their wicked way of life pained him. When he came and sat down with them, they explained that they had sent for him in order that they could talk together. No Arab had ever treated his tribe as Mohammed had treated them, and they repeated the charges which have been mentioned on several occasions. If it was money he wanted, they would make him the richest of them all; if it was honour, he should be their prince; if it was sovereignty, they would make him king; if it was a spirit which had got possession of him (they used to call the familiar spirit of the jinn raly), then they would exhaust their means in finding medicine to cure him. The apostle replied that he had no such intention. He sought not money, nor honour, nor sovereignty, but God had sent him as an apostle, and revealed a book to him, and commanded him to become an announcer and a warner. He had brought them the messages of his Lord, and given them good advice. If they took it then they would have a portion in this world and the next; if they rejected it, he could only patiently await the issue until God decided between them, or words to that effect. 'Well, Mohammed,' they said, 'If you will not accept any of our propositions, you know that no people are more short of land and water, and live a harder life than we, so ask your Lord, who has sent you, to remove for us these mountains which shut us in, and to straighten out our country for us, and to open up in it rivers like those of Syria and Iraq, and to resurrect for us our forefathers, and let there be among those that are resurrected for us Qusayy b. Kilab, for he was a true shaikh, so that we may ask them whether what you say is true or false. If they say you are speaking the truth, and you do what we have asked you, we will believe in you, and we shall know what your position with God is, and that He has actually sent you as an apostle as you say.' He replied that he had not been sent to them with such an object. He had conveyed to them God's message, and they could either accept it with advantage, or reject it and await God's judgement. They said that if he would not do that for them, let him do something for himself. Ask God to send an angel with him to confirm what he said and to contradict them; to make him gardens and castles, and treasures of gold and silver to satisfy his obvious wants. He stood in the streets as they did, and he sought a livelihood as they did. If he could do this, they would recognise his merit and position with God, if he were an apostle as he claimed to be. He replied that he would not do it, and would not ask for such things, for he was not sent to do so, and he repeated what he had said before. They said, 'Then let the heavens be dropped on us in pieces,' as you assert that your Lord could do if He wished, for we will not believe you unless you do so.' The apostle replied that this was a matter for God; if He wanted to do it with them, He would do it. They said, 'Did not your Lord know that we would sit with you, and ask you these questions, so that He might come to you and instruct you how to answer us, and tell you what He was going to do with us, if we did not receive your message? Information has reached us that you are taught by this fellow in al-Yamama, called al-Rahman, and by God we will never believe in the Rahman. Our conscience is clear. By God, we will not leave you and our treatment of you, until either we destroy you or you destroy us.' Some said, 'We worship the angels, who are the daughters of Allah.' Others said, 'We will not believe in you until you come to us with God and the angels as a surety (Koran 17.94).'

When they said this the apostle got up and left them. Abdullah b. Abu Umayya b. al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum (who was the son of his aunt Atika d. of Abdul-Muttalib) got up with him and said to him, 'O Mohammed, your people have made you certain propositions, which you have rejected; first they asked you things for themselves that they might know that your position with God is what you say it is so that they might believe in you and follow you, and you did nothing; then they asked you to take something for yourself, by which they might know your superiority over them and your standing with God, and you would not do it; then they asked you to hasten some of the punishment with which you were frightening them, and you did not do it', or words to that effect, And by God, I will never believe in you until you get a ladder to the sky, and mount up it until you come to it, while I am looking on, and until four angels shall come with you, testifying that you are speaking the truth, and by God, even if you did that I do not think I should believe you.' Then he went away, and the apostle went to his family, sad and grieving, because his hope that they had called him to accept his preaching was vain, and because of their estrangement from him. When the apostle had gone Abu Jahl spoke, making the usual charges against him, and saying, I call God to witness that I will wait for him tomorrow with a stone which I can hardly lift,' or words to that effect, And when he prostrates himself in prayer I will split his skull with it. Betray me or defend me, let the B. Abdu Manaf do what they like after that.* They said that they would never betray him on any account, and he could carry on with his project. When morning came Abu Jahl took a stone and sat in wait for the apostle, who behaved as usual that morning. While he was in Mecca he faced Syria in prayer, and when he prayed, he prayed between the southern corner and the black stone, putting the Kaaba between himself and Syria. The apostle rose to pray while (the) Quraysh sat in their meeting, waiting for what Abu Jahl was to do. When the apostle prostrated himself, Abu Jahl took up the stone and went towards him, until when he got near him, he turned back in flight, pale with terror, and his hand had withered upon the stone, so that he cast the stone from his hand. The Quraysh asked him what had happened, and he replied that when he got near him a camel's stallion got in his way. 'By God', he said, I have never seen anything like his head, shoulders, and teeth on any stallion before, and he made as though he would eat me.'

I was told that the apostle said, 'That was Gabriel. If he had come near, he would have seized him.'

When Abu Jahl said that to them, al-Nadr b. al-Harith b. Kalada b. Alqama b. Abdu Manaf b. Abduld-Dar b. Qusayy (178) got up and said: 'O Quraysh, a situation has arisen which you cannot deal with. Mohammed was a young man most liked among you, most truthful in speech, and most trustworthy, until, when you saw grey hairs on his temple, and he brought you his message, you said he was a sorcerer, but he is not, for we have seen such people and their spitting and their knots; you said, a diviner, but we have seen such people and their behaviour, and we have heard their rhymes; and you said a poet, but he is not a poet, for we have heard all kinds of poetry; you said he was possessed, but he is not, for we have seen the possessed, and he shows no signs of their gasping and whispering and delirium. Ye men of (the) Quraysh, look to your affairs, for by God, a serious thing has befallen you.' Now al-Nadr b. al-Harith was one of the satans of (the) Quraysh; he used to insult the apostle and show him enmity. He had been to al-Hira and learnt there the tales of the kings of Persia, the tales of Rustum and Isbandiyar. When the apostle had held a meeting in which he reminded them of God, and warned his people of what had happened to bygone generations as a result of God's vengeance, al-Nadr got up when he sat down, and said, I can tell a better story than he, come to me.' Then he began to tell them about the kings of Persia, Rustum and Isbandiyar, and then he would say, In what respect is Mohammed a better story-teller than I? (179).

Ibn Abbas, according to my information, used to say eight verses of the Koran came down in reference to him, 'When our verses are read to him, he says fairy tales of the ancients (Koran 68.15) and all those passages in the Koran in which 'fairy tales' are mentioned.

When Al-Nadr said that to them, they sent him and Uqba b. Abu Muayt to the Jewish rabbis in Medina and said to them, Ask them about Mohammed; describe him to them and tell them what he says, for they are the first people of the scriptures and have knowledge which we do not possess about the prophets.' They carried out their instructions, and said to the rabbis, 'You are the people of the Taurat (Torah). Properly the Law of Moses, but often used by Muslim writers of the Old Testament as a whole.), and we have come to you so that you can tell us how to deal with this tribesman of ours.' The rabbis said, Ask him about three things of which we will instruct you; if he gives you the right answer then he is an authentic prophet, but if he does not, then the man is a rogue, so form your own opinion about him. Ask him what happened to the young men who disappeared in ancient days, for they have a marvellous story. Ask him about the mighty traveller who reached the confines of both East and West. Ask him what the spirit is. If he can give you the answer, then follow him, for he is a prophet. If he cannot, then he is a forger and treat him as you will.' The two men returned to (the) Quraysh at Mecca (Mecca is some 180 miles / 290 km from Medina. The ordinary caravan took 10 or 11 days. The fayyara going via al-Khabt did the journey in 5 days.) and told them that they had a decisive way of dealing with Mohammed, and they told them about the three questions. They came to the apostle and called upon him to answer these questions. He said to them, I will give you your answer tomorrow,' but he did not say, If God will.' So they went away; and the apostle, so they say, waited for fifteen days without a revelation from God on the matter, nor did Gabriel come to him, so that the people of Mecca began to spread evil reports, saying, 'Mohammed promised us an answer on the morrow, and today is the fifteenth day we have remained without an answer.' This delay caused the apostle great sorrow, until Gabriel brought him the Chapter of The Cave, in which he reproaches him for his sadness, and told him the answers of their questions, the youths, the mighty traveller, and the spirit.

I was told that the apostle said to Gabriel when he came, 'You have shut yourself off from me, Gabriel, so that I became apprehensive.' He answered, 'We descend only by God's command, whose is what lies before us, behind us, and what lies between, and thy Lord does not forget (Koran 19.65).'

He began the Sura with His own praise, and mentioning (Mohammed's) prophethood and apostolate and their denial thereof, and He said, 'Glory belongs to God, who has revealed the book to His servant (Koran 18.),' meaning Mohammed.

'Verily thou art an apostle from Me,' i.e. confirming what they ask about thy prophethood. 'He hath not made therein crookedness, it is straight,' i.e. it is level, without any difference. 'To warn of a severe punishment from Him,' that is, His immediate judgement in this world. And a painful judgement in the next,' that is, from thy Lord, who has sent thee as an apostle. 'To give those who believe, who do good works, the good news that they will have a glorious reward, enjoying it everlastingly,' i.e. the eternal abode. 'They shall not die therein,' i.e. those who have accepted your message as true, though others have denied it, and have done the works that you have ordered them to do. And to warn those who say God has taken a son.' He means the Quraysh when they say, 'We worship the angels who are the daughters of Allah.' 'They have no knowledge about it, nor had their forefathers', who take hardly your leaving them and shaming their religion. 'Dreadful is the word that proceedeth from their mouth' when they say the angels are God's daughters. 'They say nothing but a lie, and it may be that thou wilt destroy thyself,' O Mohammed. In grief over their course if they believe not this saying,' i.e. because of his sorrow when he was disappointed of his hope of them; i.e. thou shalt not do it (180). 'Verily We have made that which is upon the earth an ornament to it to try them which of them will behave the best,' i.e. which of them will follow My commandment and act in obedience to Me. And verily we will make that which is upon it a barren mound,' i.e. the earth and what is upon it will perish and pass away, for all must return to Me that I may reward them according to their deeds, so do not despair nor let what you hear and see therein grieve you (181).

Then comes the story of what they asked him about the young men, and God said: 'Have you considered that the dwellers in the Cave and al-Raqim were wonders from our signs?' i.e. there were still more wonderful signs in the proofs I have given to men (182). Then God said: 'When the young men took refuge in the Cave they said, O Lord, show us kindness and give us guidance by Your command, so We sealed up their hearing in the Cave for many years. Then We brought them to life again that We might know which of the two parties would best calculate the time that they had been there.' Then He said: 'We will tell you the true account of them; they were young men who believed in their Lord, and We gave them further guidance, and We strengthened their hearts. Then they stood and said, Our Lord is the Lord of heaven and earth. We will pray to no other god but Him. If we were to say otherwise we should speak blasphemy,' i.e. they did not associate anyone with Me as you have associated with Me what you know nothing about (183). 'These people of ours have chosen gods in addition to Him, though they bring no plain authority for them,' i.e. a clear proof. 'Who is more wicked than he who invents a lie against God? When you withdraw from them and what they worship instead of God, then take refuge in the Cave; your Lord will spread for you by His mercy and prepare a pillow for you in your plight. You might see the sun when it rises move away from their Cave towards the right, and when it sets it would go past them to the left, while they were in a cleft of the Cave' (184). 'That was one of the signs of God', i.e. for a proof against those of the people of the scriptures who knew their story and who ordered those men to ask you about them concerning the truth of your prophecy in giving a true account of them. 'Whom God guides is rightly guided, and for him whom He leads astray you will find no friend to direct. And you would think they were awake while they were sleeping, and we would turn them over to the right and the left, while their dog was lying with its forepaws on the threshold' (185). If you observed them closely you would turn your backs on them fleeing, and be afraid of them' up to the words 'those who gained their point said,' i.e. the people of power and dominion among them. 'Let us build a mosque above them; they will say,' i.e. the Jewish rabbis who ordered them to ask these questions. 'Three, their dog being the fourth of them, and some say five, their sixth being the dog, guessing in the dark,' i.e. they know nothing about it, And they say seven and their dog the eighth. Say: My Lord knows best about their number; none knows them save a few, so do not contend with them except with an open contention,' i.e. do not be proud with them. And do not ask anyone information about them,' for they know nothing about it. And do not say of anything I will do it tomorrow unless you say, If God will. And mention your Lord if you have forgotten and say, Perhaps my Lord will guide me to a nearer way of truth than this,' i.e. do not say about anything which they ask you what you said about this, viz. I will tell you tomorrow, and make God's will the condition, and remember Him when you have forgotten to do so and say, Perhaps my Lord will guide me to what is better than what they ask of me in guidance, for you do not know what I am doing about it. And they remained in their Cave three hundred years and they added nine,' i.e. they will say this. 'Say: Your Lord knows best how long they stayed there. The secrets of heaven and earth are with Him. How wonderfully He sees and hears. They have no friend but Him, and He allows none in His dominion as a partner,' i.e. nothing of what they ask you is hidden from Him.

And He said about what they asked him in regard to the mighty traveller, And they will ask you about Dhul-Qarnayn: say, I will recite to you a remembrance of him. Verily We gave him power in the earth, and We gave to him every road and he followed it'; so far as the end of his story. It is said that he attained what no other mortal attained. Roads were stretched out before him until he traversed the whole earth, east and west. He was given power over every land he trod on until he reached the farthest confines of creation.

A man who used to purvey stories of the foreigners (non-Arabs, non-Muslims), which were handed down among them, told me that Dhul-Qarnayn was an Egyptian, whose name was Marzuban b. Mardhaba, the Greek, descended from Yunan b. Yafith b. Nuh (186).

Thaur b. Yazid from Khalid b. Madan al-Kalai, who was a man who reached Islamic times, told me that the apostle was asked about Dhul-Qarnayn, and he said, 'He is an angel who measured the earth beneath by ropes.'

Khalid said, Umar heard a man calling someone Dhul-Qarnayn, and he said, "God pardon you, are you not satisfied to use the names of the prophets for your children that you must now name them after the angels?" God knows the truth of the matter, whether the apostle said that or not. If he said it, then what he said was true.

God said concerning what they asked him about the Spirit, 'They will ask you about the Spirit, say, the Spirit is a matter for my Lord, and you have only a little knowledge about it (Koran 17.87).'

I was told on the authority of Ibn Abbas that he said, When the apostle came to Medina, the Jewish rabbis said, 'When you said, "And you have only a little knowledge about it," did you mean us or your own people?' He said, 'Both of you.' They said, 'Yet you will read in what you brought that we were given the Taurat in which is an exposition of everything.' He replied that in reference to God's knowledge that was little, but in it there was enough for them if they carried it out. God revealed concerning what they asked him about that if all the trees in the world were pens and the ocean were ink, though the seven seas reinforced it, the words of God would not be exhausted. Verily God is mighty and wise (Koran 31.26).' i.e. The Taurat compared with God's knowledge is little. And God revealed to him concerning what his people asked him for themselves, namely, removing the mountains, and cutting the earth, and raising their forefathers from the dead, if there were a Koran by which mountains could be moved, or the earth split, or the dead spoken to [it would be this one], but to God belongs the disposition of all things,' i.e. I will not do anything of the kind unless I choose. And He revealed to him concerning their saying, 'Take for yourself, meaning that He should make for him gardens, and castles, and treasures, and should send an angel with him to confirm what he said, and to defend him. And they said, "What is this apostle doing, eating food, and walking in the markets? Unless an angel were sent to him to be a Warner with him, or he were given a treasure or a garden from which he might eat [we would not believe]"; and the evildoers say, "You follow only a man bewitched". See how they have coined proverbs of thee, and have gone astray and cannot find the way. Blessed is He, who if He willed, could make for thee something better than that,' i.e. than that you should walk in the marketplaces, seeking a livelihood. 'Gardens beneath which run rivers, and make for thee castles (Koran 25.8).'

And He revealed to him concerning their saying, 'When We sent messengers before thee they did eat and walk in the markets, and we made some of you a test for others, whether you would be steadfast, and your Lord is looking on (Koran 25.22),' i.e. I made some of you a test for others that you might be steadfast. Had I wanted to make the world side with my apostles, so that they would not oppose them, I would have done so. And he revealed to him concerning what Abdullah b. Umayya said,

And they said, "We will not believe in thee until fountains burst forth for us from the earth, or you have a garden of dates and grapes and make the rivers within it burst forth copiously, or make the heavens fall upon us in fragments as you assert, or bring God and the angels as a surety, or you get a house of gold, or mount up to heaven, we will not believe in thy ascent until you bring down to us a book which we can read." Say: exalted be my Lord, am I aught but a mortal messenger (Koran 17.92)' (187).

He revealed to him with reference to their saying 'We have heard that a man in al-Yamama called al-Rahman teaches you. We will never believe in him'. 'Thus did We send you to a people before whom other peoples had passed away that you might read to them that which We have revealed to thee, while they disbelieved in the Rahman. Say, He is my Lord, there is no other God but He. In Him I trust and unto Him is the return (Koran 13.29).'

And He revealed to him concerning what Abu Jahl said and intended: 'Have you seen him who prohibited a servant when he prayed, have you seen if he was rightly guided or gave orders in the fear of God, have you seen if he lied and turned his back; does he not know that Allah sees everything? If he does not cease we will drag him by the forelock, the lying sinful forelock; let him call his gang, we will call the guards of hell. Thou shalt certainly not obey him, prostrate thyself and draw near to God' (188).

And God revealed concerning what they proposed to him in regard to their money, 'Say, I ask no reward of you, it is yours; my reward is God's concern alone and He witnesses everything (Koran 34.46).'

When the apostle brought to them what they knew was the truth so that they recognised his truthfulness and his position as a prophet in bringing them tidings of the unseen when they asked him about it, envy prevented them from admitting his truth, and they became insolent against God and openly forsook his commandments and took refuge in their polytheism. One of them said, 'Do not listen to this Koran; treat it as nonsense and probably you will get the better of it', i.e. treat it as nonsense and false; and treat him as a mere raver—you will probably get the better of him, whereas if you argue or debate with him any time he will get the better of you.

Abu Jahl, when he was mocking the apostle and his message one day, said: 'Mohammed pretends that God's troops who will punish you in hell and imprison you there, are nineteen only, while you have a large population. Can it be that every hundred of you is unequal to one man of them?' In reference to that God revealed, 'We have made the guardians of hell angels, and We have made the number of them a trial to those who disbelieve', to the end of the passage (Koran 74.31). Whereupon when the apostle recited the Koran loudly as he was praying, they began to disperse and refused to listen to him. If anyone of them wanted to hear what he was reciting as he prayed, he had to listen stealthily for fear of (the) Quraysh; and if he saw that they knew that he was listening to it, he went away for fear of punishment and listened no more. If the apostle lowered his voice, then the man who was listening thought that they would not listen to any part of the reading, while he himself heard something which they could not hear, by giving all his attention to the words.

Daud b. al-Husayn freedman of Amr b. Uthman told me that Ikrima freedman of Ibn Abbas had told them that Abdullah b. Abbas had told them that the verse,

'Do not speak loudly in thy prayer and do not be silent; adopt a middle course (Koran 17.110),' was revealed because of those people. He said, 'Do not speak loudly in thy prayer' so that they may go away from you, and 'Do not be silent' so that he who wants to hear, of those who listen stealthily, cannot hear; perhaps he will give heed to some of it and profit thereby.

THE FIRST ONE WHO PRONOUNCED THE KORAN LOUDLY

Yahya b. Urwa b. al-Zubayr told me as from his father that the first man to speak the Koran loudly in Mecca after the apostle was Abdullah b. Masud. The prophet's companions came together one day and remarked that (the) Quraysh had never heard the Koran distinctly read to them, and who was there who would make them listen to it? When Abdullah said that he would, they replied that they were afraid on his behalf and they wanted only a man of good family who would protect him from the populace if they attacked him. He replied, 'Let me alone, for God will protect me.' So in the morning he went to the sanctuary while (the) Quraysh were in their conferences, and when he arrived at the Maqam, he read, In the name of God, the compassionate, the merciful (Koran 55.1),' raising his voice as he did so, 'the compassionate who taught the Koran.' Then he turned towards them as he read so that they noticed him, and they said, 'What on earth is this son of a slavewoman saying?' And when they realised that he was reading some of what Mohammed prayed, they got up and began to hit him in the face; but he continued to read so far as God willed that he should read. Then he went to his companions with the marks of their blows on his face. They said, 'This is just what we feared would happen to you.' He said, 'God's enemies were never more contemptible in my sight than they are now, and if you like I will go and do the same thing before them tomorrow.' They said, 'No, you have done enough, you have made them listen to what they don't want to hear.'

THE QURAYSH LISTEN TO THE PROPHET'S READING

Mohammed b. Muslim b. Shihab al-Zuhri told me that he was told that Abu Sufyan b. Harb and Abu Jahl b. Hisham and al-Akhnas b. Shariq b. Amr b. Wahb al-Thaqafi, an ally of B. Zuhra, had gone out by night to listen to the apostle as he was praying in his house. Everyone of them chose a place to sit where he could listen, and none knew where his fellow was sitting. So they passed the night listening to him, until as the dawn rose, they dispersed. On the way home they met and reproached one another, and one said to the other, 'Do not do it again, for if one of the light-minded fools sees you, you will arouse suspicion in his mind.' Then they went away, until on the second night everyone of them returned again to his place, and they passed the night listening. Then at dawn the same thing happened again, and again on the third night, when on the morrow they said to one another, 'We will not go away until we take a solemn obligation that we will not return.' This they did and then dispersed. In the morning al-Akhnas took his stick and went to the house of Abu Sufyan, and asked him to tell him his opinion of what he had heard from Mohammed. He replied, 'By God, I heard things that I know, and know what was meant by them, and I heard things whose meaning I do not know, nor what was intended by them.' Al-Akhnas replied, 'I feel precisely the same.' Then he left him and went to Abu Jahl's house, and asked him the same question. He answered, 'What did I hear! We and B. Abdu Manaf have been rivals in honour. They have fed the poor, and so have we; they have assumed others' burdens, and so have we; they have been generous, and so have we, until we have progressed side by side (Lit., "until we have squatted on our knees face to face", i.e. as complete equals.), and we were like two horses of equal speed. They said, "We have a prophet to whom revelation comes from heaven", and when shall we attain anything like that? By God, we will never believe in him and treat him as truthful.' Then al-Akhnas got up and left him.

When the apostle recited the Koran to them and called them to God, they said in mockery, 'Our hearts are veiled, we do not understand what you say. There is a load in our ears so that we cannot hear what you say, and a curtain divides us from you, so follow your own path and we will follow ours, we do not understand anything you say.' Then God revealed, 'And when you read the Koran we put between you and those who do not believe in the last day a hidden veil (Koran 17.47),' as far as the words 'And when you mention your Lord alone in the Koran they turn their backs in aversion', that is, how can they understand thy assertion that thy Lord is one if I have put veils over their hearts and heaviness in their ears, and between you and them is a curtain as they allege?' i.e. that I have not done it. 'We know best about what they listen to when they listen to you, and when they take secret counsel, the wicked say, "You are only following a man bewitched", i.e. that is the way they order people not to listen to the message I have given you. 'See how they have made parables of you, and gone astray, and cannot find the way,' i.e. they have made false proverbs about you, and cannot find the right path, and what they say is not straightforward. And they say, when we are bones and dried morsels shall we be raised a new creation?' i.e. you have come to tell us that we shall be raised after death when we are bones and dried fragments, and that is something that cannot be. 'Say, Be ye hard stones or iron, or anything that you think in your minds is harder, they will say, "Who will raise us?" Say, He who created you in the beginning,' i.e. He who created you from what you know, for to create you from dust is no more difficult than that to him.

Abdullah b. Abu Najih from Mujahid from Ibn Abbas told me that the latter said, I asked him what was meant by the word of God "or something that you think is harder" and he said, "Death."

THE POLYTHEISTS PERSECUTE THE MUSLIMS OF THE LOWER CLASSES

Then the Quraysh showed their enmity to all those who followed the apostle; every clan which contained Muslims attacked them, imprisoning them, and beating them, allowing them no food or drink, and exposing them to the burning heat of Mecca, so as to seduce them from their religion. Some gave way under pressure of persecution, and others resisted them, being protected by God. Bilal, who was afterwards freed by Abu Bakr but at that time belonged to one of B. Jumah, being slave born, was a faithful Muslim, pure of heart. His father's name was Ribah and his mother was Hamama. Umayya b. Khalaf b. Wahb b. Hudhafa b. Jumah used to bring him out at the hottest part of the day and throw him on his back in the open valley and have a great rock put on his chest; then he would say to him, 'You will stay here till you die or deny Mohammed and worship Al-Lat and al-Uzza.' He used to say while he was enduring this, 'One, one!'

Hisham b. Urwa told me on the authority of his father: Waraqa b. Naufal was passing him while he was being thus tortured and saying, 'One, one,' and he said, 'One, one, by God, Bilal.' Then he went to Umayya and those of B. Jumah who had thus maltreated him, and said, 'I swear by God that if you kill him in this way I will make his tomb a shrine.' One day Abu Bakr passed by while they were thus ill-treating him, for his house was among this clan. He said to Umayya, 'Have you no fear of God that you treat this poor fellow like this? How long is it to go on?' He replied, 'You are the one who corrupted him, so save him from his plight that you see.' I will do so,' said Abu Bakr; I have got a black slave, tougher and stronger than he, who is a heathen. I will exchange him for Bilal.' The transaction was carried out, and Abu Bakr took him and freed him.

Before he migrated to Medina he freed six slaves in Islam, Bilal being the seventh, namely: Amir b. Fuhayra, who was present at Badr and Uhud and was killed at the battle of Bir Mauna; and Umm Ubays and-Zinnira (she lost her sight when he freed her and (the) Quraysh said, Al-Lat and al-Uzza are the ones that have taken away her sight'; but she said, 'By the house of God, you lie. Al-Lat and al-Uzza can neither harm nor heal,' so God restored her sight).

And he freed al-Nahdiya and her daughter who belonged to a woman of B. Abdul-Dar; he passed by them when their mistress had sent them about some flour of hers, and she was saying, 'By God, I will never free you.' Abu Bakr said, 'Free yourself from your oath.' She said, 'It is free; you corrupted them so you free them.' They agreed upon the price, and he said, 'I will take them and they are free. Return her flour to her'. They said, 'Ought we not to finish the grinding and then take it back to her?' He said, 'Yes, if you like.'

He passed by a slave girl of B. Muammil, a clan of B. Adiy b. Kab who was a Muslim. Umar b. al-Khattab was punishing her to make her give up Islam. At that time he was a polytheist. He beat her until he was tired and said, 'I have only stopped beating you because I am tired.' She said, 'May God treat you in the same way.' Abu Bakr bought her and freed her. Mohammed b. Abdullah b. Abu Atiq from Amir b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from one of his family told me: Abu Quhafa said to his son Abu Bakr, 'My son, I see that you are freeing weak slaves. If you want to do what you are doing, why do you not free powerful men who could defend you and protect you?' He said, 'I am only trying to do what I am attempting for God's sake.' It is said that these verses came down in reference to him and what his father said to him: As to him who gives and fears God and believes in goodness, 'up to the divine words, 'none is rewarded by God with favour but for seeking his Lord's most sublime face and in the end he will be satisfied (Koran 92.5).'

The B. Makhziim used to take out Ammar b. Yasir with his father and mother, who were Muslims, in the heat of the day and expose them to the heat of Mecca, and the Apostle passed by them and said, so I have heard, 'Patience, O family of Yasir! Your meeting-place will be paradise.' They killed his mother, for she refused to abandon Islam.

It was that evil man Abu Jahl who stirred up the Meccans against them. When he heard that a man had become a Muslim, if he was a man of social importance and had relations to defend him, he reprimanded him and poured scorn on him, saying, 'You have forsaken the religion of your father who was better than you. We will declare you a blockhead and brand you as a fool, and destroy your reputation.' If he was a merchant he said, 'We will boycott your goods and reduce you to beggary.' If he was a person of no social importance, he beat him and incited people against him.

Hakim b. Jubayr from Said b. Jubayr told me: I said to Abdullah b. Abbas, "Were the polytheists treating them so badly that apostasy was excusable?" "Yes, by God, they were," he said, "they used to beat one of them, depriving him of food and drink so that he could hardly sit upright because of the violence they had used on him, so that in the end he would do whatever they said." If they said to him, "Are al-Lat and al-Uzza your gods and not Allah?" he would say, "Yes" to the point that if a beetle passed by them they would say to him, "Is this beetle your God and not Allah?" he would say yes, in order to escape from the suffering he was enduring.'

Al-Zubayr b. Ukasha b. Abdullah b. Abu Ahmad told me that he was told that some men of B. Makhzum went to Hisham b. al-Walid when his brother al-Walid b. al-Walid became a Muslim. They had agreed to seize some young men who had become Muslims, among whom were Salma b. Hisham and Ayyash b. Abu Rabia. They were afraid of his violent temper and so they said, 'We wish to admonish these men because of this religion which they have newly introduced; thus we shall be safe in the case of others.' All right,' he said, Admonish him, but beware that you do not kill him.' Then he began to recite:

My brother Uyays shall not be killed,
Otherwise there will be war between us for ever (Lit.: 'reciprocal cursing', which was an inseparable accompaniment to war among the pagan Arabs.)

'Be careful of his life, for I swear by God that if you kill him, I will kill the noblest of you to the last man.' They said, 'God damn the man. After what he has said who will want to bring trouble on himself, for, by God, if this man were killed while in our hands the best of us would be killed to a man.' So they left him and withdrew, and that was how God protected him from them.

THE FIRST MIGRATION TO ABYSSINIA (Ethiopia)

When the apostle saw the affliction of his companions and that though he escaped it because of his standing with Allah and his uncle Abu Talib, he could not protect them, he said to them: If you were to go to Abyssinia (it would be better for you), for the king will not tolerate injustice and it is a friendly country, until such time as Allah shall relieve you from your distress.' Thereupon his companions went to Abyssinia, being afraid of apostasy and fleeing to God with their religion. This was the first hijra in Islam.

The total number of those who migrated to Abyssinia (Ethiopia), apart from the little children whom they took with them or were born to them there, was eighty-three men if Ammar b. Yasir was among them, but that is doubtful.

The following is an extract from the poetry which has been written in Abyssinia by Abdullah b. al-Harith b. Qays b. Adiy b. Sad b. Sahn. They were safely ensconced there and were grateful for the protection of the Negus (Ethiopian emperor); could serve God without fear; and the Negus had shown them every hospitality.

O rider, take a message from me

To those who hope for the demonstration of God and religion (This seems to be an allusion to the last verse of the Koran's Sura 14.),

To everyone of God's persecuted servants,
Mistreated and hard tried in Mecca's vale,
Namely, that we have found God's country spacious,
Giving security from humiliation, shame and low-repute,

So do not live a life in humiliation

And shame in death, not safe from blame.

We have followed the apostle of God, and they Have rejected the words of the prophet, and been deceitful (Such is the commentators' explanation of 'gone high in the balance'. The line is explained by Lane. 22006; it begins 'They said We have followed', etc.).

Using thy punishment on the people who transgress

And protect me lest they rise and lead me astray.

Abdullah b. al-Harith also said when he spoke of the Quraysh expelling them from their country, and reproached some of his people:

My heart refuses to fight them

And so do my fingers; I tell you the truth.

How could I fight a people who taught you

The truth that you should not mingle with falsehood?

Jinn worshippers exiled them from their noble land

So that they were exceeding sorrowful;

If there were faithfulness in Adiy b. Sad

Springing from piety and kinship ties,

I should have hoped that it would have been among

you,

By the grace of Him who is not moved by bribes.

I got in exchange for the bountiful refuge of poor widows

A whelp, and that mothered by a bitch.

He also said:

Those Quraysh who deny God's truth

Are as Ad and Madyan and the people of al-Hijr who denied it.

If I do not raise a storm let not the earth,

Spacious land or ocean hold me!

In a land wherein is Mohammed, servant of God.

I will explain what is in my heart

When exhaustive search is made.

Because of the second verse of this poem Abdullah was called al-Mubriq, the thunderer (or threatener).

Uthman b. Mazun, reproaching Umayya b. Khalaf b. Wahb b. Hudhafa b. Jumah, who was his cousin, and who used to ill-treat him because of his belief, made the following verses. Umayya was a leader among his people at that time.

O Taym b. Amr, I wonder at him who came in enmity,

When the sea and the broad high land lay between us*,

(* Commentators find this verse difficult. Abu Dharr says that sharmān is a place-name, or with other vowels it means the sea; while bark is either another place-name or a herd of kneeling camels. Aktau meaning All' is generally preceded by ajmau. Suhayli says that sharmān is the sea and bark is wide high ground. He prefers the opening line to begin: 'O Taym b. Amr, I wonder at him whose anger burned.' Suhayli is right. In Ethiopian barka means 'land'.)

Did you drive me out of Mecca's vale where I was safe

And make me live in a loathsome white castle (The reading and the meaning are in question. Sarh means both 'castle' or 'room' in Ethiopian / Amharic.)

You feather arrows, whose feathering will not help you;

You sharpen arrows, whose feathers are all for you;

You fight noble strong people

And destroy those from whom you once sought help.

You will know one day, when misfortune attacks you

And strangers betray you, what you have done.

Taym b. Amr, whom Uthman addresses, was Jumah.

His name was

Taym.

THE QURAYSH SEND TO ABYSSINIA TO GET THE EMIGRANTS RETURNED

When (the) Quraysh saw that the prophet's companions were safely ensconced in Abyssinia and had found security there, they decided among themselves to send two determined men of their number to the Negus to get them sent back, so that they could seduce them from their religion and get them out of the home in which they were living in peace. So they sent Abdullah b. Abu Rabia and Amr b. al-As b. Wail. They got together some presents for them to take to the Negus and his generals. When Abu Talib perceived their design he composed the following verse for the Negus to move him to treat them kindly and protect them:

Would that I knew how far-away Jafar and Amr fare,
(The bitterest enemies are of the nearest in blood).

Does the Negus still treat Jafar and his companions kindly,

Or has the mischief-maker prevented him?

Thou art noble and generous, mayst thou escape calamity;

No refugees are unhappy with thee.

Know that God has increased thy happiness

And all prosperity cleaves to thee.

Thou art a river whose banks overflow with bounty

Which reaches both friend and foe.

Mohammed b. Muslim al-Zuhri from Abu Bakr b. Abdul-Rahman b. al-Harith b. Hisham al-Makhzumi from Umm Salama d. Abu Umayya b. al-Mughira wife of the apostle said, 'When we reached Abyssinia the Negus gave us a kind reception. We safely practised our religion, and we worshipped God, and suffered no wrong in word or deed. When the Quraysh got to know of that, they decided to send two determined men to the Negus and to give him presents of the choicest wares of Mecca. Leatherwork was especially prized there, so they collected a great many skins so that they were able to give some to every one of his generals. They sent Abdullah and Amr with instructions to give each general his present before they spoke to the Negus about the refugees. Then they were to give their presents to the Negus and ask him to give the men up before he spoke to them. They carried out these instructions to the letter, and said to each of the generals, 'Some foolish fellows from our people have taken refuge in the king's country. They have forsaken our religion and not accepted yours, but have brought in an invented religion which neither we nor you know anything about. Our nobles have sent us to the king to get him to return them, so when we speak to the king about them advise him to surrender them to us and not to speak to them, for their own people have the keenest insight and know most about their faults.' This the generals agreed to do. They took their gifts to the Negus and when he had accepted them, they said to him what they had already said to the generals about the refugees. Now there was nothing which Abdullah and Amr disliked more than that the Negus should hear what the Muslims had to say. The generals about his presence said that the men had spoken truly, and their own people best knew the truth about the refugees, and they recommended the king to give them up and return them to their own people. The Negus was enraged and said, 'No, by God, I will not surrender them. No people who have sought my protection, settled in my country, and chosen me rather than others shall be betrayed, until I summon them and ask them about what these two men allege. If they are as they say, I will give them up to them and send them back to their own people; but if what they say is false, I will protect them and see that they receive proper hospitality while under my protection.'

Then he summoned the apostle's companions, and when his messenger came they gathered together, saying one to another, 'What will you say to the man when you come to him?' They said, 'We shall say what we know and what our prophet commanded us, 'come what may.' When they came into the royal presence they found that the king had summoned his bishops with their sacred books exposed around him. He asked them what was the religion for which they had forsaken their people, without entering into his religion or any other. Jafar b. Abu Talib answered, 'O King, we were an uncivilised people, worshipping idols, eating corpses, committing abominations, breaking natural ties, treating guests badly, and our strong devoured our weak. Thus we were until God sent us an apostle whose lineage, truth, trustworthiness, and clemency we know. He summoned us to acknowledge God's unity and to worship him and to renounce the stones and images which we and our fathers formerly worshipped. He commanded us to speak the truth, be faithful to our engagements, mindful of the ties of kinship and kindly hospitality, and to refrain from crimes and bloodshed. He forbade us to commit abominations and to speak lies, and to devour the property of orphans, to vilify chaste women. He commanded us to worship God alone and not to associate anything with Him, and he gave us orders about prayer, almsgiving, and fasting (enumerating the commands of Islam). We confessed his truth and believed in him, and we followed him in what he had brought from God, and we worshipped God alone without associating aught with Him. We treated as forbidden what he forbade, and as lawful what he declared lawful. Thereupon our people attacked us, treated us harshly and seduced us from our faith to try to make us go back to the worship of idols instead of the worship of God, and to regard as lawful the evil deeds we once committed. So when they got the better of us, treated us unjustly and circumscribed our lives, and came between us and our religion, we came to your country, having chosen you above all others. Here we have been happy in your protection, and we hope that we shall not be treated unjustly while we are with you, O King.'

The Negus asked if they had with them anything which had come from God. When Jafar said that he had, the Negus commanded him to read it to him, so he read him a passage from the Koran Chapter / Sura 19: Kaf- Ha- Ya- Ain-Sad (Mariam / Mary). The Negus wept until his beard was wet and the bishops wept until their scrolls were wet, when they heard what he read to them. Then the Negus said, 'Of a truth, this and what Jesus (This is the reading of the Cairo text which unfortunately fails to record the Manuscript on which [presumably] it is based. Wüstenfeld's text reads Moses and he does not record a variant.) brought have come from the same niche. You two may go, for by God, I will never give them up to them and they shall not be betrayed.'

When the two had gone, Amr said, 'Tomorrow I will tell him something that will uproot them all.' Abdullah, who was the more godfearing of them in his attitude towards us, said, 'Do not do it, for they are our kindred though they have gone against us.' He said, 'By God, I will tell him that they assert that Jesus, son of Mary, is a creature (Lit. a slave.)' He went to him in the morning and told him that they said a dreadful thing about Jesus, son of Mary, and that he should send for them and ask them about it. He did so. Nothing of the kind had happened to them before, and the people gathered together asking one another what they should say about Jesus when they were asked. They decided that they would say what God had said and what the prophet had brought, come what may. So when they went into the royal presence and the question was put to them, Jafar answered, 'We say about him that which our prophet brought, saying, he is the slave of God, and his apostle, and his spirit, and his word, which he cast into Mary the blessed virgin.' The Negus took a stick from the ground and said, 'By God, Jesus, son of Mary, does not exceed what you have said by the length of this stick.' His generals round about him snorted when he said this, and he said, 'Though you snort, by God! Go, for you are safe in my country.' (Shuyum means al-aminuna.) (shuyum in Amharic / Ethiopian means a high official' (sing.) as S. conjectured. Dabr is also an Ethiopic word. The story evidently comes from someone familiar with the language of Abyssinia.) Then he repeated three times the words, 'He who curses you will be fined. Not for a mountain of gold would I allow a man of you to be hurt' (199). Give them back their presents, for I have no use for them. God took no bribe from me when He gave me back my kingdom, that I should take a bribe for it, and God did not do what men wanted against me, so why should I do what they want against Him.' So they left his presence, crestfallen, taking away their rejected gifts, while we lived with him comfortably in the best security.

While we were living thus, a rebel arose to snatch his kingdom from him, and I never knew us to be so sad as we were at that, in our anxiety lest this fellow would get the better of the Negus, and that a man would arise who did not know our case as the Negus did. He went out against him, and the Nile lay between the two parties. The apostle's companions called for a man who would go to the battle and bring back news, and al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam volunteered. Now he was the youngest man we had. We inflated a waterskin and he put it under his chest, and swam across until he reached that point of the Nile where the armies faced one another. Then he went on until he met them. Meanwhile he prayed to God to give the Negus Victory over his enemy and to establish him in his own country; and as we were doing so, waiting for what might happen, up came al-Zubayr running, waving his clothes as he said, 'Hurrah, the Negus has conquered and God has destroyed his enemies and established him in his land.' By God, I never knew us to be so happy before. The Negus came back, God having destroyed his enemy and established him in his country, and the chiefs of the Abyssinians rallied to him. Meanwhile we lived in happiest conditions until we came to the apostle of God in Mecca.

HOW THE NEGUS (emperor) BECAME KING (ruler) OF ABYSSINIA (Ethiopia)

Al-Zuhri said: I told Urwa b. al-Zubayr the tradition of Abu Bakr b. Abdul-Rahman from Umm Salama the prophet's wife and he said: 'Do you know what he meant when he said that God took no bribe from me when He gave me back my kingdom that I should take a bribe for it, and God did not do what men wanted against me so why should I do what they want against Him?' When I said that I did not know, he said that Aisha told him that the father of the Negus was the king, and the Negus was his only son. The Negus had an uncle who had twelve sons who were of the Abyssinian royal house. The Abyssinians said among themselves, It would be a good thing if we were to kill the father of the Negus and make his brother king, because he has no son but this youngster, while his brother has twelve sons, so they can inherit the kingdom after him so that the future of Abyssinia may be permanently secured.' So they attacked the Negus's father and killed him, making his brother king, and such was the state of affairs for a considerable time.

The Negus grew up with his uncle, an intelligent and resolute young man. He attained an ascendancy over his uncle to such a degree that when the Abyssinians perceived how great his influence with the king was, they began to fear lest he might gain the crown, and would then put them all to death because he knew that they were the murderers of his father. Accordingly they went to his uncle and said, 'Either you must kill this young man or you must exile him from among us, for we are in fear of our lives because of him.' He replied, 'You wretches, but yesterday I slew his father, and am I to kill him today? But I will put him out of your country.' So they took him to the market and sold him to a merchant for six hundred dirhams. The latter threw him into a boat and went off with him, but on that very evening the autumn storm clouds massed, and his uncle went out to pray for rain beneath the mass of cloud when he was struck by lightning and killed. The Abyssinians hastened in fear to his sons, and lo! he was a begetter of fools; he had not a son who was any good at all; the situation of the Abyssinians became very unsettled, and when they feared the pressure of events they said to one another, 'Know, by God, that your king, the only one who can put us to rights, is the one you sold this morning, and if you care about your country go after him now.' So they went out in search of him and the man to whom they had sold him, until they overtook him and took the Negus from him. They then brought him home, put the crown on his head, made him sit upon the throne, and proclaimed him king.

The merchant to whom they had sold him came and said, 'Either you give me my money or I shall tell him about this.' They said, 'We will not give you a penny.' He said, 'Mn that case, by God, I will speak to him.' They said, 'Well, there he is'; so he came and stood before him and said, 'O King, I bought a young slave from people in the market for six hundred dirhams. They gave me my slave and they took my money, yet when I had gone off with my slave they overtook me and seized my slave and kept my money.' The Negus said, 'You must either give him his money back or let the young man place his hand in his, and let him take him where he wishes.' They replied, 'No, but we will give him his money.' For this reason he said the words in question. This was the first thing that was reported about his firmness in his religion and his justice in judgement. Yazid b. Ruman told me from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Aisha that she said: 'When the Negus died it used to be said that a light was constantly seen over his grave.'

THE ABYSSINIANS REVOLT AGAINST THE NEGUS

Ja'far b. Mohammed told me on the authority of his father that the Abyssinians assembled and said to the Negus, 'You have left our religion' and they revolted against him. So he sent to Ja'far and his companions and prepared ships for them, saying, 'Embark in these and be ready. If I am defeated, go where you please; if I am victorious, then stay where you are.' Then he took paper and wrote, 'He testifies that there is no God but Allah and that Mohammed is His slave and apostle; and he testifies that Jesus, Son of Mary, is His slave, His apostle, His spirit and His word, which He cast into Mary.' Then he put it in his gown near the right shoulder and went out to the Abyssinians, who were drawn up in array to meet him. He said, 'O people, have I not the best claim among you?' 'Certainly,' they said. And what do you think of my life among you?' 'Excellent.' 'Then what is your trouble?' 'You have forsaken our religion and assert that Jesus is a slave.' 'Then what do you say about Jesus?' 'We say that he is the Son of God.' The Negus put his hand upon his breast over his gown, (signifying), 'He testifies that Jesus, the Son of Mary, was no more than "this".' By this he meant what he had written, but they were content and went away. News of this reached the prophet, and when the Negus died he prayed over him and begged that his sins might be forgiven.

UMAR ACCEPTS ISLAM

When Amr and Abdullah came to the Quraysh, not having been able to bring back the prophet's companions and having received a sharp rebuff from the Negus, and when Umar became a Muslim, he being a strong, stubborn man whose proteges none dare attack, the prophet's companions were so fortified by him and Hamza that they got the upper hand of (the) Quraysh. Abdullah b. Masud used to say, 'We could not pray at the Kaaba until Umar became a Muslim, and then he fought the Quraysh until he could pray there and we prayed with him.' Umar became a Muslim after the prophet's companions had migrated to Abyssinia (Ethiopia).

Al-Bakkai said (This indicates the recension of Ibn Ishaq which Ibn Hisham used. Other Manuscripts read Ibn Hisham said):

Misar b. Kidam from Sad b. Ibrahim said that Abdullah b. Masud said: Umar's (conversion to) Islam was a victory; his migration to Medina was a help; and his government was a divine mercy. We could not pray at the Kaaba until he became a Muslim, and when he did so he fought the Quraysh until he could pray there and we joined him.'

Abdul-Rahman b. al-Harith b. Abdullah b. Ayyash b. Abu Rabia from Abdul-Aziz b. Abdullah b. Amir b. Rabia from his mother Umm Abdullah d. Abu Hathma who said: 'We were on the point of setting out for Abyssinia, and Amir had gone out for something we needed, when Umar came and stopped beside me, he being a polytheist at the time, and we were receiving harsh treatment and affliction from him. He said, "So you are off, O mother of Abdullah." "Yes," I said, "we are going to God's country. You have violently ill-treated us until God has given us a way out." He said, "God be with you," and I saw in him a compassion which I had never seen before. Then he went away, and I could see plainly that our departure pained him; and when Amir came back with the thing he needed I said to him, "O father of Abdullah, I wish you had seen Umar just now and the compassion and sorrow he showed on our account." When he asked me if I had hopes of his becoming a Muslim, I replied that I had, to which he answered, "The man you saw will not become a Muslim until al-Khattab's donkey does." This he said in despair of him because of his harshness and severity against Islam.'

The Islam of Umar, so I have heard, was on this wise. His sister was Fatima d. al-Khattab, and was married to Said b. Zayd b. Amr b. Nufayl, both of whom had become Muslims and concealed the fact from Umar. Now Nuaym b. Abdullah al-Nahham, a man of his tribe from B. Adiy b. Kab, had become a Muslim and he also concealed the fact out of fear of his people. Khabbab b. al-Aratt used often to come to Fatima to read the Koran to her. One day Umar came out, girt with his sword, making for the apostle, and a number of his companions, who he had been informed had gathered in a house at al-Safs, in all about forty, including women. With the apostle was his uncle Hamza, and Abu Bakr, and Ali, from among the Muslims who stayed with the apostle and had not gone out with those who went to Abyssinia (Ethiopia). Nuaym met him and asked him where he was going. I am making for Mohammed, the apostate, who has split up the Quraysh, made mockery of their traditions, insulted their faith and their gods, to kill him.' 'You deceive yourself, Umar,' he answered, 'do you suppose that B. Abdu Manaf will allow you to continue walking upon the earth when you have killed Mohammed? Had not you better go back to your own family and set tKeir affairs in order?' 'What is the matter with my family?' he said. 'Your brother-in-law, your nephew Said, and your sister Fatima, have both become Muslims and followed Mohammed in his religion, so you had better go and deal with them.' Thereupon Umar returned to his sister and brother-in-law at the time when Khabbab was with them with the manuscript of Ta Ha, which he was reading to them. When they heard Umar's voice Khabbab hid in a small room, or in a part of the house, and Fatima took the page and put it under her thigh. Now Umar had heard the reading of Khabbab as he came near the house, so when he came in he said, 'What is this balderdash I heard?' 'You have not heard anything,' they answered. 'By God, I have,' he said, 'And I have been told that you have followed Mohammed in his religion;' and he seized his brother-in-law Said, and his sister Fatima rose in defence of her husband, and he hit her and wounded her. When he did that they said to him, 'Yes, we are Muslims, and we believe in God and His apostle, and you can do what you like.' When Umar saw the blood on his sister he was sorry for what he had done and turned back and said to his sister, 'Give me this sheet which I heard you reading just now so that I may see just what it is which Mohammed has brought,' for Umar could write. When he said that, his sister replied that she was afraid to trust him with it. 'Do not be afraid,' he said, and he swore by his gods that he would return it when he had read it. When he said that, she had hopes that he would become a Muslim, and said to him, 'My brother, you are unclean in your polytheism and only the clean may touch it.' So Umar rose and washed himself and she gave him the page in which was Ta Ha, and when he had read the beginning he said, 'How fine and noble is this speech.' When he heard that, Khabbab emerged and said, 'O Umar, by God, I hope that God has singled you out by His prophet's call, for but last night I heard him saying, "O God, strengthen Islam by Abul-Hakam b. Hisham or by Umar b. al-Khattab." Come to God, come to God, O Umar.' At that Umar said, 'Lead me to Mohammed so that I may accept Islam.' Khabbab replied that he was in a house at al-Safa with a number of his companions. So Umar took his sword and girt it on, and made for the apostle and his companions, and knocked on the door. When they heard his voice one of the companions got up and looked through a chink in the door, and when he saw him girt with his sword, he went back to the apostle in fear, and said, 'It is Umar with his sword on.' Hamza said, 'Let him in; if he has come with peaceful intent, we will treat him well; if he has come with ill intent, we will kill him with his own sword.' The apostle gave the word and he was let in. The apostle rose and met him in the room, seized him round the girdle or by the middle of his cloak, and dragged him along violently, saying, 'What has brought you, son of Khattab, for by God, I do not think you will cease (your persecution) until God brings calamity upon you.' Umar replied, 'O Apostle of God, I have come to you to believe in God and His apostle and what he has brought from God.' The apostle gave thanks to God so loudly that the whole household knew that Umar had become a Muslim.

The companions dispersed, having become confident when both Umar and Hamza had accepted Islam because they knew that they would protect the apostle, and that they would get justice from their enemies through them. This is the story of the narrators among the people of Medina about Umar's Islam.

Abdullah b. Abu Najih, the Meccan, from his companions Ata and Mujahid, or other narrators, said that Umar's conversion, according to what he used to say himself, happened thus: I was far from Islam. I was a winebibber in the heathen period, used to love it and rejoice in it. We used to have a meeting-place in al-Hazwara at which (the) Quraysh used to gather near the houses of the family of Umar b. Abd b. Imran al-Makhzumi. I went out one night, making for my boon companions in that gathering, but when I got there, there was no one present, so I thought it would be a good thing if I went to so-and-so, the wineseller, who was selling wine in Mecca at the time, in the hope that I might get something to drink from him, but I could not find him either, so I thought it would be a good thing if I went round the Kaaba seven or seventy times. So I came to the mosque meaning to go round the Kaaba and there was the apostle standing praying. As he prayed he faced Syria, putting the Kaaba between himself and Syria. His stance was between the black stone and the southern corner. When I saw him I thought it would be a good thing if I could listen to Mohammed so as to hear what he said. If I came near to listen to him I should scare him, so I came from the direction of the hijr and got underneath its coverings and began to walk gently. Meanwhile the prophet was standing in prayer reciting the Koran until I stood in his qibla facing him, there being nothing between us but the covering of the Kaaba. When I heard the Koran my heart was softened and I wept, and Islam entered into me; but I ceased not to stand in my place until the apostle had finished his prayer. Then he went away. When he went away he used to go past the house of the son of Abu Husayn, which was on his way, so that he crossed the path where the pilgrims run. Then he went between the house of Abbas and Ibn Azhar b. Abdu Auf al-Zuhri; then by the house of Al-Akhnas b. Shariq until he entered his own house. His dwelling was in al-Dar al-Raqta, which was in the hands of Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan. I continued to follow him, until when he got between the house of Abbas and Ibn Azhar I overtook him, and when he heard my voice he recognised me and supposed that I had followed him only to ill-treat him, so he repelled me, saying, "What has brought you at this hour?" I replied that I had come to believe in God and His apostle and what he had brought from God. He gave thanks to God and said, "God has guided you." Then he rubbed my breast and prayed that I might be steadfast. Afterwards I left him. He went into his house.' But God knows what the truth was.

Nafi'freedman of Abdullah b. Umar on the authority of Ibn Umar said: When my father Umar became a Muslim he said, 'Which of the Quraysh is best at spreading reports?' and was told that it was Jamil b. Mamar al-Jumahl. So he went to him, and I followed after to see what he was doing, for although I was very young at the time I understood everything I saw. He went to Jamil and asked him if he knew that he had become a Muslim and entered into Mohammed's religion; and, by God, hardly had he spoken to him when he got up dragging his cloak on the ground as Umar followed him and I followed my father, until he stood by the door of the mosque and cried at the top of his voice while the Quraysh were in their meeting-places round the Kaaba, Umar has apostatised,' while

Umar behind him shouted, 'He is a liar; but I have become a Muslim and I testify that there is no God but Allah and Mohammed is His servant and apostle.' They got up to attack him and fighting went on between them until the sun stood over their heads, and he became weary and sat down while they stood over him, as he said, 'Do as you will, for I swear by God that if we were three hundred men we would have fought it out on equal terms.' At this point a shaykh of the Quraysh, in a Yamani robe and an embroidered shirt, came up and stopped and inquired what was the matter. When he was told that Umar had apostatised he said, 'Why should not a man choose a religion for himself, and what are you trying to do? Do you think that B. Adly will surrender their companion to you thus? Let the man alone.' By God, it was as though they were a garment stripped off him (i.e. A fear removed').

After my father had migrated to Medina I asked him who the man was who drove away the people on the day he became a Muslim while they were fighting him, and he said, 'That, my son, was al-As b. Walil al-Sahmi (200).'

Abdul-Rahman b. al-Harith from one of Umar's clan or one of his family said that Umar said, 'When I became a Muslim that night I thought of the man who was the most violent in enmity against the apostle so that I might come and tell him that I had become a Muslim, and Abu Jahl came to my mind.' Now Umar's mother was Hantama d. Hisham b. al-Mughira. So in the morning I knocked on his door, and he came out and said, 'The best of welcomes, nephew, what has brought you?' I answered that I had come to tell him that I believed in God and His apostle Mohammed and regarded as true what he had brought. He slammed the door in my face and said, 'God damn you, and damn what you have brought.'

THE DOCUMENT PROCLAIMING A BOYCOTT

When (the) Quraysh perceived that the apostle's companions had settled in a land in peace and safety, and that the Negus had protected those who sought refuge with him, and that Umar had become a Muslim and that both he and Hamza were on the side of the apostle and his companions, and that Islam had begun to spread among the tribes, they came together and decided among themselves to write a document in which they should put a boycott on B. Hashim and B. Muttalib that they should not marry their women nor give women to them to marry; and that they should neither buy from them nor sell to them, and when they agreed on that they wrote it in a deed. Then they solemnly agreed on the points and hung the deed up in the middle of the Kaaba to remind them of their obligations.

The writer of the deed was Mansur b. Ikrima b. Amir b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf b. Abdul-Dar b. Qusayy (201) and the apostle invoked God against him and some of his fingers withered.

When (the) Quraysh did that, the two clans of B. Hashim and B. al-Muttalib went to Abu Talib and entered with him into his alley and joined him.

Abu Lahab Abdul-Uzza went out from B. Hashim and helped (the) Quraysh. Husayn b. Abdullah told me that Abu Lahab met Hind d. Utba when he had left his people and joined (the) Quraysh against them, and he said, 'Have I not helped al-Lat and al-Uzza and have I not abandoned those who have abandoned them and assisted their opponents?' She said, 'Yes, and may God reward you well, O Abu Utba.' And I was told that among the things that he said were, Mohammed promises me things which I do not see. He alleges that they will happen after my death; what has he put in my hands after that?' Then he blew on his hands and said, 'May you perish. I can see nothing in you of the things which Mohammed says.'

So God revealed concerning him the words, Abu Lahab and his hands God blast (Koran 111.) (202)."

When (the) Quraysh had agreed on this and had done what has just been described, Abu Talib said:

Tell Luayy, especially LuAyy of the Banu Kab,
News of our condition.

Did you not know that we have found Mohammed,
A prophet like Moses described in the oldest books,
And that love is bestowed on him (alone) of mankind
And that none is better than he whom God has singled out in love,

And that the writing you have fixed
Will be a calamity like the cry of the hamstrung camel? (An allusion to the camel of Salih in Sura 26.142.)

Awake, awake before the grave is dug
And the blameless and the guilty are as one.
Follow not the slanderers, nor sever
The bonds of love and kinship between us.
Do not provoke a long-drawn-out war,
Often he who brings on war tastes its bitterness.
By the Lord of the temple we will not give up Ahmad,
To harsh misfortunes and times' troubles,
Before hands and necks, yours and ours,
Are cut by the gleaming blades of Qusas (Qusas is said to be a mountain of B. Asad containing iron mines.)

In a close-hemmed battlefield where you see broken spears

And black-headed vultures circling round like a thirsty crowd.

The galloping of the horses about the scene
And the shout of warriors are like a raging battle.
Did not our father Hashim gird up his loins
And teach his sons the sword and spear?
We do not tire of war until it tires of us;
We do not complain of misfortune when it comes.
We keep our heads and our valour
When the bravest lose heart in terror.

They remained thus for two or three years until they were exhausted, nothing reaching them except what came from their friends unknown to (the) Quraysh.

Abu Jahl, so they say, met Hakim b. Hizam b. Khuwaylid b. Asad with whom was a slave carrying flour intended for his aunt Khadija, the prophet's wife, who was with him in the alley. He hung on to him and said, Are you taking food to the B. Hashim? By God, before you and your food move from here I will denounce you in Mecca.' Abul-Bakhtari came to him and said, 'What is going on between you two?' When he said that Hakim was taking food to the B. Hashim, he said: It is food he has which belongs to his aunt and she has sent to him about it. Are you trying to prevent him taking her own food to her? Let the man go his way! Abu Jahl refused until they came to blows, and Abul-Bakhtari took a camel's jaw and knocked him down, wounded him, and trod on him violently, while Hamza was looking on near by. They did not wish the apostle and his companions to hear this news and rejoice over their discomfiture. Meanwhile the apostle was exhorting his people night and day, secretly and publicly, openly proclaiming God's command without fear of anyone.

THE ILL-TREATMENT THE APOSTLE RECEIVED FROM HIS PEOPLE

His uncle and the rest of B. Hashim gathered round him and protected him from the attacks of the Quraysh, who, when they saw that they could not get at him, mocked and laughed at him and disputed with him. The Koran began to come down concerning the wickedness of (the) Quraysh and those who showed enmity to him, some by name and some only referred to in general. Of those named are his uncle Abu Lahab and his wife Umm Jamil, 'the bearer of the wood'. God called her this because she, so I am told, carried thorns and cast them in the apostle's way where he would be passing. So God sent down concerning the pair of them:

Abu Lahab and his hands, God blast,
His wealth and gains useless at the last,
He shall roast in flames, held fast,
With his wife, the bearer of the wood, aghest,
On her neck a rope of palm-fibre cast. (Koran Sura
111. The rhyme of the original has been imitated. (203)

I was told that Umm Jamil, the bearer of the wood, when she heard what had come down about her and about her husband in the Koran, came to the apostle of God, when he was sitting in the mosque by the Kaaba with Abu Bakr, with a stone pestle in her hand, and when she stood by the pair of them God made her unable to see the apostle so that she saw only Abu Bakr and asked him where his companion was, 'for I have been told that he is satirising me (i.e. composed a Hija, which in early times had the effect of a spell which could bring the fate it described on its victims. See my Prophecy and Divination, pp. 248 ff., 258 ff., 281 ff. Umm Jamil's object in trying to smash Mohammed's mouth was to destroy his organs of speech so that he could no longer utter magical curses.), and by God, if I had found him I would have smashed his mouth with this stone. By God, I am a poet.' Then she said:

We reject the reprobate,
His words we repudiate,
His religion we loathe and hate (This is a rough attempt to render the rough rhyme of the original.)

Then she went off and Abu Bakr asked the apostle if he thought she had seen him. He replied that she had not because God had taken her sight away from him (204).

The Quraysh had called the apostle Mudhammad to revile him. He used to say, Are you not surprised at the injuries of the Quraysh which God turns away from me? They curse me and satirise Mudhammad [reprobate] whereas I am Mohammed [the laudable].'

[Another referred to in the Koran] is Umayya b. Khalaf b. Wahb b. Hudhafa b. Jumah. Whenever he saw the apostle he slandered and reviled him, so God sent down concerning him, 'Woe to every slandering backbiter, who has gathered wealth and increased it, and thinks that his wealth will make him immortal. No, he will be thrown to the devouring fire. What will make you realise what that is? It is God's fire kindled which mounts over the hearts. It is shut in on them in wide columns (Koran 104.)' (205).

Khabbab b. al-Aratt, the prophet's companion, was a smith in Mecca who used to make swords. He sold some to al-As b. Wail so that he owed him some money and he came to him to demand payment. He answered, 'Does not Mohammed, your companion whose religion you follow, allege that in Paradise there is all the gold and silver and clothes and servants that his people can desire?' 'Certainly,' said Khabbab. 'Then give me till the day of resurrection until I return to that house and pay your debt there; for by God, you and your companion will be no more influential with God than I, and have no greater share in it.' So God revealed concerning him, 'Have you considered him who disbelieves Our signs and says, I shall be given wealth and children. Hath he studied the unseen?' so far as the words, And we shall inherit from him what he speaks of and he will come to us alone (Koran 19.80.)'

Abu Jahl met the apostle, so I have heard, and said to him, 'By God, Mohammed, you will either stop cursing our gods or we will curse the God you serve.' So God revealed concerning that, 'Curse not those to whom they pray other than God lest they curse God wrongfully through lack of knowledge (Koran 6.108.)'

I have been told that the apostle refrained from cursing their gods, and began to call them to Allah.

Al-Nadr b. al-Harith b. Alqama b. Kalada b. Abdu Manaf whenever the apostle sat in an assembly and invited people to God, and recited the Koran, and warned the Quraysh of what had happened to former peoples, followed him when he got up and spoke to them about Rustum the Hero and Isfandiyar and the kings of Persia, saying, 'By God, Mohammed cannot tell a better story than I and his talk is only of old fables which he has copied' as I have.' (* Koran 25.6.: iktataba means to write down oneself, or to get something written down by another. The former seems to be demanded by the context.) So God revealed concerning him, And they say, Stories of the ancients which he has copied down, and they are read to him morning and night. Say, He who knows the secrets of heaven and earth has sent it down. Verily, He is merciful, forgiving (Koran 83.13.)' And there came down concerning him, 'When Our verses are read to him he says, fables of the ancients.'

And again, 'Woe to every sinful liar who hears God's verses read before him. Then he continues in pride as though he had not heard them, as though in his ears was deafness. Tell him about a painful punishment' (Koran 45.7.) (206).

The apostle sat one day, so I have heard, with al-Walid b. al-Mughira in the mosque, and al-Nadr b. al-Harith came and sat with them in the assembly where some of (the) Quraysh were. When the apostle spoke al-Nadr interrupted him, and the apostle spoke to him until he silenced him. Then he read to him and to the others: 'Verily ye and what ye serve other than God is the fuel of hell. You will come to it. If these had been gods they would not have come to it, but all will be in it everlastingly. There is wailing and there they will not hear' (Koran 21.98.) (207).

Then the apostle rose and Abdullah b. al-Zibara al-Sahmi came and sat down. Al-Walid said to him: 'By God al-Nadr could not stand up to the (grand)son of Abdul-Muttalib just now and Mohammed alleged that we and our gods are fuel for hell.' Abdullah said: 'If I had found him I would have refuted him. Ask Mohammed, "Is everything which is worshipped besides God in Gehenna with those who worship it?" We worship the angels; the Jews worship Uzayr; and the Christians worship Jesus Son of Mary.' Al-Walid and those with him in the assembly marvelled at Abdullah's words and thought that he had argued convincingly. When the apostle was told of this he said: 'Everyone who wishes to be worshipped to the exclusion of God will be with those who worship him. They worship only satans and those they have ordered to be worshipped.'

So God revealed concerning that 'Those who have received kindness from us in the past will be removed far from it and will not hear its sound and they abide eternally in their heart's desire (Koran 21.101)', i.e. Jesus Son of Mary and Uzayr and those rabbis and monks who have lived in obedience to God, whom the erring people worship as lords beside God. And He revealed concerning their assertion that they worship angels and that they are the daughters of God, And they say the Merciful has chosen a son, (exalted be He above this); nay, they are but honoured slaves, they do not speak before He speaks, and they carry out His commands', as far as the words, And he of them who says, I am God as well as He, that one we shall repay with Gehenna. Thus do they repay the sinful ones (21.26-30.)'

And He revealed concerning what he mentioned about Jesus, Son of Mary, that he was worshipped beside God, and the astonishment of al-Walid and those who were present, at his argument and disputation, And when Jesus, Son of Mary, was cited as an example thy people laughed thereat (Koran 43.57) i.e. they rejected your attitude to what they say*.

(* Guillaume: A difficult phrase. 'Sadda' with the preposition 'min' means 'to laugh immoderately or to make a loud noise'. With An' it means 'to turn away from'. But these two prepositions are often interchangeable. Ibn Ishaq's explanation of the passage is that the fact that Christians pray to Jesus is no justification for the polytheism of the Meccans, as the latter argued, for Christians perverted the message Jesus brought. When Jesus is adduced as an example [of one who called an evil people to God] the Meccans rejected Mohammed's attitude towards him in what they said; but this exegesis is not sound. The Sura is perfectly consistent in showing how prophets were sent to erring peoples and were laughed at. Cf. v. 47: The Meccans laugh when Jesus is mentioned because his worship would seem to justify their worshipping several gods. The citation which follows shows where in Mohammed's opinion they were wrong. Ibn Ishaq has adopted the reading yasidduna [so Nafi, Ibn Amir, and al-Kisai] instead of the commoner yafidduna.)

Then He mentions Jesus, Son of Mary, and says, 'He was nothing but a slave to whom We showed favour and made him an example to the children of Israel. If We had wished We could have made from you angels to act as vice-regents in the earth. Verily, there is knowledge of the [last] hour, so doubt not about it but follow Me. This is an upright path,' i.e. the signs which I gave him in raising the dead and healing the sick, therein is sufficient proof of the knowledge of the hour. He says: 'Doubt not about it, but follow Me. This is an upright path.'

Al-Akhnas b. Shariq b. Amr b. Wahb al-Thaqafi, ally of B. Zuhra, was one of the leaders of his people who was listened to with respect, and he used to give the apostle much trouble and contradict him, so God sent down about him: 'Do not obey every feeble oath-taker, slanderer, walking about with evil tales,' as far as the word 'zanim' (Koran 68.10-13).

He did not say zanim in the sense of 'Ignoble' to insult his ancestry, because God does not insult anyone's ancestry, but he confirmed thereby the epithet given to him so that he might be known. Zanim means an adopted member of the tribe. Al-Khatim al-Tamimi said in pagan days:

An outsider whom men invite as a supernumerary
As the legs are useless additions to the width of a pelt.

Al-Walid said: 'Does God send down revelations to Mohammed and ignore me, the greatest chief of (the) Quraysh, to say nothing of Abu Masud Amr b. Umayr al-Thaqafi, the chief of Thaqif, we being the great ones of Taif and Mecca?' So God sent down concerning him, so I am told, 'They said, if this Koran had been revealed to a great man of the two towns,' as far as the words, 'than what they amass' (Koran 43.30.).

Ubayy b. Khalaf b. Wahb b. Hudhafa and Uqba b. Abu Muayt were very close friends. Now Uqba had sat and listened to the apostle and when Ubayy knew of that he came to him and said, 'Do I hear that you have sat with Mohammed and listened to him? I swear I will never see you or speak to you again (and he swore a great oath) if you do the same again, or if you do not go and spit in his face.' Uqba, the enemy of God, actually did this, God curse him. So God sent down concerning the pair of them,

'On the day that the sinner bites his hands, saying, would that I had chosen a path with the apostle,' as far as the words 'A deserter of men' (Koran 25.29).

Ubayy took to the apostle an old bone, crumbling to pieces, and said, 'Mohammed, do you allege that God can revivify this after it has decayed?' Then he crumbled it in his hand and blew the pieces in the apostle's face. The apostle answered: 'Yes, I do say that. God will raise it and you, after you have become like this. Then God will send you to Hell.' So God revealed concerning him, 'He gave us a parable, and he forgot that he was created, saying, who will revivify bones which are rotten? Say, He who gave them life in the first instance will revivify them. He who knows about all creation, who has made for you fire from the green wood, and lo, you kindle flame from it (Koran 36.78).'

There met the apostle, as he was going round the Kaaba, so I have been told*, Al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib

b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza and al-Walid b. al-Mughira and Umayya b. Khalaf and al-As b. Wail al-Sahmi, men of reputation among their people. (* Tabari 1191.12: gives the authorities for this tradition as Ibn Ishaq from Said b. Mini, a freedman of Abul-Bakhtari. There are a few verbal discrepancies: the Meccans say, 'If what you have brought is better than what we have . . . and if what we have is better than what you have', etc.) They said: 'Mohammed, come let us worship what you worship, and you worship what we worship. You and we will combine in the matter. If what you worship is better than what we worship we will take a share of it, and if what we worship is better than what you worship, you can take a share of that.' So God revealed concerning them, 'Say, O disbelievers, I do not worship what you worship, and you do not worship what I worship, and I do not worship what you worship, and you do not worship what I worship; you have your religion and I have mine (Koran 109.),' i.e. If you will only worship God on condition that I worship what you worship, I have no need of you at all. You can have your religion, all of it, and I have mine.

(Tabari 1192: Now the apostle was anxious for the welfare of his people, wishing to attract them as far as he could. It has been mentioned that he longed for a way to attract them, and the method he adopted is what Ibn Hamid told me that Salama said M. b. Ishaq told him from Yazid b. Ziyad of Medina from M. b. Kab al-Qurazi: When the apostle saw that his people turned their backs on him and he was pained by their estrangement from what he brought them from God he longed that there should come to him from God a message that would reconcile his people to him. Because of his love for his people and his anxiety over them it would delight him if the obstacle that made his task so difficult could be removed; so that he meditated on the project and longed for it and it was dear to him. Then God sent down 'By the star when it sets your comrade errs not and is not deceived, he speaks not from his own desire,' and when he reached His words 'Have you thought of al-Lat and al-Uzza and Manat the third, the other' (Koran 53.1-20), Satan, when he was meditating upon it, and desiring to bring it (sc. reconciliation) to his people, put upon his tongue 'these are the exalted Gharaniq [The word is said to mean 'Numidian cranes' which fly at a great height.] whose intercession is approved [Another reading is turtaja 'to be hoped for'.].')

When (the) Quraysh heard that, they were delighted and greatly pleased at the way in which he spoke of their gods and they listened to him; while the believers were holding that what their prophet brought them from their Lord was true, not suspecting a mistake or a vain desire or a slip, and when he reached the prostration (Mentioned in the last verse of the Sura.) and the end of the Sura in which he prostrated himself the Muslims prostrated themselves when their prophet prostrated confirming what he brought and obeying his command, and the polytheists of (the) Quraysh and others who were in the mosque prostrated when they heard the mention of their gods, so that everyone in the mosque believer and unbeliever prostrated, except al-Walid b. al-Mughira who was an old man who could not do so, so he took a handful of dirt from the valley and bent over it. Then the people dispersed and (the) Quraysh went out, delighted at what had been said about their gods, saying, 'Mohammed has spoken of our gods in splendid fashion. He alleged in what he read that they are the exalted Gharanlq whose intercession is approved.'

The news reached the prophet's companions who were in Abyssinia, it being reported that (the) Quraysh had accepted Islam, so some men started to return while others remained behind. Then Gabriel came to the apostle and said, 'What have you done, Mohammed? You have read to these people something I did not bring you from God and you have said what

He did not say to you. The apostle was bitterly grieved and was greatly in fear of God. So God sent down (a revelation), for He was merciful to him, comforting him and making light of the affair and telling him that every prophet and apostle before him desired as he desired and wanted what he wanted and Satan interjected something into his desires as he had on his tongue. So God annulled what Satan had suggested and God established His verses i.e. you are just like the prophets and apostles. Then God sent down: 'We have not sent a prophet or apostle before you but when he longed Satan cast suggestions into his longing. But God will annul what Satan has suggested. Then God will establish his verses, God being knowing and wise (Koran 22.51). The following verse is not without relevance in this context: 'that He may make what Satan suggested a temptation to those whose hearts are diseased and hardened'. Thus God relieved his prophet's grief, and made him feel safe from his fears and annulled what Satan had suggested in the words used above about their gods by his revelation Are yours the males and His the females? That were indeed an unfair division' (i.e. most unjust): 'they are nothing but names which your fathers gave them' as far as the words 'to whom he pleases and accepts' (Koran 53.19-27), i.e. how can the intercession of their gods avail with Him?

When the annulment of what Satan had put upon the prophet's tongue came from God, (the) Quraysh said: 'Mohammed has repented of what he said about the position of your gods with Allah, altered it and brought something else.' Now those two words which Satan had put upon the apostle's tongue were in the mouth of every polytheist and they became more violently hostile to the Muslims and the apostle's followers. Meanwhile those of his companions who had left Abyssinia when they heard that the people of Mecca had accepted Islam when they prostrated themselves with the apostle, heard when they approached Mecca that the report was false and none came into the town without the promise of protection or secretly. Of those who did come into Mecca and stayed there until he migrated to Medina and were present at Badr with him was Uthman b. Affan . . . with his wife Ruqayya d. of the apostle and Abu Hudhayfa b. Utba with his wife Sahla d. of Suhayl, and a number of others, in all thirty-three men (A parallel tradition from M. b. Kab al-Qurazi and M. b. Qays is given by Tabari 1195-6.).

Abu Jahl b. Hisham, when God mentioned the tree of al-Zaqqim to strike terror into them, said: 'O Quraysh, do you know what the tree of al-Zaqqum with which Mohammed would scare you is? When they said that they did not he said: It is Yathrib dates buttered. By Allah, if we get hold of them we will gulp them down in one! So God sent down concerning him, 'Verily the tree of al-Zaqqum is the food of the sinner like molten brass seething in their bellies like boiling water (Koran 44.43 Suhayli, p. 228, has an interesting note to the effect that this word is of Yamani origin, and that there it means anything which causes vomiting.); i.e. it is not as he said (208). God revealed concerning it, And the tree which is cursed in the Koran; and We will frighten them, but it increases them in naught save great wickedness (Koran 17.62).'

Al-Walid was having a long conversation with the apostle who greatly desired to convert him to Islam when I. Umm Maktum, a blind man, passed by and began to ask the apostle to recite the Koran. The prophet found this hard to bear and it annoyed him, because he was diverting him from al-Walid and spoiling the chance of his conversion; and when the man became importunate he went off frowning and left him. So God revealed concerning him, 'He frowned and turned his back when the blind man came to him' as far as the words in books honoured, exalted, and purified (Koran 80.); i.e. I sent you only to be an evangelist and a reprover; I did not specify one person to the exclusion of another, so withhold not (the message) from him who seeks it, and do not waste time over one who does not want it (209).

THE RETURN OF THOSE WHO HAD FLED TO ABYSSINIA

The apostle's companions who had gone to Abyssinia heard that the Meccans had accepted Islam and they set out for the homeland. But when they got near Mecca they learned that the report was false, so that they entered the town under the protection of a citizen or by stealth. Some of those who returned to him stayed in Mecca until they migrated to Medina and were present at Badr and Uhud with the apostle; others were shut away from the prophet until Badr and other events were passed; and others died in Mecca. They were:

From B. Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf b. Qusayy: Uthman b. Affan b. Abul-As b. Umayya b. Abdu Shams and his wife, the apostle's daughter Ruqayya; Abu Hudhayfa b. Utba b. Rabia and his wife Sahla d. Suhayl b. Amr; and one of their allies Abdullah b. Jahsh b. Riab.

He migrated to Medina with the prophet, and his two brothers on his mother's side followed him and brought him back to Mecca and held him there until the three battles were over. Their names were Abu Jahl and al-Harith, sons of Hisham. Of their allies Ammar b. Yasir, though it is doubted whether he went to Abyssinia or not; and Muattib b. Auf b. Amir b. Khuzaa.

From B. Jumah b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab: Uthman b. Mazun b. Habib b. Wahb b. Hudhafa and his son al-Saib b. Uthman; and Qudama b. Mazun; and Abdullah b. Mazun.

From B. Sahn b. Amr b. Husays b. Kab: Khunays b. Hudhafa b. Qays b. Adly; and Hisham b. al-As b. Wail who was imprisoned in Mecca after the apostle migrated to Medina until he turned up after the three battles above mentioned.

From B. Amir b. Luayy: Abdullah b. Makhrama b. Abdul-Uzza b. Abu Qays; Abdullah b. Suhayl b. Amr. He was held back from the apostle of God when he emigrated to Medina until when the battle of Badr was joined he deserted the polytheists and joined the battle on the side of the apostle. Abu Sabra b. Abu Ruhm b. Abdul-Uzza with his wife Umm Kulthum d. Suhayl b. Amr; Sakran b. Amr b. Abdu Shams with his wife Sauda d. Zamaa b. Qays. He died in Mecca before the apostle emigrated and the apostle married his widow Sauda. Lastly Sad b. Khaula, one of their allies.

From B. I-Harith b. Fihir: Abu Ubayda b. al-Jarrah whose name was Amir b. Abdullah; Amr b. al-Harith b. Zuhayr b. Abu Shaddad; Suhayl b. Bayda who was the son of Wahb b. Rabia b. Hilal; and Amr b. Abu Sarh b. Rabia b. Hilal.

The total number of his companions who came to Mecca from Abyssinia was thirty-three men. The names given to us of those who entered under promise of protection are Uthman b. Mazun protected by al-Walid b. al-Mughira; Abu Salama under the protection of Abu Talib who was his uncle, Abu Salama's mother being Barra d. Abdul-Muttaib.

UTHMAN B. MAZUN RENOUNCES AL-WALID'S PROTECTION

Salih b. Ibrahim b. Abdul-Rahman b. Auf told me from one who had got it from Uthman saying: When Uthman b. Mazun saw the misery in which the apostle's companions were living while he lived night and day under al-Walid's protection he said, It is more than I can bear that I should be perfectly safe under the protection of a polytheist while my friends and co-religionists are afflicted and distressed for God's sake.' So he went to al-Walid and renounced his protection. 'Why, nephew,' he asked, 'Can it be that one of my people has injured you?' 'No,' he answered, 'but I want to be under God's protection: I don't want to ask for anyone else's.' Al-Walid asked him to come to the mosque and renounce his protection publicly as he had given it publicly. When they got there al-Walid said: 'Uthman here has come to renounce my protection.' 'True,' said the latter, 'I have found him loyal and honourable in his protection, but I don't want to ask anyone but God for protection; so I give him back his promise!' So saying he went away.

[On another occasion when] Labid b. Rabia b. Malik b. Jafar b. Kilab was in an assembly of the Quraysh when Uthman was present he recited a verse:

Everything but God is vain,
True! interjected Uthman; but when he went on:
And everything lovely must inevitably cease,

Uthman cried, 'You lie! The joy of Paradise will never cease.' Labid said: 'O men of (the) Quraysh your friends never used to be annoyed thus. Since when has this sort of thing happened among you?' One of the audience answered: 'This is one of those louts with Mohammed. They have abandoned our religion. Take no notice of what he says.' Uthman objected so energetically that the matter became serious. Whereupon that man rose to his feet and hit him in the eye so that it became black. Now al-Walid was hard by watching what happened to Uthman and he said: 'O nephew, your eye need not have suffered this had you remained in sure protection.' Uthman answered: 'Nay by God my good eye needs what happened to its fellow for God's sake, and I am under the protection of One who is stronger and more powerful than you, O Abu Abdu Shams.' Al-Walid only said, 'Come, nephew, my protection is always open to you,' but he declined it.

HOW ABU SALAMA FARED WITH HIS PROTECTOR

My father Ishaq b. Yasar on the authority of Salama b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Abu Salama told me that he told him that when Abu Salama had asked Abu Talib's protection some of the B. Makhzum went to him and said: 'You have protected your nephew Mohammed from us, but why are you protecting our tribesman?' He answered: 'He asked my protection and he is my sister's son. If I did not protect my sister's son I could not protect my brother's son.' Thereupon Abu Lahab rose and said: 'O Quraysh, you have continually attacked this shaykh for giving his protection among his own people. By God, you must either stop this or we will stand in with him until he gains his object.' They said that they would not do anything to annoy him, for he had aided and abetted them against the apostle, and they wanted to keep his support.

Hearing him speak thus Abu Talib hoped that he would support him in protecting the apostle, and composed the following lines urging Abu Lahab to help them both:

A man whose uncle is Abu Utayba
Is in a garden where he is free from violence.
I say to him (and how does such a man need my advice?)
O Abu Mu'tib stand firm upright.
Never in your life adopt a course
For which you will be blamed when men meet together.
Leave the path of weakness to others,
For you were not born to remain weak.
Fight! For war is fair;
You will never see a warrior humiliated till he surrenders.
How should you when they have done you no great injury

Nor abandoned you in the hour of victory or defeat?
God requite for us Abdu Shams and Naufal and Taym
And Makhzum for their desertion and wrong
In parting from us after affection and amity
So that they might get unlawful gains.
By God's House you lie! Never will we abandon Mohammed

Before you see a dust-raising day in the 'shib' (This is the reading of Abu Dharr which seems to me superior to that of Wellshausen and C. Qatim means A thick cloud of dust' and implies men on the march. No satisfactory meaning can be given to qaim. Presumably 'the shib of Abu Talib, a defile of the mountains where the projecting rocks of Abu Qubays pressed upon the eastern outskirts of the city. It was entered from the town by a narrow alley closed by a low gateway through which a camel could pass with difficulty. On all other sides it was detached by cliffs and buildings.'
Muir, The Life of Mohammed, 93 f.) (210).

ABU BAKR ACCEPTS IBN AL-DUGHUNNA'S
PROTECTION AND THEN ABANDONS IT

Mohammed b. Muslim b. Shihab al-Zuhri from Urwa from Aisha told me that when the situation in Mecca became serious and the apostle and his companions suffered ill treatment from the Quraysh, Abu Bakr asked the apostle's permission to emigrate, and he agreed. So Abu Bakr set forth and when he had gone a day or two's journey from Mecca he fell in with Ibn al-Dughunna, the brother of the B. Harith b.
Abdu Manat b. Kinana, who was at that time head of the Ahabsh. (They were the B. al-Harith; and al-Hun
b. Khuzayma b. Mudrika; and the B. al-Mustaliq of Khuzaa.) (211)

Replying to Ibn al-Dughunna's inquiries Abu Bakr told him that his people had driven him out and ill-treated him. 'But why,' he exclaimed, 'when you are an ornament of the tribe, a standby in misfortune, always kindly in supplying the wants of others? Come back with me under my protection.' So he went back with him and Ibn al-Dughunna publicly proclaimed that he had taken him under his protection and none must treat him other than well.

He continued: Abu Bakr had a mosque by the door of his house among the B. Jumah where he used to pray.
He was a tender-hearted man and when he read the Koran he was moved to tears. Youths, slaves, and women used to stand by him astonished at his demeanour. (* This statement implies that some at least of the Koran was written down before the hijra.
However, qaraA may not mean more than 'recite').
Some men of (the) Quraysh went to Ibn al-Dughunna saying, 'Have you given this fellow protection so that he can injure us? Lo, he prays and reads what Mohammed has produced and his heart becomes soft and he weeps. And he has a striking appearance so that we fear he may seduce our youths and women and weak ones. Go to him and tell him to go to his own house and do what he likes there.' So Ibn al-Dughunna went to him and said: I did not give you protection so that you might injure your people. They dislike the place you have chosen and suffer hurt therefrom, so go into your house and do what you like there.' Abu Bakr asked him if he wanted him to renounce his protection and when he said that he did he gave him back his guarantee. Ibn al-Dughunna got up and told the Quraysh that Abu Bakr was no longer under his protection and that they could do what they liked with him.

Abdul-Rahman b. al-Qasim told me from his father al-Qasim b. Mohammed that as Abu Bakr was going to the Kaaba one of the loutish fellows of (the) Quraysh met him and threw dust on his head. Al-
Walid b. al-Mughira, or it may have been al-As b.
Wail, passed him and he said, 'Do you see what this lout has done to me?' He replied, 'You have done it to yourself!' Meanwhile he was saying three times 'O Lord how longsuffering Thou art!'

THE ANNULLING OF THE BOYCOTT

The B. Hashim and the B. al-Muttalib were in the quarters which (the) Quraysh had agreed upon in the document they wrote, when a number of (the) Quraysh took steps to annul the boycott against them. None took more trouble in this than Hisham b. Amr ... for the reason that he was the son of a brother to Nadla b.
Hashim b. Abdu Manaf by his mother and was closely attached to the B. Hashim. He was highly esteemed by his people. I have heard that when these two clans were in their quarter he used to bring a camel laden with food by night and then when he had got it to the mouth of the alley he took off its halter, gave it a whack on the side, and sent it into the alley to them.
He would do the same thing another time, bringing clothes for them.

He went to Zuhayr b. Abu Umayya b. al-Mughira whose mother was Atika d. Abdul-Muttalib and said:
Are you content to eat food and wear clothes and marry women while you know of the condition of your maternal uncles? They cannot buy or sell, marry, nor give in marriage. By God I swear that if they were the uncles of Abul-Hakam b. Hisham and you asked him to do what he has asked you to do he would never agree to it.' He said, 'Confound you, Hisham, what can I do? I am only one man. By God if I had another man to back me I would soon annul it.' He said, I have found a man. Myself.' 'Find another,' said he. So Hisham went to al-Mufim b. Adiy and said, Are you content that two clans of the B. Abdu Manaf should perish while you look on consenting to follow (the) Quraysh? You will find that they will soon do the same with you.' He made the same reply as Zuhayr and demanded a fourth man, so Hisham went to Abul-Bakhtari b. Hisham who asked for a fifth man, and then to Zamaa b. al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib b. Asad and reminded him of their kinship and duties. He asked whether others were willing to co-operate in this task and he gave him the names of the others. They all arranged to meet at night on the nearest point of al-Hajun above Mecca, and there they bound themselves to take up the question of the document until they had secured its annulment. Zuhayr claimed the right to act and speak first. So on the morrow when the people met together Zuhayr clad in a long robe went round the Kaaba seven times; then he came forward and said: 'O people of Mecca, are we to eat and clothe ourselves while the B. Hashim perish, unable to buy or sell? By God I will not sit down until this evil boycotting document is torn up!' Abu Jahl, who was at the side of the mosque, exclaimed, 'You lie by Allah. It shall not be torn up.' Zamaa said, 'You are a greater liar; we were not satisfied with the document when it was written'. Abul-Bakhtari said, 'Zamaa is right. We are not satisfied with what is written and we do not hold with it.' Al-Mutim said, 'You are both right and anyone who says otherwise is a liar. We take Allah to witness that we dissociate ourselves from the whole idea and what is written in the document.' Hisham spoke in the same sense. Abu Jahl said: 'This is a matter which has been decided overnight. It has been discussed somewhere else.' Now Abu Talib was sitting at the side of the mosque. When al-Mutim went up to the document to tear it in pieces he found that worms had already eaten it except the words In Thy name O Allah'. (Tabari 1198: This was the customary formula with which (the) Quraysh began their writing.) The writer of the deed was Mansur b. Ikrima. It is alleged that his hand shrivelled (212).

When the deed was torn up and made of none effect Abu Talib composed the following verses in praise of those who had taken part in the annulment:

Has not our Lord's doing come to the ears of those Far distant across the sea (So the commentators, but an unnatural extension of the usual meaning of bahri is involved.) (for Allah is very kind to men),
Telling them that the deed was torn up
And all that was against God's wish had been destroyed?

Lies and sorcery were combined in it,
But sorcery never gets the upper hand.
Those not involved in it assembled together for it in a remote place (Commentators suggest as an alternative rendering 'those who took it seriously'.
Qarqar means 'flat soft ground').

While its bird of ill omen hovered within its head*.
(* This seems to be an adaptation of Sura 17.14: 'We have fastened every man's bird of ill omen to his neck.'
Dr. Arafat suggests that the fair here means 'ghost', the bird which emerges from the head of a murdered man, and is fluttering within it before it finally emerges.)

It was such a heinous offence that it would be fitting
That because of it hands and necks should be severed
And that the people of Mecca should go forth and flee,

Their hearts quaking for fear of evil
And the ploughman be left in doubt what to do—Whether to go down to the lowland or up to the hills—

And an army come up between Mecca's hills
Equipped with bows, arrows, and spears.
He of Mecca's citizens whose power rises (Let him know) that our glory in Mecca's vale is older.

We grew up there when men were few
And have ever waxed great in honour and reputation.
We feed our guests till they leave a dish untasted
When the hands of the maysir players would begin to tremble.

God reward the people in al-Hajun who swore allegiance (Reading tabayau with C. Wüstenfeld has tatabau).

To a chief who leads with decision and wisdom,
Sitting by the near side of al-Hajun as though princes,

Nay they are even more noble and glorious.
Every bold man helped therein
Clad in mail so long that it slowed his stride,
Running to portentous (or daring) deeds
Like a flame burning in the torchbearer's hands.
The noblest of Luayy b. Ghalib's line
When they are wronged their faces show their anger.
With long cord to his sword half his shank bare.
For his sake the clouds give rain and blessing.
Prince son of prince of princely hospitality
Gathering and urging food on his guests.
Building and preparing safety for the tribesmen
When we walk through the land.
Every blameless man kept this peace.
A great leader, there was he praised.
They accomplished their work in a night
While others slept; in the morning they took their ease.

They sent back Sahl b. Baida well pleased
And Abu Bakr and Mohammed rejoiced thereat.
When have others joined in our great exploits,
From of old have we shown each other affection?
Never have we approved injustice.
We got what we wanted without violence.
O men of Qusayy, will you not consider,

Do you want what will befall you tomorrow?

For you and I are as the words of the saying:

'You have the explanation if you could only speak, O Aswad (Commentators explain that Aswad is the name of a mountain on which a dead man was found and there was no indication of his murderer. The relatives addressed the mountain in the words just quoted which became a proverb.)

Mourning al-Mutim b. Adiy and mentioning his stand in getting the deed annulled, Hassan b. Thabit composed the following:

Weep O eye the people's leader, be generous with thy tears.

If they run dry, then pour out blood.

Mourn the leader of both the pilgrim sites

To whom men owe gratitude so long as they can speak.

If glory could immortalise anyone

His glory would have kept Mutim alive today.

You protected God's apostle from them and they became

Thy slaves so long as men cry labbayka and don the pilgrim garb.

If Maadd and Qahtan and all the rest

Of Jurhum were asked about him

They would say he faithfully performs his duty to protect

And if he makes a covenant he fulfils it.

The bright sun above them does not shine

On a greater and nobler than he;

More resolute in refusing yet most lenient in nature,

Sleeping soundly on the darkest night though responsible for his guest (213).

Hassan also said in praise of Hisham b. Amr for his part in the matter of the deed:

As the protection of the Banu Umayya a bond

As trustworthy a guarantee as that of Hisham?

Such as do not betray their proteges

Of the line of al-Harith b. Hubayyib b. Sukham.

When the Banu Hishl grant protection

They keep their word and their protege lives securely.

AL-TUFAYL B. AMR AL-DAUSI ACCEPTS ISLAM

In spite of his people's behaviour the apostle was continually giving them good counsel and preaching salvation from their evil state. When God protected him from them they began to warn all new-comers against him.

Al-Tufayl used to say that he came to Mecca when the apostle was there and some of the Quraysh immediately came up to him. (He was a poet of standing and an intelligent man.) They told him that this fellow had done them much harm; had divided their community and broken up its unity; In fact he talks like a sorcerer separating a man from his father, his brother, or his wife. We are afraid that he will have the same effect on you and your people, so do not speak to him or listen to a word from him.'

They were so insistent that I decided not to listen to a word or to speak to him and I went so far as to stuff cotton in my ears when I went to the mosque fearing that I might overhear a word or two against my will. When I got to the mosque there was the apostle of God standing at prayer by the Kaaba, so I stood near him. God had decreed that I should hear something of his speech and I heard a beautiful saying. So I said to myself, 'God bless my soul! Here am I, an intelligent man, a poet, knowing perfectly well the difference between good and evil, so what is to prevent me from listening to what this man is saying? If it is good I shall accept it; if it is bad I shall reject it.'

I stayed until the apostle went to his house and I followed him and entered his house with him. I told him what his people had said and that they had so scared me that I had stuffed cotton in my ears lest I should hear what he was saying. But God had not allowed me to remain deaf and I heard a beautiful saying. 'So explain the matter to me,' I said. The apostle explained Islam to me and recited the Koran to me. By God I never heard anything finer nor anything more just. So I became a Muslim and bore true witness. I said, 'O prophet of God, I am a man of authority among my people and when I go back and call them to Islam, pray to God to give me a sign which will help me when I preach to them.' He said, 'O God give him a sign.'

So I went back to my people and when I came to the pass which would bring me down to the settlement a light like a lamp played between my eyes and I said, 'O God, not in my face! for I fear that they will think that a dire punishment has befallen my face because I have left their religion.' So the light moved and lighted on the top of my whip. The people began to look at that light attached to my whip like a candle while I was coming down from the pass to them.

When I got down my father came to me (he was a very old man) and I said, 'Be off with you, father, for I have nothing to do with you or you with me!' 'But why, my son?' said he. I said, 'I have become a Muslim and follow the religion of Mohammed.' He said, 'All right, my son, then my religion is your religion.' So I said, 'Then go and wash yourself and clean your clothes; then come and I will teach you what I have been taught.'

He did so; I explained Islam to him and he became a Muslim.

Then my wife came to me and I said: 'Be off with you, for I have nothing to do with you or you with me'. 'Why?' she said, 'my father and mother be your ransom!' I said, 'Islam has divided us and I follow the religion of Mohammed.' She said, 'Then my religion is your religion.' I said, 'Then go to the hind 1 (207) (temenos?) of Dhul-Shara' and cleanse yourself from it.' (* On Dhul-Shara [Dusares] see E.I. It is a title, not a name, of a Rod long associated with the Nabataeans. In all probability the title is geographical, denoting ownership. More cannot be safely said at present.) Now Dhul-Shara was an image belonging to Daus and the hind was the temenos which they had made sacred to him; in it there was a trickle of water from a rivulet from the mountain. She asked me urgently, 'Have you any fear from Dhul-Shara on my account?' (Or 'on the children's account'.) 'No,' I said, 'I will go surely for that.' So she went and washed and when she returned I explained Islam to her and she became a Muslim.

Then I preached Islam to Daus but they held back, and I went to the apostle in Mecca and said, 'O prophet of God, frivolous preoccupation has been too much for me with Daus, so invoke a curse on them.' ( I have followed the commentators in taking a milder meaning than the ordinary sense which is 'fornication', if Dhul-Shara was an Arab Dionysos, the normal meaning would not be out of place.) But he said 'O God, guide Daus! Go back to your people and preach to them gently'. I continued in the Daus country calling them to Islam until the apostle migrated to Medina, and Badr, Uhud, and the Trench were passed. Then I went to the apostle with my converts while he was in Khaybar. I arrived at Medina with seventy or eighty households of Daus, and then we joined the apostle in Khaybar and he gave us an equal share of the booty with the Muslims.

I remained with the apostle until God opened Mecca to him and then I asked him to send me to burn Dhul-Kaffayn, (According to Ibnul-Kalbi, al-Afnam, Cairo, 1924, p. 37. H belonged to a sub-section of Daus, called the B. Munhib.) the image of Amr b. Humama. As he lit the fire he said:

Not of your servants am I, Dhu'l-Kaffayn,

Our birth is far more ancient than thine.

To stuff this fire in your heart I pine.

He returned to Medina to the apostle and remained with him until God took him. When the Arabs revolted he sided with the Muslims and fought with them until they disposed of Tulayha and the whole of Najd. Then he went with the Muslims to the Yamama with his son Amr, and while on the way he saw a vision of which he told his companions asking for an interpretation. I saw my head had been shaved and a bird was coming out of my mouth and a woman met me and took me into her womb, and I saw my son seeking me anxiously; then I saw him withheld from me. They said that they hoped it would prove a good omen, but he went on to say that he himself would provide the interpretation of it. The shaving of his head meant that he would lay it down; the bird which flew from his mouth was his spirit; and the woman who received him into her womb was the earth which would be opened for him and he would be hidden therein; his son's vain search for him meant that he would try to attain what he had attained. He was slain as a martyr in al-Yamama while his son was severely wounded and recovered later. He was actually killed in the year of the Yarmiik in the time of Umar, dying as a martyr (216).

THE AFFAIR OF THE IRASHITE WHO SOLD HIS CAMELS TO ABC JAHL

Despite Abu Jahl's hostility, hatred, and violence towards the apostle God humiliated him before him whenever he saw him.

I was told by Abdul-Malik b. Abdullah b. Abu Sufyan al-Thaqafi who had a good memory: A man from Irash (209) brought some camels of his to Mecca and Abu Jahl bought them from him. He kept back the money, so the man came to the assembly of (the) Quraysh when the apostle was sitting at the side of the mosque and said: 'Who among you will help me to get what is due to me from Abul-Hakam b. Hisham? I am a stranger, a wayfarer, and he will not pay his debt.' They said: 'Do you see that man sitting there?' pointing to the apostle. (In fact they were making game of him for they knew quite well of the enmity between him and Abu Jahl.) 'Go to him. He will help you to your right.'

So the man went and stood over the apostle and said, 'O Servant of God, Abul-Hakam b. Hisham has withheld the money he owes me. I am a stranger, a wayfarer, and I asked these men to tell me of someone who would help me to my right and they pointed to you, so get my money from him, God bless you.' He said, 'Go to him,' and the apostle got up and went with him. When they saw this, the men said to one of their number, 'Follow him.' The apostle went to his house and knocked on the door, and when he asked who was there he said, 'Mohammed! Come out to me.' He came out to him pale with agitation, and the apostle said, 'Pay this man his due.' 'One moment until I give him his money,' he said, and went indoors and came out again with the amount he owed and paid it to the man. The apostle went away saying, 'Go about your business.'

The Irashite went back to the gathering and said, 'May God reward him, for he has got me my due.'

Then the man they had sent after them came back and reported what he had seen. It was extraordinary,' he said; 'he had hardly knocked on the door when out he came breathless with agitation,' and he related what had been said. Hardly had he done so when Abu Jahl himself came up and they said: 'Whatever has happened, man? We've never seen anything like what you've done.' 'Confound you,' he said; 'By God as soon as he knocked on my door and I heard his voice I was filled with terror. And when I went out to him there was a camel stallion towering above his head.'

I have never seen such a head and shoulders and such teeth on a stallion before. By God, if I had refused to pay up he would have eaten me."

RUKANA AL-MUTJ AL IBI WRESTLES WITH THE APOSTLE

My father Ishaq b. Yasar told me saying: Rukana b. Abdu Yazid b. Hashim b. Abdul-Muttalib b. Abdu Manaf was the strongest man among (the) Quraysh, and one day he met the apostle in one of the passes of Mecca alone: 'Rukana,' said he, 'why won't you fear God and accept my preaching?'

If I knew that what you say is true I would follow you,' he said. The apostle then asked him if he would recognize that he spoke the truth if he threw him, and when he said Yes they began to wrestle, and when the apostle got a firm grip of him he threw him to the ground, he being unable to offer any effective resistance. 'Do it again, Mohammed,' he said, and he did it again. 'This is extraordinary,' he said, 'can you really throw me?' 4

I can show you something more wonderful than that if you wish. I will call this tree that you see and it will come to me.' 'Call it,' he said. He called it and it advanced until it stood before the apostle. Then he said, 'Retire to your place,' and it did so.

Then Rukana went to his people the B. Abdu Manaf and told them that their tribesman could compete with any sorcerer in the world, for he had never seen such sorcery in his life, and he went on to tell them of what he had seen and what Mohammed had done.

A DEPUTATION OF CHRISTIANS ACCEPT ISLAM

While the apostle was in Mecca some twenty Christians came to him from Abyssinia when they heard news of him. They found him in the mosque and sat and talked with him, asking him questions, while some Qurayshites were in their meeting round the Kaaba. When they had asked all the questions they wished the apostle invited them to come to God and read the Koran to them. When they heard the Koran their eyes flowed with tears, and they accepted God's call (Or, 'his call'), believed in him, and declared his truth. They recognised in him the things which had been said of him in their scriptures. When they got up to go away Abu Jahl with a number of (the) Quraysh intercepted them, saying, 'God, what a wretched band you are! Your people at home sent you to bring them information about the fellow, and as soon as you sat with him you renounced your religion and believed what he said. We do not know a more asinine band than you,' or words to that effect. They answered: 'Peace be upon you. We will not engage in foolish controversy with you. We have our religion and you have yours. We have not been remiss in seeking what is best.'

It is said that these Christians came from Najran, but God knows whether that was so. It is also said, and again God knows best, that it was in reference to them that the verses 'Those to whom we brought the book aforetime, they believe in it. And when it is read to them they say We believe in it. Verily it is the truth from our Lord. Verily aforetime we were Muslims,' as far as the words, 'We have our works and you have your works. Peace be upon you; we desire not the ignorant (Koran 28. 53-55).'

I asked Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri about those to whom these verses had reference and he told me that he had always heard from the learned that they were sent down concerning the Negus and his companions and also the verses from the sura of The Table from the words 'That is because there are of them presbyters and monks and because they are not proud' up to the words 'So inscribe us with those who bear witness' (Koran 5.85).

When the apostle used to sit in the mosque with his more insignificant companions such as Khabbab, Ammar, Abu Fukayha, Yasar, freedman of Safwan b. Umayya b. Muharrith, Suhayb, and their like, (the) Quraysh used to jeer at them and say to one another, 'These are his companions, as you see. Is it such creatures that God has chosen from among us to give guidance and truth? If what Mohammed has brought were a good thing these fellows would not have been the first to get it, and God would not have put them before us.' God revealed concerning them: 'Drive not away those who call upon their Lord night and morning seeking His face. You are in no way responsible for them, and they are in no way responsible for you, so that you should drive them away and become an evildoer. Thus We tempt some by others that they may say, Are these they whom God has favoured among us? Does not God know best about the grateful? And when those who believe in Our signs come to thee say Peace be upon you. Your Lord hath prescribed for Himself mercy that he who doeth evil in ignorance and repenteth afterwards and doeth right (to him) He is forgiving, merciful (Koran 6.52).'

According to my information the apostle used often to sit at al-Marwa at the booth of a young Christian called Jabr (Theodor Nöldeke, Der Islam, v (1914). 163, was of the opinion that this man was an Abyssinian slave, the name Gabru (Gabre) meaning 'slave of in Ethiopian.), a slave of the B. al-Hadrami, and they used to say The one who teaches Mohammed most of what he brings is Jabr the Christian, slave of the B. al-Hadrami.' Then God revealed in reference to their words 'We well know that they say, "Only a mortal teaches him".' The tongue of him at whom they hint is foreign, and this is a clear Arabic tongue (Koran 16.105) (218).

THE COMING DOWN OF THE SURA AL-KAUTHAR (Sura 108, Mecca)

I have been told that when the apostle was mentioned Al-As b. Wail al-Sahmi used to say, 'Let him alone for he is only a childless man with no offspring. If he were to die, his memory would perish and you would have rest from him.' God sent down in reference to that: 'We have given you al-Kauthar (Koran 108.),' something which is better for you than the world and all that it holds. Kauthar means 'great'. Labid b. Rabia al-Kilabi said:

We were distressed at the death of the owner of Malhub (Malhub is said to be either the name of water belonging to the B. Asad b. Khuyma, or a village of the B. Abdullah b. al-Duwal b. Hanifa in al-Yamama; or a horse. Cf. Diwan ed. Yusuf al-Chilidi, Wien, 1880, p. 78.). And at al-Rida (this is the name of a watering place of the B. al-Araj b. Kab.) is the house of another great man (kauthar) (219).

Tafar b. Amr (220) told me on the authority of Abdullah b. Muslim the brother of Mohammed b. Muslim b. Shihab al-Zuhri from Anas b. Malik that the latter said: 'When the apostle was asked what Kauthar was which God had given to him I heard him say It is a river as broad as from Sanaa to Ayla. Its water pots are in number as the stars of heaven. Birds go down to it with necks like camels. Umar b. al-Khattab said, "O apostle of God the birds must be happy!" He answered "He who eats them will be happier still!"'

In this connexion (or perhaps some other) I heard that he said: 'He that drinketh thereof shall never thirst (Quote from the Gospel of John 4.14).'

THE COMING DOWN OF 'WHY HAS NOT AN ANGEL BEEN SENT DOWN TO HIM?'

The apostle called his people to Islam and preached to them, and Zamaa b. al-Aswad, and al-Nadr b. al-Harith, and al-Aswad b. Abdu Yaghuth, and Ubayy b. Khalaf, and al-As b. Wail said: 'O Mohammed, if an angel had been sent with thee to speak to men about thee and to be seen with thee! Then God sent down concerning these words of theirs: 'They say Why hath not an angel been sent down to him? If We sent an angel down the matter would be settled; they would be given no more time. Had We appointed him an angel We would have appointed him as a man and We should have obscured for them what they obscure (Koran 6.8).'

THE COMING DOWN OF APOSTLES HAVE BEEN MOCKED BEFORE THEE'

I have heard that the apostle passed by al-Walid b. al-Mughira and Umayya b. Khalaf and Abu Jahl b. Hisham and they reviled and mocked him, and this caused him distress. So God sent down to him concerning this: Apostles have been mocked before thee, but that which they mocked at hemmed them in (Koran 6.10).'

THE NIGHT JOURNEY AND THE ASCENT TO HEAVEN

Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai from Mohammed b. Ishaq told me the following: Then the apostle was carried by night from the mosque at Mecca to the Masjid al-Aqsa, which is the temple of Aelia, when Islam had spread in Mecca among the Quraysh and all the tribes.

The following account reached me from Abdullah b. Masud and Abu Said al-Khudri, and Aisha the prophet's wife, and Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan, and al-Hasan b. Abul-Hasan al-Basri, and Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri and Qatada and other traditionists, and Umm Hani d. of Abu Talib. It is pieced together in the story that follows, each one contributing something of what he was told about what happened when he was taken on the night journey. The matter of the place (Or 'time' = masra). of the journey and what is said about it is a searching test and a matter of God's power and authority wherein is a lesson for the intelligent; and guidance and mercy and strengthening to those who believe. It was certainly an act of God by which He took him by night in what way He pleased* to show him His signs which He willed him to see so that he witnessed His mighty sovereignty and power by which He does what He wills to do. (* Guillaume: I think that hy Kayfa shaa the author means to leave open the question whether it was an actual physical journey or a nocturnal vision. See below.)

According to what I have heard Abdullah b. Masud used to say: Buraq, the animal whose every stride carried it as far as its eye could reach on which the prophets before him used to ride was brought to the apostle and he was mounted on it. His companion (Gabriel) went with him to see the wonders between heaven and earth, until he came to Jerusalem's temple. There he found Abraham the friend of God, Moses, and Jesus assembled with a company of the prophets, and he prayed with them. Then he was brought three vessels containing milk, wine, and water respectively. The apostle said: I heard a voice saying when these were offered to me: If he takes the water he will be drowned and his people also; if he takes the wine he will go astray and his people also; and if he takes the milk he will be rightly guided and his people also. So I took the vessel containing milk and drank it. Gabriel said to me, You have been rightly guided and so will your people be, Mohammed.'

I was told that al-Hasan said that the apostle said: 'While I was sleeping in the Hijr Gabriel came and stirred me with his foot. I sat up but saw nothing and lay down again. He came a second time and stirred me with his foot. I sat up but saw nothing and lay down again. He came to me the third time and stirred me with his foot. I sat up and he took hold of my arm and I stood beside him and he brought me out to the door of the mosque and there was a white animal, half mule, half donkey, with wings on its sides with which it propelled its feet, putting down each forefoot at the limit of its sight and he mounted me on it. Then he went out with me keeping close to me.

I was told that Qatada said that he was told that the apostle said: 'When I came up to mount him he shied. Gabriel placed his hand on its mane and said, Are you not ashamed, O Buraq, to behave in this way? By God, none more honourable before God than Mohammed has ever ridden you before. The animal was so ashamed that he broke out into a sweat and stood still so that I could mount him.'

In his story al-Hasan said: 'The apostle and Gabriel went their way until they arrived at the temple at Jerusalem. There he found Abraham, Moses, and Jesus among a company of the prophets. The apostle acted as their imam in prayer. Then he was brought two vessels, one containing wine and the other milk. The apostle took the milk and drank it, leaving the wine. Gabriel said: "You have been rightly guided to the way of nature (Fitra is an elusive word. The meaning here may be 'the true primeval religion.) and so will your people be, Mohammed. Wine is forbidden you." Then the apostle returned to Mecca and in the morning he told Quniysli what had happened. Most of them said, "By God, this is a plain absurdity! A caravan takes a month to go to Syria and a month to return and can Mohammed do the return journey in one night?" Many Muslims gave up their faith; some went to Abu Bakr and said, "What do you think of your friend now, Abu Bakr? He alleges that he went to Jerusalem last night and prayed there and came back to Mecca." He replied that they were lying about the apostle; but they said that he was in the mosque at that very moment telling the people about it. Abu Bakr said, "If he says so then it is true.

And what is so surprising in that? He tells me that communications from God from heaven to earth come to him in an hour of a day or night and I believe him, and that is more extraordinary than that at which you boggle!"

He then went to the apostle and asked him if these reports were true, and when he said they were, he asked him to describe Jerusalem to him.' Al-Hasan said that he was lifted up so that he could see the apostle speaking as he told Abu Bakr what Jerusalem was like. Whenever he described a part of it he said, "That's true. I testify that you are the apostle of God' until he had completed the description, and then the apostle said, And you, Abu Bakr, are the Siddiq (This indicates that the meaning is not 'Veracious' but 'Testifier to the Truth')." This was the occasion on which he got this honorific.

Al-Hasan continued: God sent down concerning those who left Islam for this reason: 'We made the vision which we showed thee only for a test to men and the accursed tree in the Koran. We put them in fear, but it only adds to their heinous error (Koran 13.62).' Such is al-Hasan's story with additions from Qatada.

One of Abu Bakr's family told me that Aisha the prophet's wife used to say: 'The apostles body remained where it was but God removed his spirit by night.'

Yaqub b. Utba b. al-Mughira b. al-Akhnas told me that Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan when he was asked about the apostle's night journey said, It was a true vision from God.' What these two latter said does not contradict what al-Hasan said, seeing that God Himself said, 'We made the vision which we showed thee only for a test to men;' nor does it contradict what God said in the story of Abraham when he said to his son, 'O my son, verily I saw in a dream that I must sacrifice thee (Koran 37.10),' and he acted accordingly. Thus, as I see it, revelation from God comes to the prophets waking or sleeping.

I have heard that the apostle used to say, 'My eyes sleep while my heart is awake.' Only God knows how revelation came and he saw what he saw. But whether he was asleep or awake, it was all true and actually happened.

Al-Zuhri alleged* (* The verb implies grave doubt as to the speaker's veracity.) as from Said b. al-Musayyab that the apostle described to his companions Abraham, Moses, and Jesus, as he saw them that night, saying: I have never seen a man more like myself than Abraham. Moses was a ruddy faced man, tall, thinly fleshed, curly haired with a hooked nose as though he were of the Shanua. Jesus, Son of Mary, was a reddish man of medium height with lank hair with many freckles on his face as though he had just come from a bath. One would suppose that his head was dripping with water, though there was no water on it. The man most like him among you is Urwa b. Masud al-Thaqafi (221).'

The following report has reached me from Umm Hani d. of Abu Jalib, whose name was Hind, concerning the apostle's night journey.

She said: 'The apostle went on no night journey except while he was in my house. He slept that night in my house. He prayed the final night prayer, then he slept and we slept. A little before dawn the apostle woke us, and when we had prayed the dawn prayer he said, "O Umm Hani", I prayed with you the last evening prayer in this valley as you saw. Then I went to Jerusalem and prayed there. Then I have just prayed the morning prayer with you as you see." He got up to go out and I took hold of his robe and laid bare his belly as though it were a folded Egyptian garment. I said, "O prophet of God, do not talk to the people about it for they will give you the lie and insult you." He said, "By God, I certainly will tell them." I said to a negress, a slave of mine, Follow the apostle and listen to what he says to the people, and what they say to him. He did tell them and they were amazed and asked what proof he had. He replied that he had passed the caravan of so-and-so in such-and-such a valley and the animal he bestrode scared them and a camel bolted, "and I showed them where it was as I was on the way to Syria. I carried on until in Dajanan (A mountain in the neighbourhood of Tihama. According to al-Wiqidi it is 25 miles / 40 km from Mecca).

I passed by a caravan of the Banu so-and-so. I found the people asleep. They had a jar of water covered with something. I took the covering off and drank the water replacing the cover. The proof of that is that their caravan is this moment coming down from al-Baida by the pass of al-Tanim* led by a dusky camel loaded with two sacks one black and the other multihued (* Baidi is a hill near Mecca on the Medina side. Tanim is on high ground very near Mecca).

The people hurried to the pass and the first camel they met was as he had described. They asked the men about the vessel and they told them that they had left it full of water and covered it and that when they woke it was covered but empty. They asked the others too who were in Mecca and they said that it was quite right: they had been scared and a camel had bolted, and they had heard a man calling them to it so that they were able to recover it.'

THE ASCENT TO HEAVEN

One whom I have no reason to doubt told me on the authority of Abu Said al-Khudri: I heard the apostle say, After the completion of my business in Jerusalem a ladder was brought to me finer than any I have ever seen. It was that to which the dying man looks when death approaches. My companion mounted it with me until we came to one of the gates of heaven called the Gate of the Watchers. An angel called Ismail was in charge of it, and under his command were twelve thousand angels each of them having twelve thousand angels under his command.' As he told this story the apostle used to say, And none knows the armies of God but He (Koran 74.34).' When Gabriel brought me in, Ismail asked who I was, and when he was told that I was Mohammed he asked if I had been given a mission (Or perhaps simply 'sent for'.), and on being assured of this he wished me well.

A traditionist who had got it from one who had heard it from the apostle told me that the latter said: All the angels who met me when I entered the lowest heaven smiled in welcome and wished me well except one who said the same things but did not smile or show that joyful expression which the others had. And when I asked Gabriel the reason he told me that if he had ever smiled on anyone before or would smile on anyone hereafter he would have smiled on me; but he does not smile because he is Malik, the Keeper of Hell. I said to Gabriel, he holding the position with regard to God which he has described to you "obeyed them, trustworthy" (Koran 81 :21),

"Will you not order him to show me hell?" And he said, "Certainly! O Malik, show Mohammed Hell." Thereupon he removed its covering and the flames blazed high into the air until I thought that they would consume everything. So I asked Gabriel to order him to send them back to their place which he did. I can only compare the effect of their withdrawal to the falling of a shadow, until when the flames retreated whence they had come, Malik placed their cover on them.'

In his tradition Abu Said al-Khudri said that the apostle said: 'When I entered the lowest heaven I saw a man sitting there with the spirits of men passing before him. To one he would speak well and rejoice in him saying: "A good spirit from a good body" and of another he would say "Faugh!" and frown, saying: "An evil spirit from an evil body." In answer to my question Gabriel told me that this was our father Adam reviewing the spirits of his offspring; the spirit of a believer excited his pleasure, and the spirit of an infidel excited his disgust so that he said the words just quoted.

'Then I saw men with lips like camels; in their hands were pieces of fire like stones which they used to thrust into their mouths and they would come out of their posteriors. I was told that these were those who sinfully devoured the wealth of orphans.

'Then I saw men in the way of the family of Pharaoh* (* The allusion is to Koran 40.49 'Cast the family of Pharaoh into the worst of all punishments.), with such bellies as I have never seen; there were passing over them as it were camels maddened by thirst when they were cast into hell, treading them down, they being unable to move out of the way. These were the usurers. 'Then I saw men with good fat meat before them side by side with lean stinking meat, eating of the latter and leaving the former. These are those who forsake the women which God has permitted and go after those he has forbidden.

'Then I saw women hanging by their breasts. These were those who had fathered bastards on their husbands.'

Jafar b. Amr told me from al-Qasim b. Mohammed that the apostle said: 'Great is God's anger against a woman who brings a bastard into her family. He deprives the true sons of their portion and learns the secrets of the harim.'

To continue the tradition of Said al-Khudri: 'Then I was taken up to the second heaven and there were the two maternal cousins Jesus, Son of Mary, and John, son of Zakariah. Then to the third heaven and there was a man whose face was as the moon at the full. This was my brother Joseph, son of Jacob. Then to the fourth heaven and there was a man called Idris. "And we have exalted him to a lofty place (Koran 19.58)." Then to the fifth heaven and there was a man with white hair and a long beard, never have I seen a more handsome man than he. This was the beloved among his people Aaron son of Imran. Then to the sixth heaven, and there was a dark man with a hooked nose like the Shanua. This was my brother Moses, son of Imran. Then to the seventh heaven and there was a man sitting on a throne at the gate of the immortal mansion (al-bayt al-mamur. In view of what follows this would seem to mean Paradise itself [al-janna]). Every day seventy thousand angels went in not to come back until the resurrection day. Never have I seen a man more like myself. This was my father Abraham. Then he took me into Paradise and there I saw a damsel with dark red lips and I asked her to whom she belonged, for she pleased me much when I saw her, and she told me "Zayd b. Haritha". The apostle gave Zayd the good news about her.'

From a tradition of Abdullah b. Masud from the prophet there has reached me the following: When Gabriel took him up to each of the heavens and asked permission to enter he had to say whom he had brought and whether he had received a mission (Or 'been sent for.) and they would say 'God grant him life, brother and friend! until they reached the seventh heaven and his Lord. There the duty of fifty prayers a day was laid upon him.

The apostle said: 'On my return I passed by Moses and what a fine friend of yours he was! He asked me how many prayers had been laid upon me and when I told him fifty he said, "Prayer is a weighty matter and your people are weak, so go back to your Lord and ask him to reduce the number for you and your community". I did so and He took off ten. Again I passed by Moses and he said the same again; and so it went on until only five prayers for the whole day and night were left. Moses again gave me the same advice. I replied that I had been back to my Lord and asked him to reduce the number until I was ashamed, and I would not do it again. He of you who performs them in faith and trust will have the reward of fifty prayers.'

HOW GOD DEALT WITH THE MOCKERS

The apostle remained firm counting on God's assistance, admonishing his people in spite of their branding him as a liar and insulting and mocking him. The principal offenders —so Yazid b. Ruman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr told me— were five men who were respected and honoured among their tribesmen: of the B. Asad . . . was al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib b. Asad Abu Zamaa. (I have heard that the apostle had cursed him for his insults and mockery, saying, 'O God, blind him and bereave him of his son!')

Of the B. Zuhra . . . was al-Aswad b. Abdu Yaghuth. Of the B. Makhzum . . . was al-Walid b. al-Mughira . . . Of the B. Sahm b. Amr . . . was al-As b. Wail b. Hisham (222). Of the B. Khuzaa was al-Harith b. al-Tulaila b. Amr b. al-Harith b. Abd b. Amr b. Luayy b. Malakan.

When they persisted in evil and constantly mocked the apostle, God revealed: 'Proclaim what you have been ordered and turn away from the polytheists. We will surely protect you against the mockers who put another god beside God. In the end they will know (Koran 15.94).'

The same Yazid told me from Urwa (or it may have been from some other traditionist) that Gabriel came to the apostle when the mockers were going round the temple. He stood up and the apostle stood at his side; and as al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib passed, Gabriel threw a green leaf in his face and he became blind. Then al-Aswad b. Abdu Yaghuth passed and he pointed at his belly which swelled so that he died of dropsy. Next al-Walid passed by. He pointed at an old scar on the bottom of his ankle (the result of a wound he received some years earlier as he was trailing his gown when he passed by a man of Khuzaa who was feathering an arrow, and the arrowhead caught in his wrapper and scratched his foot—a mere nothing).

But the wound opened again and he died of it. Al-As passed. He pointed to his instep, and he went off on his ass making for al-Taif. He tied the animal to a thorny tree and a thorn entered his foot and he died of it.

Lastly al-Harith passed. He pointed at his head. It immediately filled with pus and killed him.

THE STORY OF ABU UZAYHIR AL-DAUSI

When al-Walid's death was near he summoned his three sons Hisham, al-Walid, and Khalid and said: 'My sons, I charge you with three duties; be not remiss in any of them. My blood lies on the Khuzaa: don't let it remain uncompensated. I know that they are innocent of it, but I fear that you may be ill spoken of because of it when I am dead. Thaqif owe me money in interest; see that you get it. Lastly my dowry money is with Abu Uzayhir al-Dausi. Don't let him keep it.' Now Abu Uzayhir had married him to a daughter of his and then withheld her from him and did not let him have access to her up to the day of his death.

When al-Walid died, the B. Makhzum leaped upon Khuzaa demanding blood-money for al-Walid, saying, 'It was your man's arrow that killed him.' He was one of the B. Kab, an ally of the B. Abdul-Mu'aliib b.

Hashim. Khuzaa refused their demand and a competition in verse followed and the situation became tense. The man whose arrow had killed al-Walid was one of the B. Kab b. Amr of Khuzaa, and Abdullah b. Abu Umayya b. al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Amr b. Makhzum composed the following lines (Yaq. i. 310):

I shall wager that you will soon run away
And leave al-Zahrān with its yelping foxes.
And that you will leave the water in the vale of Atriqa
And that you will ask which Arak trees are the best.
We are folk who do not leave our blood unavenged
And those we fight do not get to their feet again.

Al-Zahrān and al-Arak were camping-grounds of the B. Kab of Khuzaa.

Al-Jaun b. Abul-Jaun, brother of the B. Kab b. Amr al-Khuzai, answered him:

By God we will not pay unjust bloodwit for al-Walid
Until you see a day when the stars wax faint;
When your stout ones will be overthrown one after another
Each in death helplessly opening his mouth.
When you eat your bread and your gruel,
Then all of you will weep and wail for al-Walid.

There followed much argument and recrimination until it was apparent that it was prestige that was at stake, so Khuzaa paid some of the bloodmoney and they relinquished their claim to the rest. When peace had been made al-Jaun said:

Many a man and woman when we made peace
Spoke in surprise of what we paid for al-Walid.
'Did you not swear that you would not pay unjust compensation for al-Walid Until you had seen a day of great misfortune?'
But we have exchanged (Lit. 'mingled') war for peace
Now every traveller may go safely where he will.

But al-Jaun did not stop there but went on to boast of the killing of al-Walid, saying that they had brought about his end, all of which was false. As a result al-Walid, his son, and his tribe met what they had been warned against. Al-Jaun said:

Did not al-Mughira claim that in Mecca
Kab was a great force?
Do not boast, Mughira, because you see us
True Arabs and by-blows walk its streets.
We and our fathers were born there
As surely as Thabir stands in its place.
Al-Mughira said that to learn our state
Or to stir up war between us.
For Walid's blood will not be paid for:
You know that we do not pay for blood we shed.
The auspicious warrior hit him with an arrow
Poisoned, while he was full and out of breath.
He fell full length in Mecca's vale.
'Twas (it was) as though a camel fell.
'Twill (it will) save me delaying payment for Abu Hisham with Miserable little curly haired camels (223).

Then Hisham b. al-Walid attacked Abu Uzayhir while he was in the market of Dhul-Majaz. Now his daughter Atika was the wife of Abu Sufyan b. Harb. Abu Uzayhir was a chief among his people and Hisham killed him for the dowry money belonging to al-Walid which he had retained, in accordance with his father's dying injunction. This happened after the apostle's migration to Medina. Badr was over and many of the leaders of (the) heathen Quraysh had been slain. Yazid b. Abu Sufyan went out and collected the B. Abdu Manaf while Abu Sufyan was in Dhul-Majaz, and people said Abu Sufyan's honour in the matter of his father-in-law had been violated and he will take vengeance for him. When Abu Sufyan heard of what his son Yazid had done he came down to Mecca as fast as he could.

He was a mild but astute man who loved his people exceedingly, and he was afraid that there might be serious trouble among (the) Quraysh because of Abu Uzayhir. So he went straight to his son, who was armed among his people the B. Abdu Manaf and the 'scented ones', took his spear out of his hand and hit him hard on the head with it, saying, 'God damn you! Do you wish to cause civil war among (the) Quraysh for the sake of a man from Daus? We will pay them the bloodmoney if they will accept it.' Thus he put an end to the matter.

Hassan b. Thabit composed the following lines to excite feeling for the murder of Abu Uzayhir and to bring shame on Abu Sufyan for his cowardice and betrayal of trust:

The people on both sides of Dhul-Majaz rose one morning,
But Ibn Harb's protegee in Mughammas (al-Mughammas was on the road to Taif.) did not!

The farting donkey did not protect him he was bound to defend (Hassan was notorious for his coarseness in lampoons.)

Hind did not avert her father's shame.
Hisham b. al-Walid covered you with his garments,
Wear them out and mend new ones like them later.
He got what he wanted from him and became famous.
But you were utterly useless.
If the shaykhs at Badr had been present
The people's sandals would have been red with blood newly shell.

When he heard of this satire Abu Sufyan said 'Hassan wants us to fight one another for the sake of a man from Daus. By God, what a poor ideal!'

Khalid b. al-Walid when the people of Taif became Muslims spoke to the apostle about his father's interest which Thaqif owed him, and a traditionist told 'me that those verses which prohibit the carrying over of usury from the Jahiliyya arose out of Khalid's demanding interest: 'O ye who believe, fear God and give up what usury remains to you if you are (really) believers', to the end of the passage (Koran 2.278).

So far as we know there was no vengeance for Abu Uzayhir until Islam made a clear cut between men; however, Dirar b. al-Khattab b. Mirdas al-Fihri went out with a number of (the) Quraysh to the Daus country, and came to the dwelling of a woman called Umm Ghaylan, a freedwoman of Daus. She used to comb the women's hair and prepare brides for their husbands. Daus wanted to kill them in revenge for Abu Uzayhir, but Umm Ghaylan and the women stood in their way and defended them. It was in reference to that that Dirar said:

God reward Umm Ghaylan and her women ill
For their coming without their finery with dishevelled hair.
They saved us at death's very door
When the avengers of blood came forth.
She called on Daus and the sandbanks flowed with glory,
The streams on either side carried it on.
God requite Amr well. He was not weak,
He did his best for me.
I drew my sword and made play with its edge
For whom should I fight but myself (224)?

THE DEATH OF ABU TALIB AND KHADIJA

Those of his neighbours who ill treated the apostle in his house were Abu Lahab, al-Hakam b. Abul-As . . . , Uqba b. Abu Muayt, Adiy b. Hamra al-Thaqafi, and Ibnul-Asda al-Hudhali. Not one of them became a Muslim except al-Hakam. I have been told that one of them used to throw a sheep's uterus at him while he was praying; and one of them used to throw it into his cooking pot when it had been placed ready for him. Thus the apostle was forced to retire to a wall when he prayed. Umar b. Abdullah b. Urwa b. Zubayr told me on the authority of his father that when they threw this objectionable thing at him the apostle took it out on a stick, and standing at the door of his house, he would say, 'O Banu Abdu Manaf, what sort of protection is this?' Then he would throw it into the street.

Khadija and Abu Talib died in the same year, and with Khadija's death troubles followed fast on each other's heels, for she had been a faithful support to him in Islam, and he used to tell her of his troubles. With the death of Abu Talib he lost a strength and stay in his personal life and a defence and protection against his tribe. Abu Talib died some three years before he migrated to Medina, and it was then that (the) Quraysh began to treat him in an offensive way which they would not have dared to follow in his uncle's lifetime. A young lout actually threw dust on his head.

Hisham on the authority of his father Urwa told me that when this happened the apostle went into his house with the dust still on his head and one of his daughters got up to wash it away, weeping as she did so. 'Do not weep, my little girl,' he said, 'for God will protect your father.' Meanwhile he was saying, '(the) Quraysh never treated me thus while Abu Talib was alive.'

When Abu Talib fell ill and (the) Quraysh learned of his grave condition they reminded one another that now that Hamza and Umar had accepted Islam and Mohammed's reputation was known among all the Quraysh clans, they had better go to Abu Jalib and come to some compromise lest they be robbed of their authority altogether.

Al-Abbas b. Abdullah b. Mabad b. Abbas from one of his family from Ibn Abbas told me that Utba and Shayba, sons of Rabia, and Abu Jahl and Umayya b. Khalaf and Abu Sufyan with sundry other notables went to Abu Talib and said: 'You know your rank with us and now that you are at the point of death we are deeply concerned on your account. You know the trouble that exists between us and your nephew, so call him and let us make an agreement that he will leave us alone and we will leave him alone; let him have his religion and we will have ours.' When he came Abu Talib said, 'Nephew, these notables have come to you that they may give you something and to take something from you.' 'Yes,' he answered, 'you may give me one word by which you can rule the Arabs and subject the Persians to you.' 'Yea,' said Abu Jahl, 'And ten words.' He said: 'You must say There is no God but Allah and you must repudiate what you worship beside him.' They dapped their hands and said, 'Do you want to make all the gods into one God, Mohammed? That would be an extraordinary thing.' Then they said one to another, 'This fellow is not going to give you anything you want, so go and continue with the religion of your fathers until God judge between us.' So saying they departed.

Abu Talib said, 'Nephew, I do not think that you asked them anything extraordinary.' On hearing this the apostle had hopes that he would accept Islam, and he said at once, 'You say it, uncle, and then I shall be able to intercede for you on Resurrection Day.' Seeing the apostle's eagerness he replied, 'Were it not that I fear that you and your father's sons would be abused after my death and that Quraysh would think that I had only said it in fear of death, I would say it. I should only say it to give you pleasure.'

As his death was near, al-Abbas looked at him as he was moving his lips and put his ear close to him and said, 'Nephew, by God, my brother has spoken the word you gave him to say.' The apostle replied, 'I did not hear it.'

God revealed concerning the people who came to him with their proposals: 'Sad. By the renowned Koran, Nay, those who disbelieve are in pride and schism' as far as the words 'Does he make the gods one God. I his is an extraordinary thing. Their chiefs went off saying: Go and remain true to your gods. This is a thing designed. We have not heard of this in he last religion,' (Koran 38.1-6.; meaning Christians because they say) 'Verily God is the third of three (Koran 5.77.): 'This is nothing but an invention.' Then Abu Talib died.

THE APOSTLE GOES TO THAQIF TO SEEK HELP

In consequence of the growing hostility of (the) Quraysh after Abu Jalib's death the apostle went to Taif to seek help from Thaqif and their defences against his tribe. Also he hoped that they would receive the message which God had given him. He went alone.

Yazid b Ziyad told me from Mohammed b. Kab al-Qurazi: When the apostle arrived at al-Taif he made for a number of Thaqif who were at that time leaders and chiefs, namely three brothers: Abdu Yalayl Masud, and Habib, sons of Amr b. Umayr b. Auf b. Uqda b. Ghiyara b. Auf b. Thaqif. One of them had a Quraysh wife of the B. Jumali. The apostle sat with them and invited them to accept Islam and asked them to help him against his opponents at home. One of them swore that he would tear up the covering of the Kaaba if God had sent him. The other said "Could not God have found someone better than you to send?" The third said "By God, don't let me ever speak to you. If you are an apostle from God as you say you are, you are far too important for me to reply to, and if you are lying against God it is not right that I should speak to you! So the apostle got up and went! despairing of getting any good out of Thaqif. I have been told that he said to them, "Seeing that you have acted as you have, keep the matter secret," for he was loath that his people should hear about it, so that they would be still further emboldened against him (225).

But they did not do so and stirred up their louts and slaves to insult him and cry after him until a crowd came together, and compelled him to take refuge in an orchard belonging to Utba b. Rabia and his brother Shayba who were in it at the time. The louts who had followed him went back, and he made for the shade of a vine and sat there while the two men watched him, observing what he had to endure from the local louts. I was told that the apostle had met the woman from the B. Jumali and said to her, "What has befallen us from your husband's people?"

"When the apostle reached safety he said, so I am told, "O God, to Thee I complain of my weakness, little resource, and lowliness before men. O Most Merciful, Thou art the Lord of the weak, and Thou art my Lord. To whom wilt Thou confide me? To one afar who will misuse me? Or to an enemy to whom Thou hast given power over me? If Thou art not angry with me I care not. Thy favour is more wide for me. I take refuge in the light of Thy countenance by which the darkness is illumined, and the things of this world and the next are rightly ordered, lest Thy anger descend upon me or Thy wrath light upon me. It is for Thee to be satisfied until Thou art well pleased. There is no power and no might save in Thee."

"When Utba and Shayba saw what happened they were moved with compassion and called a young Christian slave of theirs called Addas and told him to take a bunch of grapes on a platter and give them to him to eat. Addas did so, and when the apostle put his hand in the platter he said "In the name of God" before eating. Addas looked closely into his face and said, "By God, this is not the way the people of this country speak." The apostle then asked "Then from what country do you come, O Addas? and what is your religion?" He replied that he was a Christian and came from Nineveh (northern Mesopotamia). "From the town of the righteous man Jonah son of Mattal," said the apostle. "But how did you know about him?"

asked Addas. "He is my brother; he was a prophet and I am a prophet," answered the apostle. Addas bent over him and kissed his head, his hands, and his feet.

"The two brothers were looking on and one said to the other, "He's already corrupted your slave!" And when Addas came back they said to him: "You rascal, why were you kissing that man's head, hands, and feet?" He answered that he was the finest man in the country who had told him things that only a prophet could know. They replied, "You rascal, do not let him seduce you from your religion, for it is better than his."

"Then the apostle returned from Taif when he despaired of getting anything out of Thaqif. When he reached Nakhla (There are two Nakhlas, northern and southern. They are wadis about a day's journey from Mecca.) he rose to pray in the middle of the night, and a number of jinn whom God has mentioned passed by. They were —so I am told— seven jinn from Nasibin. They listened to him and when he had finished his prayer they turned back to their people to warn them having believed and responded to what they had heard. God has mentioned them in the words "And when We inclined to thee certain of the jinn who were listening to the Koran" as far as "and He will give you protection from a painful punishment (Koran 46.28-32)". And again, "Say: It has been revealed unto me that a number of the jinn listened (Koran 72.1)."

THE APOSTLE OFFERS HIMSELF TO THE TRIBES

When the apostle returned to Mecca his people opposed him more bitterly than ever, apart from the few lower-class people who believed in him.

(Tabari 1203.3: One of them said that when the apostle left al-Taif making for Mecca a Meccan passed and he asked him if he would take a message for him; and when he said that he would he told him to go to al-Akhnas b. Shariq and say, 'Mohammed says: Will you give me protection so that I may convey the message of my Lord?' When the man delivered his message al-Akhnas replied that an ally could not give protection against a member of the home tribe. When he told the apostle of this he asked him if he would go back and ask Suhayl b. Amr for his protection in the same words. Suhayl sent word that the B. Amir b. Luayy do not give protection against B. Kab. He then asked the man if he would go back and make the same application to al-Mutim b. Adly. The latter said, 'Yes, let him enter,' and the man came back and told the apostle. In the morning al-Mutim having girt on his weapons, he and his sons and his nephews went into the mosque. When Abu Jahl saw him he asked, 'Are you giving protection or following him?' 'Giving protection, of course,' he said. 'We give protection to him whom you protect,' he said. So the prophet came into Mecca and dwelt there. One day he went into the sacred mosque when the polytheists were at the Kaaba, and when Abu Jahl saw him he said, 'This is your prophet, O B. Abdu Manaf.' Utba b. Rabia replied: 'And why should you take it amiss if we have a prophet or a king?' The prophet was told of this, or he may have heard it, and he came to them and said, 'O Utba, you were not angry on God's behalf or his apostle's behalf, but on your own account. As for you, O Abu Jahl, a great blow of fate will come upon you so that you will laugh little and weep much; and as for you, O Leaders of (the) Quraysh, a great blow of fate will come upon you so that you will experience what you most abhor and that performe!': Cf Ibn Hisham on p. 251 of Wüstenfeld)

The apostle offered himself to the tribes of Arabs at the fairs whenever opportunity came, summoning them to God and telling them that he was a prophet who had been sent. He used to ask them to believe in him and protect him until God should make clear to them the message with which he had charged his prophet.

One of our friends whom I hold above suspicion told me from Zayd b. Aslam from Rabia b. Ibad al-Dili or from one whom Abu al-Zinad had told (226) and Husayn b. Abdullah b. Ubaydullah b. Abbas told me: I heard my father telling Rabia b. Abbad that when he was a youngster with his father in Mina when the apostle used to stop by the Arab encampments and tell them that he was the apostle of God who ordered them to worship Him and not associate anything with Him, and to renounce the rival gods which they worshipped, and believe in His apostle and protect him until God made plain His purpose in sending him, there followed him an artful spruce fellow with two locks of hair, wearing an Aden cloak.

When the apostle finished his appeal he used to say, "This fellow wishes only to get you to strip off al-Lat and al-Uzza from your necks and your allies the jinn of B. Malik b. Uqaysh for the misleading innovation he has brought. Do not obey him and take no notice of him." I asked my father who the man was who followed him and contradicted what he said, and he answered that it was his uncle Abdul-Uzza b. Abdul-Muttalib known as Abu Lahab (227).'

Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri told me that he went to the tents of Kinda where there was a shaykh called Mulayh. He invited them to come to God and offered himself to them, but they declined.

Mohammed b. Abdul-Rahman b. Abdullah b. Husayn told me that he went to the tents of Kalb to a clan called B. Abdullah with the same message, adding, 'O Banu Abdullah, God has given your father a noble name.' But they would not give heed.

One of our companions from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik told me that the apostle went to the B. Hanifa where he met with the worst reception of all.

Al-Zuhri told me that he went to the B. Amir b. Sasaa and one of them called Bayhara b. Firas (228) said: 'By God, if I could take this man from (the) Quraysh I could eat up the Arabs with him.' Then he said, 'If we actually give allegiance (Some Manuscripts and Tabari 1202 have 'If we follow you') to you and God gives you victory over your opponents, shall we have authority after you?' He replied, 'Authority is a matter which God places where He pleases.' He answered: 'I suppose you want us to protect you from the Arabs with our breasts and then if God gives you victory (Or 'If you win') someone else will reap the benefit! Thank you, No!'

Afterwards the B. Amir went back to an old shaykh of theirs who was unable to attend the fairs. Their custom was to give him all the news on their return. This year when he asked for the news they told him that a man from (the) Quraysh—one of the B. Abdul-Muttalib to be precise—pretended that he was a prophet and invited them to protect him, to stand in with him, and to take him back to their country. The old man put his hands upon his head and said, 'O Banu Amir, could it have been avoided? Can the past ever be regained? No! Ismaili has ever claimed prophethood falsely. It was the truth. Where was your common sense?'

Whenever men came together at the fairs or the apostle heard of anyone of importance coming to Mecca he went to them with his message. Asim b. Umar b. Qatada al-Ansari—more precisely al-Zafari—on the authority of some of his shaykhs told me that they said that Suwayd b. al-Samit, brother of the B. Amr b. Auf, came to Mecca on pilgrimage. Suwayd's tribesmen used to call him al-Kamil because of his toughness, his poetry, his honour, and his lineage. He it was who said:

There is many a man you call friend you would be shocked

If you knew the lies he tells against you in secret.

While he is with you his words are like honey;

Behind your back a sword aimed at the base of the neck.

What you see of him pleases you, but underneath

He is a deceitful backbiter cutting through to the marrow.

His eyes will show you what he is concealing,

Rancour and hatred are in his evil look.

Strengthen me with good deeds: long have you weakened me".

The best friends strengthen without weakening.

(* Lit. 'feather me . . . cut me'. The figure is that of an arrow which is feathered to increase its flight, and whittled into shape for the same reason. Feathering can do no harm, but whittling may cause the arrow to break: necessary it is, but it must not be overdone.)

He once had a dispute with a man of the B. Sulaym—one of the B. Zib b. Malik—over a hundred camels, and they appointed an Arab woman diviner arbitrator and she gave judgement in his favour, and he and the Sulami went away alone. When they reached the parting of the ways Suwayd asked for his property. The man promised to send it, but Suwayd wanted to know who would guarantee that the animals would be handed over. As he could offer none but himself, Suwayd refused to leave him until he got his due. So they came to blows and Suwayd knocked him down, bound him closely and took him away to the country of the B. Amr; and there he had to stay until his tribesmen paid what was owing. It was in reference to that, Suwayd composed these lines:

Do not think, Ibn Zib son of Malik, that I

Am like the man you deceitfully slew in secret.

When I had been thrown I manfully became your match—

Thus the resolute man can change his position—

I locked him under my left arm

And his cheek remained in the dirt.

When he heard about him the apostle sought him out and invited him to Islam. He said, 'Perhaps you've got something like that which I have.' And what is that?' asked the apostle. 'The roll of Luqman,' meaning the wisdom of Luqman, he answered. 'Hand it to me,' said the apostle, and he handed it over and he said, 'This discourse is fine, but that which I have is better still, a Koran which God has revealed to me which is a guidance and a light.' And the apostle recited the Koran to him and invited him to Islam; he did not withdraw from it but said, 'This is a fine saying.' Then he went off and rejoined his people in Medina and almost at once the Khazraj killed him. Some of his family used to say, 'In our opinion he was a Muslim when he was killed'; he was (in fact) killed before the battle of BuAth (The battle between Aus and Khazraj).'

IYAS ACCEPTS ISLAM

Al-Husayn b. Abdul-Rahman b. Amr b. Sad b. Muadh on the authority of Mahmud b. Labid told me that when Abul-Haysar Anas b. Rafi came to Mecca with members of the B. Abdul-Ashhal including Iyas b. Muadh seeking an alliance with (the) Quraysh against their sister tribe the Khazraj, the apostle heard about them. He came and sat with them and asked them if they would like to get something more profitable than their present errand. When they asked him what that could be he told them that he was God's apostle sent to humanity to call on them to serve God and not associate any other with Him; that He had revealed a book to him; then he told them about Islam and read to them some of the Koran. Iyas, who was a young man, said, 'By God, people, this is something better than you came for!' Thereupon Abul-Haysar took a handful of dirt from the valley and threw it in his face, saying, 'Shut up! We did not come here for this.' So Iyas became silent. The apostle left them and they went to Medina and the battle of Buath between Aus and Khazraj took place. Within a little while Iyas died. Mahmud said: 'Those of his people who were present at his death told me that they heard him continually praising and glorifying God until he died. They had no doubt that he died a Muslim, he having become acquainted with Islam at that gathering when he heard the apostle speak.

THE BEGINNING OF ISLAM AMONG THE HELPERS

When God wished to display His religion openly and to glorify His prophet and to fulfil His promise to him, the time came when he met a number of the Helpers at one of the fairs; and while he was offering himself to the Arab tribes as was his wont he met at al-Aqaba a number of the Khazraj whom God intended to benefit.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me on the authority of some of the shaykhs of his tribe that they said that when the apostle met them he learned by inquiry that they were of the Khazraj and allies of the Jews. He invited them to sit with him and expounded to them Islam and recited the Koran to them. Now God had prepared the way for Islam in that they lived side by side with the Jews who were people of the scriptures and knowledge, while they themselves were polytheists and idolaters. They had often raided them in their district and whenever bad feeling arose the Jews used to say to them, 'A prophet will be sent soon. His day is at hand. We shall follow him and kill you by his aid as Ad and Iram perished.' So when they heard the apostle's message they said one to another: 'This is the very prophet of whom the Jews warned us. Do not let them get to him before us!' Thereupon they accepted his teaching and became Muslims, saying, 'We have left our people, for no tribe is so divided by hatred and rancour as they. Perhaps God will unite them through you. So let us go to them and invite them to this religion of yours; and if God unites them in it, then no man will be mightier than you.' Thus saying they returned to Medina as believers.

There were six of these men from the Khazraj so I have been told. From B. al-Najjar, i.e. Taym Allah of the clan of B. Malik . . . : Asad b. Zurara b. Udas b. Ubayd b. Thalaba b. Ghanm b. Malik b. al-Najjar known as Abu Umama; and Auf b. al-Harith b. Rifaa b. Sawad b. Malik . . . known as Ibn Afra (229).

From B. Zurayq b. Amir b. Zurayq b. Abdu Haritha b. Ghadb b. Jusham . . . : Rafi b. Malik b. al-Ajlan b. Amr b. Amir b. Zurayq (230).

From B. Salima b. Sad b. Ali b. Asad b. Sarida b. Tazid b. Jusham . . . of the clan of B. Sawad b. Ghanm b. Kab b. Salima: Qutba b. Amir b. Hadida b. Amr b. Ghanm b. Sawad (231).

From B. Haram b. Kab b. Ghanm b. Kab b. Salama: Uqba b. Amir b. Nabi b. Zayd b. Haram.

From B. Ubayd b. Adiy b. Ghanm b. Kab b. Salama: Jabir b. Abdullah b. Riab b. al-Numan b. Sinan b. Ubayd.

When they came to Medina they told their people about the apostle and invited them to accept Islam until it became so well known among them that there was no home belonging to the Helpers but Islam and the apostle had been mentioned therein.

THE FIRST PLEDGE AT AL-AQABA AND THE MISSION OF MUSAB

In the following year twelve Helpers attended the fair and met at al-Aqaba—this was the first Aqaba—where they gave the apostle the 'pledge of women (i.e. no fighting was involved. Cf. Sum 60.1a.)'. This was before the duty of making war was laid upon them.

These men were: From B. al-Najjar: Asad b. Zurara; Auf b. al-Harith and Muadh his brother, both sons of Afra. From B. Zurayq b. Amir: Rafi h. Malik and Dhakwan b. Abdu Qays b. Khalada b. Mukhlid b. Amir b. Zurayq (232).

From B. Auf of the clan of B. Ghanm b. Auf b. Amr b. Auf who were the Qawaqil: Ubada b. al-Samit b. Qays b. Asram b. Fihri b. Thalaba b. Ghanm; and Abu Abdul-Rahman who was Yazid b. Thalaba b. Khazma b. Asram b. Amr b. Ammira of B. Ghusayna of Balyi, an ally of theirs (233).

From B. Salim b. Auf b. Amr b. al-Khazraj of the clan of B. al-Ajlun b. Zayd b. Ghanm b. Salim: al-Abbas b. Ubada b. Nadala b. Malik b. al-Ajlan.

From B. Salima: Uqba b. Amir.

From B. Sawad: Quba b. Amir b. Hadida. The Aus were represented by Abul-Haytham b. al-Tayyihan whose name was Malik of the clan of B. Abdul-Ashhal b. Jusham b. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj b. Amr b. Malik b. al-Aus (234).

From B. Amr b. Auf b. Malik b. al-Aus: Uwaym b. Saida. Yazid b. Abu Habib from Abu Marthad b. Abdullah al-Yazani from Abdul-Rahman b. Usayla al-Sannaji from Ubada b. al-Samit told me: I was present at the first Aqaba. There were twelve of us and we pledged ourselves to the prophet after the manner of women and that was before war was enjoined, the undertaking being that we should associate nothing with God; we should not steal; we should not commit fornication; nor kill our offspring; we should not slander our neighbours; we should not disobey him in what was right; if we fulfilled this paradise would be ours; if we committed any of those sins it was for God to punish or forgive as He pleased (See Koran 60.12 where the wording is very similar.).'

Al-Zuhri from Aidhullah b. Abdullah al-Khawlani Abu Idris said that Ubada b. al-Samit told him that We gave allegiance to the apostle that we would associate nothing with God, not steal, not commit fornication, not kill our offspring, not slander our neighbour, not disobey him in what was right; if we fulfilled this paradise would be ours; and if we committed any of those sins we should be punished in this world and this would serve as expiation; if the sin was concealed until the Day of Resurrection, then it would be for God to decide whether to punish or to forgive.'

When these men left, the apostle sent with them Musab b. Umayr b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf . . . and instructed him to read the Koran to them and to teach them Islam and to give them instruction about religion. In Medina MusAb was called 'The Reader'; he lodged with Asad b. Zurara. Asim b. Umar told me that he used to lead the prayers because Aus and Khazraj could not bear to see one of their rivals take the lead.

THE INSTITUTION OF FRIDAY PRAYERS IN MEDINA

Mohammed b. Abu Umama b. Sahl b. Hunayf from his father from Abdul-Rahman b. Kab b. Malik told me that the latter said: I was leading my father Kab when he had lost his sight, and when I brought him out to the mosque and he heard the call to prayer he called down blessings on Abu Umama Asad b. Zurara. This went on for some time: whenever he heard the adhdn he blessed him and asked God's pardon for him. I thought that this was an extraordinary thing to do and decided to ask him why he did it. He told me that it was because he was the first man to bring them together in the low ground of al-Nabit* in the quarter of the B. Bayada called Naqil-Khadimat. I asked him how many of them there were, and he told me that they numbered forty men.' (* Hazamul-Nabit according to al-Suhayli is a mountain one post from Medina. Yaqut denies this, because Hazam means 'low ground'. He prefers the reading In the low ground of the Bam Nabit', etc.)

Ubaydallah b. al-Mughira b. Muayqib and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm told me that Asad b. Zurara went out with Musab b. Umayr to the areas of B. Abdul-Ashhal and of B. Zafar. Sad b. al-Numan b. Imruul-Qays b. Zayd b. Abdul-Ashhal was the son of Asad's aunt. He entered with him one of the gardens of B. Zafar (235) by a well called Maraḡ and sat in the garden and some of the men who had accepted Islam gathered together there. Now Sad b. Muadh and Usayd b. Hudayr were at that time leaders of their clan, the B. Abdul-Ashhal, and both followed the heathenism of their tribe. When they heard about him Sa'd said to Usayd: 'Go to these fellows who have entered our quarters to make fools of our weak comrades, drive them out and forbid them to enter our quarters. If it were not that Asad b. Zurara is related to me as you know I would save you the trouble. He is my aunt's son and I can do nothing to him.' So Usayd took his lance and went to them; and when Asad saw him he said to Musab, 'This is the chief of his tribe who is coming to you, so be true to God with him.' Musab said, 'If he will sit down I will talk to him.' He stood over them looking furious and asking what they meant by coming to deceive their weaker comrades. 'Leave us if you value your lives.' Musab said, 'Will you not sit down and listen. If you like what you hear you can accept it, and if you do not like it you can leave it alone.' He agreed that that was fair, stuck his lance in the ground, and sat down. He explained Islam to him and read him the Koran. Afterwards they said — according to what has been reported of them— 'By God, before he spoke we recognised Islam in his face by its peaceful glow.' He said, 'What a wonderful and beautiful discourse this is! What does one do if he wants to enter this religion?' They told him that he must wash and purify himself and his garments, then bear witness to the truth and pray. He immediately did so and made two prostrations. Then he said, 'There is a man behind me who if he follows you every one of his people will follow suit. I will send him to you at once. It is Sad b. Muadh.' Taking his lance he went off to Sa'd and his people who were sitting in conclave. When Sad saw him coming he said, 'By God, Usayd is coming with a different expression from that he had when he left you.' And when he came up he asked what had happened. He said, 'I have spoken to the two men and I find no harm in them. I forbade them to go on and they said to me, 'We will do what you like; and I was told that the B. Haritha had gone out against Asad to kill him because they knew that he was the son of your aunt so as to make you appear a treacherous protector of your guests.'

Sad enraged got up at once, alarmed at what had been said about the B. Haritha. He took the lance from his hand, saying, 'By God, I see that you have been utterly ineffective.' He went out to them and when he saw them sitting comfortably he knew that Usayd had intended that he should listen to them. He stood over them, looking furious. To Asad he said, 'Were it not for the relationship between us you would not have treated me thus. Would you behave in our houses in a way we detest?' (Now Asad had said to Musab, 'The leader whom his people follow has come to you. If he follows you, no two of them will remain behind.') So Musab said to him what he had said to Usayd, and Sad stuck his lance in the ground and sat down. The same thing happened again and he went to his people's meeting-place accompanied by Usayd. When they saw him coming they said, 'We swear by God Sa'd has returned with a different expression.' And when he stopped by them he asked them how they knew what had happened to him. They replied, '(You are) our chief, the most active in our interests, the best in judgement and the most fortunate in leadership.' He said, 'I will not speak to a man or woman among you until you believe in God and His apostle.' As a result every man and woman among the B. Abdul-Asbhal joined Islam.

Asad and Musab returned to Asad's house and stayed there calling men to Islam until every house of the Ansar had men and women who were Muslims except those of B. Uraayya b. Zayd, and Khatma and Wa'il and Waqif; the latter were Aus Allah and of Aus b. Haritha. The reason was that Abu Qays b. al-Aslat whose name was Sayfi was among them. He was their poet and leader and they obeyed him and he kept them back from Islam. Indeed he continued to do so until the apostle migrated to Medina, and Badr, and Uhud, and al-Rhandaḡ were over. He said concerning what he thought of Islam and how men differed about his state:

Lord of mankind, serious things have happened.

The difficult and the simple are involved.

Lord of mankind, if we have erred

Guide us to the good path.

Were it not for our Lord we should be Jews

And the religion of Jews is not convenient.

Were it not for our Lord we should be Christians

Along with the monks on Mount Jalil (in Galilee).

But when we were created we were created

Hanifs; our religion is from all generations.

We bring the sacrificial camels walking in fetters

Covered with cloths but their shoulders bare (236).

THE SECOND PLEDGE AT AL-AQABA

Then Musab returned to Mecca and the Muslim Ansar came to the fair there with the pilgrims of their people who were polytheists. They met the apostle at al-Aqaba in the middle of the days of Tashriḡ*, when God intended to honour them and to help His apostle and to strengthen Islam and to humiliate heathenism and its devotees. (* The days of the Tashriḡ are the three days following the day of sacrifice, i.e. 11th, 12th, and 13th of Dhul-Hijja. Various explanations are given by the lexicographers: (1st) because the victims were not sacrificed until the sun rose; (2nd) because the flesh of the victims was cut into strips and left to dry in the sun on those days; and (3rd) because in pagan times they used to say at that time Ashriḡ Thabir kayma nuḡhir 'Show the sun, O Thabir, that we may pass on quickly'. See further E.I. and literature cited there.)

Mabad b. Kab b. Malik b. Abu Kab b. al-Qayn, brother of the B. Salima, told me that his brother Abdullah b. Kab who was one of the most learned of the Ansar told him that his father Kab who was one of those who had been present at al-Aqaba and did homage to the apostle, informed him saying: 'We went out with the polytheist pilgrims of our people having prayed and learned the customs of the pilgrimage. With us was al-Bara b. Marur our chief and senior. When we had started our journey from Medina al-Bara said, "I have come to a conclusion and I do not know whether you will agree with me or not. I think that I will not turn my back on this building" (meaning the Kaaba), "and that I shall pray towards it." We replied that so far as we knew our prophet prayed towards Syria* (* Guillaume and others thought Jerusalem; today we know from satellite photos that the qiblas of the first mosques were directed towards the City of Petra in modern-day Jordan. This arouses the serious question if Petra and not Mecca was Mohammed's real hometown. It would at least explain that almost all geographical descriptions on Mohammed's hometown fit much better to Petra, including a Kaaba temple. The first mosques that looked towards Mecca were built during the Umayyad Dynasty; this might include Mecca.) and we did not wish to act differently. He said, "I am going to pray towards the Kaaba." We said, "But we will not." When the time for prayer came we prayed towards Syria and he prayed towards the Kaaba until we came to Mecca. We blamed him for what he was doing, but he refused to change. When we came to Mecca he said to me, "Nephew, let us go to the apostle and ask him about what I did on our journey. For I feel some misgivings since I have seen your opposition." So we went to ask the apostle. We did not know him and we had never seen him before. We met a man of Mecca and we asked him about the apostle; he asked if we knew him and we said that we did not. Then do you know his uncle, al-Abbas b. Abdul-Muttalib? We said that we did because he was always coming to us as a merchant. He said, "When you enter the mosque he is the man sitting beside al-Abbas." So we went into the mosque and there was al-Abbas sitting with the apostle beside him; we saluted them and sat down. The apostle asked al-Abbas if he knew us, and he said that he did and named us. I shall never forget the apostle's words when Kab's name was mentioned. "The poet?" Al-Bara said, "O prophet of God, I came on this journey God having guided me to Islam and I felt that I could not turn my back on this building, so I prayed towards it; but when my companions opposed me I felt some misgivings. What is your opinion, O apostle of God?" He replied, "You would have had a qibla if you had kept to it," so al-Bara returned to the apostle's qibla and prayed with us towards Syria (the City of Petra. The apostle's reply to al-Bara could be taken in either sense, and considerable doubt is reflected in the commentaries and traditions on the question involved.) But his people assert that he prayed towards the Kaaba until the day of his death; but this was not so. We know more about that than they (237)."

Mabad b. Kab told me that his brother Abdullah told him that his father Kab b. Malik said: "Then we went to the hajj and agreed to meet the apostle at al-Aqaba in the middle of the days of the tashriq. When we had completed the hajj and the night came in which we had agreed to meet the apostle there was with us Abdullah b. Amr b. Haram Abu Jabir, one of our chiefs and nobles whom we had taken with us. We had concealed our business from those of our people who were polytheists. We said to him, "You are one of our chiefs and nobles and we want you from your present state lest you become fuel for the fire in the future." Then we invited him to accept Islam and told him about our meeting with the apostle at al-Aqaba. Thereupon he accepted Islam and came to al-Aqaba with us, and became a naqib (leader).

"We slept that night among our people in the caravan until when a third of the night had passed we went stealing softly like sandgrouse to our appointment with the apostle as far as the gully by al-Aqaba. There were seventy-three men with two of our women: Nusayba d. of Kab Umm Umara, one of the women of B. Mazin b. al-Najjar, and Asma d. of Amr b. Adly b. Nadi, one of the women of B. Salima who was known as Umm Mani. We gathered together in the gully waiting for the apostle until he came with his uncle al-Abbas who was at that time a polytheist; albeit he wanted to be present at his nephew's business and see that he had a firm guarantee. When he sat down he was the first to speak and said: "O people of al-Khazraj (the Arabs used the term to cover both Khazraj and Aus). You know what position Mohammed holds among us. We have protected him from our own people who think as we do about him. He lives in honour and safety among his people, but he will turn to you and join you. If you think that you can be faithful to what you have promised him and protect him from his opponents, then assume the burden you have undertaken. But if you think that you will betray and abandon him after he has gone out with you, then leave him now. For he is safe where he is." We replied, "We have heard what you say. You speak, O apostle, and choose for yourself and for your Lord what you wish."

"The apostle spoke and recited the Koran and invited men to God and commended Islam and then said: "I invite your allegiance on the basis that you protect me as you would your women and children." Al-Bara took his hand and said "By Him Who sent you with the truth we will protect you as we protect our women. We give our allegiance and we are men of war possessing arms which have been passed on from father to son." While al-Bara was speaking Abul-Haytham b. al-Tayyihan interrupted him and said, "O apostle, we have ties with other men (he meant the Jews) and if we sever them perhaps when we have done that and God will have given you victory, you will return to your people and leave us?" The apostle smiled and said: "Nay, blood is blood and blood not to be paid for is blood not to be paid for (i.e. He would treat blood revenge and its obligation as common to both parties.

See Ibn Hisham's note.). I am of you and you are of me. I will war against them that war against you and be at peace with those at peace with you (238)."

Kab continued: "The apostle said, "Bring out to me twelve leaders that they may take charge of their people's affairs." They produced nine from al-Khazraj and three from al-Aus."

THE NAMES OF THE TWELVE LEADERS AND THE REST OF THE STORY OF AL-AQABA

According to what Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai told us from Mohammed b. Ishaq al-Muttalibi (they were):

From al-Khazraj: Abu Umama Asad b. Zurara . . . b. al-Najjar who was Taym Allah b. Thalaba b. Amr b. al-Khazraj; Sad b. al-Rabi b. Amr b. Abu Zuhayr b. Malik b. Imruul-Qays b. Malik b. Thalaba b. Kab b. al-Khazraj b. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj; Abdullah b. Rawaha b. Thalaba of the same line; Rafi b. Malik b. al-Ajlan b. Amr . . . ; al-Bara b. Marur b. Sakhr b. Khansa b. Sinan b. Ubayd b. Adiy b. Ghanm b. Kab b. Salama b. Sad b. Ali b. Asad b. Sarida b. Tazid b. Jusham b. al-Khazraj; Abdullah b. Amr b. Haram b. Thalaba b. Haram b. Kab b. Ghanm b. Kab b. Salama . . . ; Ubada b. al-Samit b. Qays b. Asram . . . (239). Sad b. Ubada b. Dulaym b. Haritha b. Abu Hazima b. Thalaba b. Tarif b. al-Khazraj b. Saida b. Kab b. al-Khazraj; al-Mundhir b. Amr b. Khunays b. Haritha b. Laudhan b. Abdu Wudd b. Zayd b. Thalaba b. al-Khazraj of the same line (240).

From al-Aus: Usayd b. Hudayr b. Simak b. Atik b. Rafi b. Imruul-Qays b. Zayd b. Abdul-Ashhal b. Jusham b. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj b. Amr b. Malik b. al-Aus; Sa'd b. Khaythama b. al-Harith b. Malik b. Kab b. al-Nahhat b. Kab b. Haritha b. Ghanm b. al-Salm b. Imruul-Qays b. Malik b. al-Aus; Rifa'a b. Abdul-Mundhir b. Zubayr b. Zayd b. Umayya b. Zayd b. Malik b. Auf b. Amr b. Auf b. Malik b. al-Aus (241). Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that the apostle said to the Leaders: "You are the sureties for your people just as the disciples of Jesus, Son of Mary, were responsible to him, while I am responsible for my people, i.e. the Muslims." They agreed.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that when the people came together to plight their faith to the apostle, al-Abbas b. Ubada b. Nadla al-Ansari, brother of B. Salim b. Auf, said, 40 men of Khazraj, do you realise to what you are committing yourselves in pledging your support to this man? It is to war against all and sundry (Lit. "red and black men"). If you think that if you lose your property and your nobles are killed you will give him up, then do so now, for it would bring you shame in this world and the next (if you did so later); but if you think that you will be loyal to your undertaking if you lose your property and your nobles are killed, then take him, for by God it will profit you in this world and the next.' They said that they would accept the apostle on these conditions. But they asked what they would get in return for their loyalty, and the apostle promised them paradise.

They said, 'Stretch forth your hand,' and when he did so they pledged their word. Asim added that al-Abbas said that only to bind the obligation more securely on them. Abdullah b. Abu Bakr said that he said it merely to keep the people back that night, hoping that Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul would come and so give more weight to his people's support. But God knows best which is right (242).

The B. al-Najjar allege that Asad b. Zurara was the first to strike his hand in fealty; the B. Abdul-Ashhal say that he was not, for Abul-Haytham was the first. Mabad b. Kab told me in his tradition from his brother Abdullah b. Kab from his father Kab b. Malik that al-Bara was the first and the people followed him. When we had all pledged ourselves Satan shouted from the top of al-Aqaba in the most penetrating voice I have ever heard, 'O people of the stations of Mina, do you want this reprobate (Mudhammam is probably an offensive counterpart to the name Mohammed.) and the apostates (Subat, the plural of Sabi. the name given to those who had given up their own religion to take another. Hardly an apostate [murtadd]), who are with him? They have come together to make war on you!' The apostle said, 'This is the lzb (The word is said to mean 'small and contemptible') of the hill. This is the son of Azyab. Do you hear, O enemy of God, I swear I will make an end of you! (243).'

The apostle then told them to disperse and go back to their caravan, and al-Abbas b. Ubada said, 'By God, if you wish it we will fall on the people of Mina tomorrow with our swords.' He replied, 'We have not been commanded to do that ; but go back to your caravan.' So we went back to our beds and slept until the morrow.

With the morning the leaders of (the) Quraysh came to our encampment saying that they had heard that we had come to invite Mohammed to leave them and had pledged ourselves to support him in war against them, and that there was no Arab tribe that they would fight more reluctantly than us. Thereupon the polytheists of our tribe swore that nothing of the kind had happened and they knew nothing of it. And here they were speaking the truth, for they were in ignorance of what had happened. We looked at one another. Then the people got up, among them al-Harith b. Hisham b. al-Mughira al-Makhzumi who was wearing a pair of new sandals. I spoke a word to him as though I wanted to associate the people with what they had said, 'O Abu Jabir, seeing that you are one of our chiefs, can't you get hold of a pair of sandals such as this young Qurayshite has? Al-Harith heard me and took them off his feet and threw them at me saying, 'By God you can have them!' Abu Jabir said, 'Gently now, you have angered the young man, so give him hark his sandals.' 'By God, I will not,' I said ; It is a good omen and if it proves to be true I shall plunder him.'

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that they came to Abdullah b. Ubayy and said to him much the same as Ka'b had said and he replied, 'This is a serious matter; my people are not in the habit of deciding a question without consulting me in this way and I do not know that it has happened.' Thereupon they left him.

When the people had left Mina they investigated the report closely and found that it was true. So they went in pursuit of (our) people and overtook Sad b. Ubada in Adhakhir and also al-Mundhir b. Amr, brother of B. Saida, both of them being 'leaders'. The latter got away, but they caught Sad and tied his hands to his neck with the thongs of the girth and brought him back to Mecca beating him on the way and dragging him by the hair, for he was a very hairy man. Sad said, As they held me, a number of Quraysh came up, among them a tall, white, handsome man of pleasant appearance and I thought that if there was any decency among them this man would show it. But when he came up he delivered me a violent blow in the face and after that I despaired of fair treatment. As they were dragging me along, a man took pity on me and said, "You poor devil, have not you any right to protection from one of the Quraysh?"

"Yes," I said, "I have. I used to guarantee the safety of the merchants of Jubayr b. Mutim b. Adiy b. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf and protect them from those who might have wronged them in my country; also al-Harith b. Harb b. Umayya b. Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf." "Very well, then, call out the names of these two men and say what tie there is between you," he said. This I did and that man went to them and found them in the mosque beside the Kaaba and told them of me and that I was calling for them and mentioning my claim on them. When they heard who I was they acknowledged the truth of my claim and came and delivered me.' So Sad went off. The name of the man who hit him was Suhayl b. Amr, brother of B. Amir b. Lu'ayy (244).

The first poetry about the Migration was two verses composed by Dirar b. al-Khattab b. Mirdas, brother of B. Muharib b. Fihri:

I overtook Sad and took him by force.
It would have been better if I had caught Mundhir.
If I had got him his blood would not have to be paid for.
He deserves to be humiliated and left unavenged (244a).

Hassan b. Thabit answered him thus:

You were not equal to Sad and the man Mundhir
When the people's camels were thin.
But for Abu Wahb (my) verses would have passed over
The top of al-Barqa* swooping down swiftly (* Yaquf says that this is a place in the desert. He does not say where.)

( The interpretation of this difficult line depends on the identity of Abu Wahb. The man of this name mentioned by Ibn Ishaq (p. 123) was the father of the prophet's maternal uncle; if it is he that is referred to, clearly the meaning must be that the presence of this man in Mecca prevented Hassan from launching his invective against (the) Quraysh, and the verb must mean swooping or rushing. However, al-Barquqi in his commentary on the Diwan tentatively suggests that it was Abu Wahb who brought Dirar's lines to Medina: had he not done so they would have fallen impotently on the way. This interpretation requires us to understand hated in the sense of falling, and hussard as 'wearied' instead of 'stripped for action' and so capable of rapid movement. The last line in Ibn Ishaq's text follows this line and this rearrangement of the lines would naturally suggest that the qasid came from the same source; but as Ibn Ishaq reported the satire such a conclusion is unnecessary. See further Dr. Arafat's thesis on the poetry of Hassan.)

Do you boast of wearing cotton
When the Nabataeans wear dyed (Or 'bleached') wrappers?

Be not like a sleeper who dreams that
He is in a town of Caesar or Chosroes.
Do not be like a bereaved mother who
Would not have lost her child had she been wise;
Nor like the sheep which with her forelegs
Digs the grave she does not desire;
Nor like the barking dog that sticks out his neck
Not fearing the arrow of the unseen archer.
He who directs poetry's shafts at us
Is like one who sends dates to Khaybar*.
(* i.e. Sends coals to Newcastle. This line follows line 2 in the Diwan.)

THE IDOL OF AMR IBNUL-JAMUH

When they came to Medina they openly professed Islam there. Now some of the shaykhs still kept to their old idolatry, among whom was Amr b. al-Jamuh b. Yazid b. Haram b. Kab b. Ghanm b. Kab b. Salama whose son, Muadh, had been present at al-Aqaba and had done homage to the apostle there. Amr was one of the tribal nobles and leaders and had set up in his house a wooden idol called Manat* as the nobles used to do, making it a god to reverence and keeping it clean (* Suhayli explains that the idol was so called because blood was shed [muniyat] by it as an offering and that is why idols are said to be bloody. But the explanation of the namejs to be found outside the Arabic language in the goddess of Fate. See S.H. Langdon, Semitic Mythology, 1931, pp. 19 ff). When the young men of the B. Salama Muadh b. Jabal and his own son Muadh adopted Islam with the other men who had been at al-Aqaba they used to creep in at night to this idol of Amr's and carry it away and throw it on its face into a cesspit. When the morning came Amr cried, 'Woe to you! Who has been at our gods this night?' Then he went in search of the idol and when he found it he washed it and cleaned it and perfumed it saying, 'By God, if I knew who had done this I would treat him shamefully!' When night came and he was fast asleep they did the same again and he restored the idol in the morning. This happened several times until one day he took the idol from the place where they had thrown it, purified it as before, and fastened his sword to it, saying, 'By God, I don't know who has done this; but if you are any good at all defend yourself since you have this sword.'

At night when he was asleep they came again and took the sword from its neck and hung a dead dog to it by a cord and then threw it into a cesspit. In the morning Amr came and could not find it where it normally was; ultimately he found it face downwards in that pit tied to a dead dog. When he saw it and perceived what had happened and the Muslims of his clan spoke to him he accepted Islam by the mercy of God and became a good Muslim. He wrote some verses when he had come to a knowledge of God in which he mentioned the image and its impotence and thanked God for having delivered him from the blindness and error in which he had lived hitherto:

By Allah, if you had been a god you would not have been Tied to a dead dog in a cesspit.

Phew! that we ever treated you as a god, but now
We have found you out and left our wicked folly.
Praise be to God most High, the Gracious,
The Bountiful, the Provider, the Judge of all religions
Who has delivered me in time to save me
From being kept in the darkness of the grave.

CONDITIONS OF THE PLEDGE AT THE SECOND AQABA

When God gave permission to his apostle to fight, the second Aqaba contained conditions involving war which were not in the first act of fealty. Now they bound themselves to war against all and sundry for God and his apostle, while he promised them for faithful service thus the reward of paradise.

Ubada b. al-Walid b. Ubada b. al-Samit from his father from his grandfather Ubada b. al-Samit who was one of the Leaders told me, 'We pledged ourselves to war in complete obedience to the apostle in weal and woe, in ease and hardship and evil circumstances; that we would not wrong anyone; that we would speak the truth at all times; and that in God's service we would fear the censure of none.' The total number of those present at the second Aqaba from the Aus and Khazraj was seventy-three men and two women who they allege pledged their obedience also. The apostle used not to strike hands with women; he merely stated the conditions, and if they accepted them he would say, 'Go, I have made a covenant with you.'

(Of these two women) Nusayba was of B. Mazin b. al-Najjar. She was d. of Kab b. Amr b. Auf b. Mabdhu b. Amr b. Ghanm b. Mazin, mother of Umara. She and her sister went to war with the apostle. And when he said that he did, he went on, 'And do you testify that I am the apostle of God?' he answered, 'I do not hear.' So he began to cut him to pieces member by member until he died. He tried putting the same questions to him again and again, but he could get no different answers. Nusayba went to al-Yamama with the Muslims and took part in the war in person until God slew Musaylima, when she returned having suffered twelve wounds from spear or sword. THE APOSTLE RECEIVES THE ORDER TO FIGHT

The apostle had not been given permission to fight or allowed to shed blood before the second Aqaba. He had simply been ordered to call men to God and to endure insult and forgive the ignorant. The Quraysh had persecuted his followers, seducing some from their religion, and exiling others from their country. They had to choose whether to give up their religion, be maltreated at home, or to flee the country, some to Abyssinia Ethiopia, others to Medina.

When (the) Quraysh became insolent towards God and rejected His gracious purpose, accused His prophet of lying, and ill treated and exiled those who served Him and proclaimed His unity, believed in His prophet, and held fast to His religion, He gave permission to His apostle to fight and to protect himself against those who wronged them and treated them badly.

The first verse which was sent down on this subject from what I have heard from Urwa b. al-Zubayr and other learned persons was: 'Permission is given to those who fight because they have been wronged. God is well able to help them,—those who have been driven out of their houses without right only because they said God is our Lord. Had not God used some men to keep back others, cloisters and churches and oratories and mosques wherein the name of God is constantly mentioned would have been destroyed. Assuredly God will help those who help Him. God is Almighty. Those who if we make them strong in the land will establish prayer, pay the poor-tax, enjoin kindness, and forbid iniquity. To God belongs the end of matters (Koran 22.40-42).' The meaning is: I have allowed them to fight only because they have been unjustly treated while their sole offence against men has been that they worship God. When they are in the ascendant they will establish prayer, pay the poor-tax, enjoin kindness, and forbid iniquity, i.e. the prophet and his companions all of them.' Then God sent down to him: 'Fight them so that there be no more seduction (2.198.); i.e. until no believer is seduced from his religion. And the religion is God's, i.e. Until God alone is worshipped.

When God had given permission to fight and this clan of the Ansar had pledged their support to him in Islam and to help him and his followers, and the Muslims who had taken refuge with them, the apostle commanded his companions, the emigrants of his people and those Muslims who were with him in Mecca, to emigrate to Medina and to link up with their brethren the Ansar. 'God will make for you brethren and houses in which you may be safe.' So they went out in companies, and the apostle stayed in Mecca waiting for his Lord's permission to leave Mecca and migrate to Medina.

THOSE WHO MIGRATED TO MEDINA

The first of the Quraysh to migrate to Medina from among the apostle's companions was one of B. Makhzum, Abu Salama b. Abdul-Asad b. Hilal b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum whose forename was Abdullah.

He went to Medina a year before the pledge at al-Aqaba, having come to the apostle in Mecca from Abyssinia. He migrated because the Quraysh ill-treated him" and he had heard that some of the Ansar had accepted Islam. (* this is only half of the truth. In reality, Mohammed [and his roughly 150 followers] became a political nuisance to the towns-people due to his bad temper and disobedience towards the town regulations. He was a bit of a rouser and his wife as well as his uncle had to rescue him for several times. In the end, when his wife and uncle had died of plague, the officials of his hometown threw him out of the town. He did not leave the city voluntarily. His destined 'migration' is a myth created to better his image.)

My father Ishaq b. Yasar on the authority of Salama who had it from his grandmother Umm Salama the prophet's wife told me that she said: When Abu Salama had decided to set out for Medina he saddled his camel for me and mounted me on it together with my son Salama who was in my arms. Then he set out leading the camel. When the men of B. al-Mughira b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum saw him they got up and said: 'So far as you are concerned you can do what you like; but what about your wife? Do you suppose that, we shall let you take her away?' So they snatched the camel's rope from his hand and took me from him.

Abu Salama's family, the B. Abdul-Asad, were angry at this and said: 'We will not leave our son with her seeing you have torn her from our tribesman.' So they dragged at my little boy Salama between them until they dislocated his arm, and the R. al-Asad took him away, while the B. al-Mughira kept me with them, and my husband Abu Salama went to Medina. Thus I was separated from my husband and my son. I used to go out every morning and sit in the valley weeping continuously until a year or so had passed when one of my cousins of B. al-Mughira passed and saw my plight and took pity on me. He said to his tribesmen, 'Why do you not let this poor woman go? You have separated husband, wife, and child.'

So they said to me, 'You can join your husband if you like'; and then the B. Abdul-Asad restored my son to me. So I saddled my camel and took my son and carried him in my arms. Then I set forth making for my husband in Medina. Not a soul was with me. I thought that I could get food from anyone I met on the road until I reached my husband. When I was in Tanim (This place is said to be two parasangs, i.e. about six miles / 10 km, from Mecca.)

I met Uthman b. Talha b. Abu Talha, brother of B. Abdul-Dar, who asked me where I was going and if I was all alone. I told him that except for God and my little boy I was alone. He said that I ought not to be left helpless like that and he took hold of the camel's halter and went along with me. Never have I met an Arab more noble than he. When we halted he would make the camel kneel for me and then withdraw; when we reached a stopping-place he would lead my camel away, unload it, and tie it to a tree. Then he would go from me and lie down under a tree.

When evening came he would bring the camel and saddle it, then go behind me and tell me to ride; and when I was firmly established in the saddle he would come and take the halter and lead it until he brought me to a halt. This he did all the way to Medina. When he saw a village of B. Amr b. Auf in Quba he said: 'Your husband is in this village (Abu Salama was actually there), so enter it with the blessing of God.' Then he went off on his way back to Mecca.

She used to say, By God, I do not know a family in Islam which suffered what the family of Abu Salama did (The family was all but destroyed in the wars that followed; Uthman himself was killed at the beginning of Ulnar's reign.). Nor have I ever seen a nobler man than Uthman b. Talha.

The first emigrant to go to Medina after Abu Salama was Amir b. Rabia, an ally of B. Adly b. Kab together with his wife Layla d. of Hathma b. Ghanim b. Abdullah b. Auf b. Ubayd b. Uwayj b. Adly b. Kab. Then Abdullah b. Jahsh b. Riab b. Yamar b. Sabira b. Murra b. Kallir b. Ghanm b. Dudan b. Asad b. Khuzayma ally of B. Umayya b. Abdu Shams along with his family and his brother Abd—who was known as Abu Ahmad. Now Abu Ahmad was blind and he used to go all round Mecca from top to bottom without anyone to lead him. He' was a poet. He had to wife al-Fara d. of Abu Sufyan b. Harb; his mother was Umayma d. of Abdul-Muttalib.

The house of the B. Jahsh was locked up when they left and Utba b. Rabia and al-Abbas b. Abdul-Muttalib and Abu Jahl b. Hisham passed by it on their way to the upper part of Mecca. (Today it is the house of Ahan b. Uthman in Radm.) Utba looked at it with its doors blowing to and fro, empty of inhabitants, and sighed heavily and said: Every house however long its prosperity lasts Will one day be overtaken by misfortune and trouble (260).

Then Utba went on to say, 'The house of the B. Jahsh has become tenantless.' To which Abu Jahl replied, 'Nobody will weep over that (26.)'.

He went on: This is the work of this man's nephew. He has divided our community, disrupted our affairs, and driven a wedge between us. Abu Salama and Amir b. Rabia and Abdullah b. Jahsh and his brother Abu Ahmad b. Jahsh were billeted on Mubashshir b. Abdul-Mundhir b. Zanbar in Quba among the B. Amr b. Auf.

Then the refugees came in companies and the B. Ghanm b. Dildan were Muslims who had gone to Medina as a body with the apostle as emigrants both men and women: Abdullah b. Jahsh and his brother Abu Ahmad and Ukasha b. Mihsan and Shuja and Uqba, the two sons of Wahn, and Arbad b. Humayyira (262), and Munqidh b. Nubata and Said b. Ruqaysh and Muhriz b. Nadla and Yazid b. Ruqaysh, and Qays b. Jabir and Amr b. Mihsan and Malik b. Amr and Safwan b. Amr and Thaqr b. Amr and Rabia b. Aktham and al-Zubayr b. Abid and Tammam b. Ubayda and Sakhbara b. Ubayda and Mohammed b. Abdullah b. Jahsh. Their women were Zaynab and Umm Hablb daughters of Jahsh, Judhama d. Jandal and Umm Qays d. Mihsan and Umm Habib d. Thumama and Amina d. of Ruqaysh and Sakhbara d. Tamim and Hanna d. Jahsh.

Abu Ahmad, mentioning the migration of the B. Asad b. Khuzayma of his people to God and his apostle and their going in a body when they were called on to emigrate, said:

Had Ahmad's mother 'twixt Safa and Marwa sworn
Her oath would have been true.

We were the first in Mecca and remained so
Till the worse became the better part.

Here Ghanm b. Dudan pitched his tent.
From it Ghanm has gone and its inhabitants diminish*.

(* C.'s text has And what if Ghanm has gone', etc. Abu Dharr queries the word qotin rendered Inhabitants'.)

To God they go in ones and twos,
Their religion the religion of God and his apostle.

He also said:

When Umm Ahmad saw me setting out
In the protection of One I secretly fear and reverence,

Umar accompanied by various members of his family, and his brother Zayd, and Amr and Abdullah the sons of Suraba b. al-Mutamir, and Khunays b. Hudhafa al-Sahmi (who had married Ulnar's daughter Hafsa whom the apostle married after the death of her husband), and Waqid b. Abdullah al-Tamimi an ally of theirs, and Khauli and Malik b. Abu Khauli, two allies (265), and four sons of al-Bukayr, namely Iyas, Aqil, Amir, and Khalid; and their allies from B. Sad b. Layth; when they arrived at Medina stayed with Rifaa b. Abdul-Mundhir b. Zanbar among B. Amr b. Auf in Quba. Ayyash also stayed with him when he came to Medina.

Then came successive waves of emigrants: Talha b. Ubayd Allah b. Tinman; Suhayb b. Sinan stayed with Khubayb b. Isaf brother of the B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj, in al-Sunh (the upper part of Medina). Others deny this and say that Talha stayed with Asad b. Zurara brother of the B. al-Najjar (266).

The following stayed with Kulthum b. Hidm brother of B. Amr b. Auf in Quba: Hamza b. Abdul-Muttalib; Zayd b. Haritha; Abo Marthad Kannaz b. Hisn (267); and his son Marthad of the tribe Ghani, allies of Hamza; Anasa; and Abu Kabsha, freedmen of the apostle. Other reports are that they stayed with Sad b. Khaythama; and that Hamza stayed with Asad b. Zurara.

The following stayed with Abdullah b. Salama brother of the Banu Ajlan in Quba: Ubayda b. al-Harith and his brother al-Tufayl; al-Husayn b. al-Harith; Mistah b. Uthatha b. Abbad b. al-Muttalib; Suwaybit b. Sad b. Huraymila brother of B. Abdul-Dar: Tulayb b. Umayr brother of the B. Abd b. Qusayy; and Khabbab, freedman of Utba b. Gharwan.

With Sad b. al-Rabi brother of the B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj in the house of the latter stayed Abdul-Rahman b. Auf with some male emigrants.

With Mundhir b. Mohammed b. Uqba b. Uhayha b. al-Julah in al-Usha the dwelling of the B. Jahjaba, stayed al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam and Abu Sabra b. Abu Ruhm b. Abdul-Uzza.

With Sad b. Muadh b. al-Numan brother of the B. Abdul-Ashhal in their dwelling stayed Musab b. Umayr b. Hashim brother of the B. Abdul-Dar.

With Abbad b. Bishr b. Waqsh brother of the B. Abdul-Ashhal in the latter's dwelling stayed Abu Hudhayfa b. Utba b. Rabia and his freedman Salim; and Utba b. Ghazwan b. Jabir (268).

With Aus b. Thabit b. al-Mundhir, brother of Hassan b. Thabit in the dwelling of B. al-Najjar stayed Uthman b. Affan. This was the reason why Hassan was so fond of Uthman and lamented him when he was slain.

It is said that the celibate emigrants stayed with Sad b. Khaythama because he himself was unmarried; but God knows best about that.

PART III

THE HIJRA

THE CAMPAIGNS FROM MEDINA

THE OCCUPATION OF MECCA

THE CONQUEST OF ARABIA

THE DEATH OF THE PROPHET

THE HIJRA OF THE PROPHET

After his companions had left, the apostle stayed in Mecca waiting for permission to migrate. Except for Abu Bakr and Ali, none of his supporters were left but those under restraint and those who had been forced to apostatise. The former kept asking the apostle for permission to emigrate and he would answer, 'Do not be in a hurry; it may be that God will give you a companion.' Abu Bakr hoped that it would be Mohammed himself.

When the Quraysh saw that the apostle had a party and companions not of their tribe and outside their territory, and knew that they had settled in a new home and had gained protectors, they feared that the apostle might join them, since they knew that he had decided to fight them. So they assembled in their council chamber, the house of Qusayy b. Kilab where all their important business was conducted, to take counsel what they should do in regard to the apostle, for they were now in fear of him.

One of our companions whom I have no reason to doubt told me on the authority of Abdullah b. Abu Najih from Mujahid b. Jubayr father of al-Hajjaj; and another person of the same character on the authority of Abdullah b. Abbas told me that when they had fixed a day to come to a decision about the apostle, on the morning of that very day which was called the day of al-Zahma the devil came to them in the form of a handsome old man clad in a mantle and stood at the door of the house. When they saw him standing there they asked him who he was and he told them that he was a shaykh (sheik) from the highlands who had heard of their intention and had come to hear what they had to say and perhaps to give them counsel and advice. He was invited to enter and there he found the leaders of (the) Quraysh. From B. Abdu Shams were Utba and Shayba sons of Rabia; and Abu Sufyan. From B. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf Tuayma b. Adiy; Jubayr b. Mutim; and al-Harith b. Amir b. Naufal. From B. Abdul-Dar al-Nadr b. al-Harith b. Kalada. From B. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza Abul-Bakhtari b. Hisham and Zama b. al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib; and Hakim b. Hizam. From B. Makhzum Abu Jahl b. Hisham. From B. Sahm Nubayh and Munabbih the sons of al-Hajjaj. From B. Jumah Umayya b. Khalaf, and others including some who were not of (the) Quraysh.

The discussion opened with the statement that now that Mohammed had gained adherents outside the tribe they were no longer safe against a sudden attack and the meeting was to determine the best course to pursue. One advised that they should put him in irons behind bars and then wait until the same fate overtook him as befell his like, the poets Zuhayr and Nabigha, and others. The shaykh (sheik) objected to this on the ground that news would leak out that he was imprisoned, and immediately his followers would attack and snatch him away; then their numbers would so grow that they would destroy the authority of (the) Quraysh altogether. They must think of another plan. Another man suggested that they should drive him out of the country. They did not care where he went or what happened to him once he was out of sight and they were rid of him. They could then restore their social life to its former state. Again the shaykh (sheik) objected that it was not a good plan. His fine speech and beautiful diction and the compelling force of his message were such that if he settled with some Beduin tribe he would win them over so that they would follow him and come and attack them in their land and rob them of their position and authority and then he could do what he liked with them. They must think of a better plan.

Thereupon Abu Jahl said that he had a plan which had not been suggested hitherto, namely that each clan should provide a young, powerful, well-born, aristocratic warrior; that each of these should be provided with a sharp sword; then that each of them should strike a blow at him and kill him. Thus they would be relieved of him, and responsibility for his blood would lie upon all the clans. The B. Abdu Manaf could not fight them all and would have to accept the blood-money which they would all contribute to. The shaykh exclaimed: 'The man is right. In my opinion it is the only thing to do.' Having come to a decision the people dispersed.

Then Gabriel came to the apostle and said: 'Do not sleep tonight on the bed on which you usually sleep.' Before much of the night had passed they assembled at his door waiting for him to go to sleep so that they might fall upon him. When the apostle saw what they were doing he told Ali to lie on his bed and to wrap himself in his green Hadrami mantle; for no harm would befall him. He himself used to sleep in this mantle.

Yazid b. Ziyad on the authority of Mohammed b. Kab. al-Qurazi told me that when they were all outside his door Abu Jahl said to them: 'Mohammed alleges that if you follow him you will be kings of the Arabs and the Persians. Then after death you will be raised to gardens like those of the Jordan. But if you do not follow him you will be slaughtered, and when you are raised from the dead you will be burned in the fire of hell.' The apostle came out to them with a handful of dust saying: 'I do say that. You are one of them.' God took away their sight so that they could not see him and he began to sprinkle the dust on their heads as he recited these verses: 'Ya Sin, by the wise Koran. Thou art of those that art sent on a straight path, a revelation of the Mighty the Merciful' as far as the words 'And we covered them and they could not see' (Koran 36. 1-8.). When he had finished reciting not one of them but had dust upon his head. Then he went wherever he wanted to go and someone not of their company came up and asked them what they were waiting for there. When they said that they were waiting for Mohammed he said: 'But, good heavens, Mohammed came out to you and put dust on the head of every single man of you and then went off on his own affairs. Can't you see what has happened to you?' They put up their hands and felt the dust on their heads. Then they began to search and saw Ali on the bed wrapped in the apostle's mantle and said, 'By God it is Mohammed sleeping in his mantle.' Thus they remained until the morning when Ali rose from the bed and then they realised that the man had told them the truth.

Among the verses of the Koran which God sent down about that day and what they had agreed upon are: 'And when the unbelievers plot to shut thee up or to kill thee or to drive thee out they plot, but God plots also, and God is the best of plotters' (a clear hint for Muslims to use any means to overcome their opponents. Usually, al-taqiyyah [which is to obfuscate Muslim plans by lies and steering away from the topic, and even the real meaning of the Koran] is employed first, then overwhelm the opponent by undermine their social and governmental structures in order to bring Muslims to power and subjugate or kill the target from inside. Koran 8.30.); and 'Or they say he is a poet for whom we may expect the misfortune of fate. Say: Go on expecting for I am with you among the expectant' (Koran 52.30.) (260.).

It was then that God gave permission to his prophet to migrate. Now Abu Bakr was a man of means, and at the time that he asked the apostle's permission to migrate and he replied 'Do not hurry; perhaps God will give you a companion,' hoping that the apostle meant himself he bought two camels and kept them tied up in his house supplying them with fodder in preparation for departure.

A man whom I have no reason to doubt told me as from Urwa b. al-Zubayr that Aisha said: The apostle used to go to Abu Bakr's house every day either in the early morning or at night; but on the day when he was given permission to migrate from Mecca he came to us at noon, an hour at which he was not wont to come. As soon as he saw him Abu Bakr realised that something had happened to bring him at this hour. When he came in Abu Bakr gave up his seat to him. Only my sister Asma and I were there and the apostle asked him to send us away. 'But they are my two daughters and they can do no harm, may my father and my mother be your ransom,' said Abu Bakr. 'God has given me permission to depart and migrate,' he answered. 'Together?' asked Abu Bakr. 'Together,' he replied. And by God before that day I had never seen anyone weep for joy as Abu Bakr wept then. At last he said, 'O prophet of God, these are the two camels which I have held in readiness for this.' So they hired Abdullah b. Arqat, a man of B. I-Dil b. Bakr whose mother was a woman of B. Sahn b. Amr, and a polytheist to lead them on the way, and they handed over to him their two camels and he kept them and fed them until the appointed day came*.

(* At this point in Suhayli's commentary [ii, p.2], there is a note of considerable importance in the light it throws on the textual tradition of our author. It runs thus: Ibn Ishaq said [in a narration which does not come via Ibn Hisham] in a long, sound, tradition which I have shortened that when Abu Bakr migrated with the apostle he left his daughters behind in Mecca. When they got to Medina the apostle sent Zayd b. Haritha and Abu Rafi his freedman; and Abu Bakr sent Abdullah b. Urayqit together with 500 dirhems with which they bought a mount in Qudayd. Arrived at Mecca they brought away Sauda d. of Zamaa and Fatima and Umm Kulthum. Aisha said: My mother came out with them and Talha b. Ubaydallah travelling together; and when we were in Qudayd the camel on which my mother Umm Ruman and I were riding in a litter, bolted, and my mother began to cry Alas, my daughter, alas my husband! In the tradition of Yunus from Ibn Ishaq there is mention of this hadith. In it Aisha said I heard a voice but could see no one . . .', and she goes on to describe how they came to Medina and found the apostle building a mosque and houses for himself. I stayed with Abu Bakr's family and Sauda in her own house, and Abu Bakr asked the apostle if he would not build for his family, and when he said that he would if he had the money Abu Bakr gave him 12 okes and 20 dirhems.' This tradition from Aisha comes via Ibn Abul-Zinad from Hisham b. Urwa from his father.)

According to what I have been told none knew when the apostle left except Ali and Abu Bakr and the latter's family. I have heard that the apostle told Ali about his departure and ordered him to stay behind in Mecca in order to return goods which men had deposited with the apostle; for anyone in Mecca who had property which he was anxious about left it with him because of his notorious honesty and trustworthiness.

When the apostle decided to go he came to Abu Bakr and the two of them left by a window in the back of the latter's house and made for a cave on Thaur, a mountain below Mecca. Having entered, Abu Bakr ordered his son Abdullah to listen to what people were saying and to come to them by night with the day's news. He also ordered Amir b. Fuhayra, his freedman, to feed his flock by day and to bring them to them in the evening in the cave. Asma his daughter used to come at night with food to sustain them (270).

The two of them stayed in the cave for three days. When (the) Quraysh missed the apostle they offered a hundred she-camels to anyone who would bring him back. During the day Abdullah was listening to their plans and conversation and would come at night with the news. Amir used to pasture his flock with the shepherds of Mecca and when night fell would bring them to the cave where they milked them and slaughtered some. When Abdullah left them in the morning to go to Mecca, Amir would take the sheep over the same route to cover his tracks. When the three days had passed and men's interest waned, the man they had hired came with their camels and one of his own. Asma came too with a bag of provisions; but she had forgotten to bring a rope, so that when they started she could not tie the bag on the camel. Thereupon she undid her girdle and using it as a rope tied the bag to the saddle. For this reason she got the name 'She of the girdle' (271).

When Abu Bakr brought the two camels to the apostle he offered the better one to him and invited him to ride her. But the apostle refused to ride an animal which was not his own and when Abu Bakr wanted to give him it he demanded to know what he had paid for it and bought it from him. They rode off, and Abu Bakr carried Amir his freedman behind him to act as a servant on the journey.

I was told that Asma said, 'When the apostle and Abu Bakr had gone, a number of (the) Quraysh including Abu Jahl came to us and stood at the door. When I went out to them they asked where my father was and when I said that I did not know Abu Jahl, who was a rough dissolute man, slapped my face so violently that my earring flew off. Then they took themselves off and we remained for three days without news until a man of the Jinn came from the lower part of Mecca singing some verses in the Arab way. And lo people were following him and listening to his voice but they could not see him, until he emerged from the upper part of Mecca saying the while:

God the Lord of men give the best of his rewards
To the two companions who rested in the two tents of Umm Mabad.

They came with good intent and went off at nightfall.
May Mohammed's companion prosper!

May the place of the Banu Kab's woman bring them luck,
For she was a look-out for the believers' (272).

Asma continued: 'When we heard his words we knew that the apostle was making for Medina. There were four of them: the apostle, Abu Bakr, Amir, and Abdullah b. Arqat their guide' (273).

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr told me that his father Abbad told him that his grandmother Asma said: 'When the apostle went forth with Abu Bakr the latter carried all his money with him to the amount of five or six thousand dirhams. My grandfather Abu Quhafa who had lost his sight came to call on us saying that he thought that Abu Bakr had put us in a difficulty by taking off all his money. I told him that he had left us plenty of money. And I took some stones and put them in a niche where Abu Bakr kept his money; then I covered them with a cloth and took his hand and said, "Put your hand on this money, father." He did so and said: "There's nothing to worry about; he has done well in leaving you this, and you will have enough." In fact he had left us nothing, but I wanted to set the old man's mind at rest.'

Al-Zuhri told me that Abdul-Rahman b. Malik b. Jushum told him from his father, from his uncle Suraba b. Malik b. Jushum: 'When the apostle migrated (the) Quraysh offered a reward of a hundred camels to anyone who would bring him back. While I was sitting in my people's assembly one of our men came up and stopped saying, "By God, I have just seen three riders passing. I think they must be Mohammed and his companions." I gave him a wink enjoining silence and said "They are the so-and-so looking for a lost camel." "Perhaps so," he said and remained silent. I remained there for a short while; then I got up and went to my house and ordered my horse to be got ready, for it was tethered for me in the bottom of the valley. Then I asked for my weapons and they were brought from the back of the room. Then I took my divining arrows and went out, having put on my armour. Then I cast the divining arrows and out came the arrow which I did not want: "Do him no harm." (Some mark indicating this would be on the arrow.) I did the same again and got the same result. I was hoping to bring him back to (the) Quraysh so that I might win the hundred camels reward.

I rode in pursuit of him and when my horse was going at a good pace he stumbled and threw me. I thought this was somewhat unusual so I resorted to the divining arrows again and out came the detestable "Do him no harm." But I refused to be put off and rode on in pursuit. Again my horse stumbled and threw me, and again I tried the arrows with the same result (This story is cast in the familiar form of the story-teller: the same words are repeated again and again until the climax is reached. In the translation given above the sense is given—not the repetitions.). I rode on, and at last as I saw the little band my horse stumbled with me and its forelegs went into the ground and I fell. Then as it got its legs out of the ground smoke arose like a sandstorm. When I saw that I knew that he was protected against me and would have the upper hand. I called to them saying who I was and asking them to wait for me; and that they need have no concern, for no harm would come to them from me. The apostle told Abu Bakr to ask what I wanted and I said, "Write a document for me which will be a sign between you and me" and the apostle instructed Abu Bakr to do so.

'He wrote it on a bone, or a piece of paper, or a potsherd and threw it to me and I put it in my quiver and went back. I kept quiet about the whole affair until when the apostle conquered Mecca and finished with al-Taif and Hunayn I went out to give him the document and I met him in al-Jirana (A place near Mecca on the road to al-Taif.).

I got among a squadron of the Ansar cavalry and they began to beat me with their spears, saying, "Be off with you; what on earth do you want?" However, I got near to the apostle as he sat on his camel and his shank in his stirrup looked to me like the trunk of a palm-tree. I lifted my hand with the document, saying what it was and what my name was. He said "It is a day of repaying and goodness. Let him come near." So I approached him and accepted Islam. Then I remembered something that I wanted to ask him. All I can remember now is that I said "Stray camels used to come to my cistern which I kept full for my own camels. Shall I get a reward for having let them have water?" "Yes," he said, "for watering every thirsty creature there is a reward." Then I returned to my people and brought my alms to the apostle' (274).

Their guide, Abdullah b. Arqat, took them below Mecca; then along the shore until he crossed the road below Ufan; then below Amaj; then after passing Qudayd by way of al-Kharrar and Thaniyyatul-Marra to Liqf (275). He took them past the waterhole of Liqf, then down to Madlajatu Mahaj (276), then past Marjih Mahaj, then down to Marjih of Dhul-Ghadwayn (277), then the valley of Dhu Kashr; then by al-Jadajid, then al-Ajrad, then Dhu Salam of the valley of Ada, the waterhole of Tahin, then by al-Ababid (278), then by way of al-Fajja (279). Then he took them down to al-Arj; and one of their mounts having dropped behind, a man of Aslam, Aus b. Hujr by name, took the prophet to Medina on his camel which was called Ibn al-Rida. Sending with him a servant called Masud b. Hunayda. From Arj the guide took them to Thaniyyatul-Air (Yet a third possibility is al-Ghabir, Tabari 1137. following Urwa b. al-Zubayr. Cf. Yaq. in. 596 and Ibn Hisham's note.) (280) to the right of Rukuha until he brought them down to the valley of Rim; thence to Quba to B. Amr b. Auf on Monday 12th Rabiul-awwal at high noon (This paragraph occurs under the heading Ibn Hisham said'. But clearly it belongs to the original narrative, one of Ibn Hisham's characteristic interpolations occurring in the middle of it.).

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Abdul-Rahman b. Uwaymir b. Saida told me, saying, 'Men of my tribe who were the apostle's companions told me, "When we heard that the apostle had left Mecca and we were eagerly expecting his arrival we used to go out after morning prayers to our lava tract beyond our land to await him. This we did until there was no more shade left and then we went indoors in the hot season. On the day that the apostle arrived we had sat as we always had until there being no more shade we went indoors and then the apostle arrived. The first to see him was a Jew. He had seen what we were in the habit of doing and that we were expecting the arrival of the apostle and he called out at the top of his voice 'O Banu Qayla your luck has come!' So we went out to greet the apostle who was in the shallow of a palm-tree with Abu Bakr who was of like age. Now most of us had never seen the apostle and as the people crowded round him they did not know him from Abu Bakr until the shade left him and Abu Bakr got up with his mantle and shielded him from the sun, and then we knew."

The apostle, so they say, stayed with Kulthum b. Hidm brother of the B. Amr b. Auf, one of the B. Ubayd. Others say he stayed with Sad b. Khaythama. Those who assert the former say that it was only because he left Kulthum to go and sit with the men in Sad's house (for he was a bachelor and housed the apostle's companions who were bachelors) that it is said that he stayed with Sad, for his house used to be called the house of the bachelors. But God knows the truth of the matter.

Abu Bakr stayed with Khubayb b. Isaf, one of the B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj in al-Sunh. Some say it was with Kharija b. Zayd b. Abu Zuhayr, brother of the B. al-Harith.

Ali stayed in Mecca for three days and nights until he had restored the deposits which the apostle held. This done he joined the apostle and lodged with him at Kulthum's house. He stayed in Quba only a night or two. He used to say that in Quba there was an unmarried Muslim woman and he noticed that a man used to come to her in the middle of the night and knock on her door: she would come out and he would give her something. He felt very suspicious of him and asked her what was the meaning of this nightly performance as she was a Muslim woman without a husband. She told him that the man was Sahl b. Hunayf b. Wahib who knew that she was all alone and he used to break up the idols of his tribe at night and bring her the pieces to use as fuel. Ali used to talk of this incident until Sahl died in Iraq while he was with him. Hind b. Sad b. Sahl b. Hunayf told me this story from what Ali said.

The apostle stayed in Quba among B. Amr b. Auf from Monday to Thursday and then he laid the foundation of his mosque. Then God brought him out from them on the Friday. The B. Amr allege that he stayed longer with them, and God knows the truth of the matter. Friday prayer found the apostle among B. Salim b. Auf and he prayed it in the mosque which is in the bottom of the Wadi Ranuna'. This was the first Friday prayer that he prayed in Medina.

Itban b. Malik and Abbas b. Ubada b. Nadla with some of B. Salim b. Auf came and asked him to live with them and enjoy their wealth and protection, but he said, 'Let her go her way,' for his camel was under God's orders; so they let her go until she came to the home of B. Bayada, where he was met by Ziyad b. Labid and Farwa b. Amr with some of their clansmen. They gave the same invitation and met with the same reply.

The same thing happened with B. Saida when Sad b. Ubada and al-Mundhir b. Amr invited him to stay; and with B. I-Harith b. al-Khazraj represented by Sad b. al-Rabi and Kharija b. Zayd and Abdullah b. Rawaha; and with B. Adiy b. al-Najjar (who were his nearest maternal relatives the mother of Abdul-Muttalib Salma d. Amr being one of their women), being represented by Salit b. Qays and Abu Salit and Usayra b. Abu Kharija. Finally the camel came to the home of B. Malik b. al-Najjar when it knelt at the door of his mosque, which at that time was used as a drying-place for dates and belonged to two young orphans of B. al-Najjar of B. Malik clan, who were under the protection of Muadh b. Afra, Sahl and Suhayl the sons of Amr. When it knelt the apostle did not alight, and it got up and went a short distance.

The apostle left its rein free, not guiding it, and it turned in its tracks and returned to the place where it had knelt at first and knelt there again. It shook itself and lay exhausted with its chest upon the ground. The apostle alighted and Abu Ayyub Khalid b. Zayd took his baggage into the house (Tabari 1259.7.: The Ansar invited him to stay with them, but he said A man [stays] with his baggage') and the apostle stayed with him. When he asked to whom the date-store belonged Muadh b. Afra told him that the owners were Sahl and Suhayl the sons of Amr who were orphans in his care and that he could take it for a mosque and he would pay the young men for it.

The apostle ordered that a mosque should be built, and he stayed with Abu Ayyub until the mosque and his houses were completed. The apostle joined in the work to encourage the Muslims to work and the muhajinn and the ansar laboured hard. One of the Muslims rhymed:

If we sat down while the prophet worked
It could be said that we had shirked.

As they built, the Muslims sang a rajaz verse:
There's no life but the life of the next world.

O God, have mercy on the ansar and the muhajira (281).

The apostle used to sing it in the form
There's no life but the life of the next world.

O God, have mercy on the muhajirin and the ansar*.
(* Guillaume: By this alteration the rhyme and rhythm were destroyed.)

Ammar b. Yasir came in when they had overloaded him with bricks, saying, 'They are killing me. They load me with burdens they cannot carry themselves.' Umm Salama the prophet's wife said: I saw the apostle run his hand through his hair—for he was a curly-haired man—and say Alas Ibn Sumayya! It is not they who will kill you but a wicked band of men (This prophecy is said to have been fulfilled when Ammar was killed at Siffin; Suhayli, ii p. 3).'

Ali composed a rajaz verse on that day:

There's one that labours night and day
To build us mosques of brick and clay
And one who turns from dust away! (282.)

And Ammar learned it and began to chant it.

When he persisted in it one of the prophet's companions thought that it was he who was referred to in it according to what Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai told me from Ibn Ishaq. The latter had actually named the man*.

(* Suhayli says: Ibn Ishaq did name the man, but Ibn Hisham preferred not to do so as not to mention one of the prophet's companions in discreditable circumstances. [Cf. what Ibn Hisham says in his introduction.] Therefore it can never be right to inquire after his identity. Abu Dharr says: Ibn Ishaq did name the man and said 'This man was Uthman b. Affan. The Cairo editors say that in the Mawahib al-laduniya [al-Qastallani, d. A.D. 1517] the man is said to be Uthman b. Mazun. This late writer may safely be ignored on this point.)

He said: I have heard what you have been saying for a long time, O Ibn Sumayya, and by God I shall hit you on the nose! Now he had a stick in his hand and the apostle was angry and said, 'What is wrong between them and Ammar? He invites them to Paradise while they invite him to hell. Ammar is as dear to me as my own face. If a man behaves like this he will not be forgiven, so avoid him.'

Sufyan b. Uyayna mentioned on the authority of Zakariya from al-Shabl that the first man to build a mosque was Ammar b. Yasir.

The apostle lived in Abu Ayyub's house until his mosque and dwellinghouses were built; then he removed to his own quarters.

Yazid b. Abu Habib from Marthad b. Abdullah al-Yazani from Abu Ruhm al-Samai told me that Abu Ayyub told him: 'When the apostle came to lodge with me in my house he occupied the ground floor, while I and Umm Ayyub were above. I said to him, "O prophet of God, you are dear to me as my parents, and I am distressed that I should be above and you below me. So leave your present quarters and exchange places with us." He replied: "O Abu Ayyub, it is more convenient for me and my guests that we should be on the ground floor of the house." So we remained as we were. Once we broke a jar of water and Umm Ayyub and I took one of our garments to mop up the water in fear that it would drop on the apostle and cause him annoyance. We had no cloth which we could use.

'We used to prepare his evening meal and send it to him. When he returned what was left, Umm Ayyub and I used to touch the spot where his hand had rested and eat from that in the hope of gaining a blessing. One night we prepared for him onions or garlic and the apostle returned it and I saw no mark of his hand in it. I went to him in some anxiety to tell him of our practice and that this time there was no mark of his hand, and he replied that he had perceived the smell of the vegetables and he was a man who had to speak confidentially to people but that we should eat them. So we ate the dish and never sent him onions again.'

The emigrants followed one another to join the apostle, and none was left in Mecca but those who had apostatised or been detained. Whole families with their property did not come together except the B. Mazun from B. Jumah; the B. Jahsh b. Riab, allies of B. Umayya; and the B. Bukayr from B. Sad b. Layth, allies of B. Adiy b. Kab. Their houses in Mecca were locked up when they migrated, leaving no inhabitant.

When the B. Jahsh gave up their house Abu Sufyan went and sold it to Amr b. al-Qama brother of B. Amir b. Luayy. When the owners heard of this Abdullah b. Jahsh told the apostle of it, and he replied: Are you not pleased that God will give you a better house in Paradise? And when he answered Yes, he said, 'Then you have it.' When the apostle got possession of Mecca Abu Ahmad spoke to him about their house; and the apostle delayed his reply. People said to him, 'The apostle dislikes your reopening the question of your property which you lost in God's service, so don't speak to him about it again.' Abu Ahmad said in reference to Abu Sufyan:

Tell Abu Sufyan of a matter he will live to regret.

You sold your cousin's house to pay a debt you owed.

Your ally by God the Lord of men swears an oath:

Take it, Take it, may [your treachery] cling to you like the ring of the dove.

The apostle stayed in Medina from the month of Rabiul-awwal to Safar of the following year until his mosque and his quarters were built. This tribe of the Ansar all accepted Islam and every house of the Ansar accepted Islam except Khatma, Waqif, Wail, and Umayya who were the Aus Allah, a clan of Aus who clung to their heathenism.

The first address which the apostle gave according to what I heard on the authority of Abu Salama b. Abdul-Rahman —God save me from attributing to the apostle words which he did not say— was as follows: he praised and glorified God as was His due and then said: O men, send forward- (good works) for yourselves. You know, by God, that one of you may be smitten and will leave his flock without a shepherd. Then his Lord will say to him —there will be no interpreter or chamberlain to veil him from Him— Did not My apostle come to you with a message, and did not I give you wealth and show you favour? What have you sent forward for yourself? Then will he look to right and left and see nothing; he will look in front of him and see nothing but hell. He who can shield his face from the fire even with a little piece of date let him do so ; and he who cannot find that then with a good word; for the good deed will be rewarded tenfold yea to twice seven hundred fold (Or, perhaps simply 'seven hundredfold'. Here, as in the rest of the sermon, there is an allusion to the Koran. Cf. 34-36 where commentators differ as to the exact meaning of 'dif'). Peace be upon you and God's mercy and blessing.

Then the apostle preached on another occasion as follows: Praise belongs to God whom I praise and whose aid I implore. "We take refuge in God from our own sins and from the evil of our acts. He whom God guides none can lead astray; and whom He leads astray none can guide. I testify that there is no God but He alone, He is without companion. The finest speech is the Book of God. He to whom God has made it seem glorious and made him enter Islam after unbelief, who has chosen it above all other speech of men, doth prosper. It is the finest speech and the most penetrating. Love what God loves. Love God with all your hearts, and weary not of the word of God and its mention. Harden not your hearts from it. Out of everything that God creates He chooses and selects; the actions He chooses He calls khira ; the people He chooses He calls mustafid; and the speech He chooses He calls salih. From everything that is brought to man there, is the lawful and the unlawful. Worship God and associate naught with Him ; fear Him as He ought to be feared ; Carry out loyally towards God what you say with your mouths. Love one another in the spirit of God. Verily God is angry when His covenant is broken. Peace be upon you.

THE COVENANT BETWEEN THE MUSLIMS AND THE MEDINANS AND WITH THE JEWS (MOHAMMED APPEARS AS LAW-GIVER FOR THE FIRST TIME)

The apostle wrote* a document concerning the emigrants and the helpers in which he made a friendly agreement with the Jews and established them in their religion and their property, and stated the reciprocal obligations, as follows: In the name of God the Compassionate, the Merciful. (* That Mohammed neither could read nor write is a false claim by those who wish to obfuscate Mohammed's skills. This would make his 'revelations' more believable, they thought. As a skilled merchant, he must have been able to read and write treaties. He probably could read and speak Aramaic as well and was quite able to read the Bible or other religious texts, such as copies similar to those we call the Qumran Scrolls. That would explain, for the greatest part, the uncompromising attitude of Islam which is very similar to the attitude of the Jews of the ancient Jewish Messianic Movement.) This is a (document from Mohammed the prophet [governing the relations] between the believers and Muslims of (the) Quraysh and Yathrib, and those who followed them and joined them and laboured with them. They are one community (umma) to the exclusion of all men. The Quraysh emigrants according to their present custom shall pay the bloodwit within their number and shall redeem their prisoners with the kindness and justice common among believers.

The B. Auf, according to their present custom, shall pay the bloodwit they paid in heathenism; every section shall redeem its prisoners with the kindness and justice common among believers. The B. Saida, the B. I-Hirith, and the B. Jusham, and the B. al-Najjar likewise (These all belong to al-Aus).

The B. Amr b. Auf, the B. al-Nabit and the B. al-Aus likewise (These all belong to al-Khazraj).

Believers shall not leave anyone destitute among them by not paying his redemption money or bloodwit in kindness (283).

A believer shall not take as an ally the freedman of another Muslim against him. The God-fearing believers shall be against the rebellious or him who seeks to spread injustice, or sin or enmity, or corruption between believers; the hand of every man shall be against him even if he be a son of one of them. A believer shall not slay a believer for the sake of an unbeliever, nor shall he aid an unbeliever against a believer. God's protection is one, the least of them may give protection to a stranger on their behalf. Believers are friends one to the other to the exclusion of outsiders.

To the Jew who follows us belong help and equality. He shall not be wronged nor shall his enemies be aided. The peace of the believers is indivisible. No separate peace shall be made when believers are fighting in the way of God. (This passage was created by Mohammed when he still had the conviction that the Arabic Jews and their Messianic Movement were in accord with Islam. These were not the Jews of the Roman empire who became the peaceful modern Jews. These were in fact the descendants of those fierce fighters that fought at least a dozen wars against the Roman Empire since the times of Emperor Flavius Vespasianus who fought the 1st Roman-Jewish War from 66-73 AD. The Jewish survivors are the ancestors of those militant Jews Mohammed was talking about and from whom he also most likely descended.

Mohammed's so-called migration coincides with The Tenth Jewish-Roman War (602-630 AD.) that was part of the Roman-Persian War (602-628 AD.) because the Messianic Jews were first fighting on side of the Persians. Due to pressure from Persian Christians [Mandaeans and probably also Manichaeans], the Persians abandoned the Jews after a few years and so they found themselves fighting a futile war against Romans, Persians and then against Mohammed's troops as well.) Conditions must be fair and equitable to all. In every foray a rider must take another behind him. The believers must avenge the blood of one another shed in the way of God. The God-fearing believers enjoy the best and most upright guidance. No polytheist (Presumably the heathen Arabs of Medina are referred to.) shall take the property or person of (the) Quraysh under his protection nor shall he intervene against a believer. Whosoever is convicted of killing a believer without good reason shall be subject to retaliation unless the next of kin is satisfied (with blood-money), and the believers shall be against him as one man, and they are bound to take action against him.

It shall not be lawful to a believer who holds by what is in this document and believes in God and the last day to help an evil-doer* (* 'Muhdith'. Commentators do not explain the word 'evil-doer' and it is somewhat obscure. Possibly it means Adulterer here, though a wider meaning, such as 'Kafir' or 'vile disbeliever' suits the context better. Cf. Wüstenfeld 690.) or to shelter him. The curse of God and His anger on the day of resurrection will be upon him if he does, and neither repentance nor ransom will be received from him. Whenever you differ about a matter it must be referred to God and to Mohammed. ( See: Lane, 1682a. Originally the phrase referred to the bloodwit. 'Sarf' meant compensation and Adl' the slaying of a man in revenge. Finally it came to mean anything excessive, so that here it would be sufficient to say 'no excuse would be received from him'.)

The Jews shall contribute to the cost of war so long as they are fighting alongside the believers. The Jews of the B. Auf are one community with the believers (the Jews have their religion and the Muslims have theirs), their freedmen and their persons except those who behave unjustly and sinfully, for they hurt but themselves and their families. The same applies to the Jews of the B. al-Najjar, B. al-Harith, B. Saida, B. Jusham, B. al-Aus, B. Thalaba, and the Jafna, a clan of the Thalaba and the B. al-Shutayba. Loyalty is a protection against treachery (Wellhausen, Skizzen und Vorarbeiten, v, Berlin, 1889, p. 70. renders 'Lauterkeit steht vor Trug' and accuses Sprenger and Krehl of inexactness. S. has 'sie müssen loyal und nicht schlecht handeln' where a general truth is in question. Suhayli says the., meaning is 'Piety and loyalty stand in the way of treachery' [ii. 17]). The freedmen of Thalaba are as themselves. The close friends of the Jews are as themselves. None of them shall go out to war save with the permission of Mohammed, but he shall not be prevented from taking revenge for a wound. He who slays a man without warning slays himself and his household, unless it be one who has wronged him, for God will accept that. The Jews must bear their expenses and the Muslims their expenses. Each must help the other against anyone who attacks the people of this document. They must seek mutual advice and consultation, and loyalty is a protection against treachery. A man is not liable for his ally's misdeeds. The wronged must be helped. The Jews must pay with the believers so long as war lasts. Yathrib shall be a sanctuary for the people of this document. A stranger under protection shall be as his host doing no harm and committing no crime. A woman shall only be given protection with the consent of her family. If any dispute or controversy likely to cause trouble should arise it must be referred to God and to Mohammed the apostle of God. God accepts what is nearest to piety and goodness in this document. (The Quraysh and their helpers shall not be given protection. The contracting parties are bound to help one another against any attack on Yathrib. If they are called to make peace and maintain it they must do so; and if they make a similar demand on the Muslims it must be carried out except in the case of a holy war. Every one shall have his portion from the side to which he belongs; the Jews of al-Aus, their freedmen and themselves have the same standing with the people of this document in pure loyalty from the people of this document (284).

Loyalty is a protection against treachery: He who acquires aught acquires it for himself. God approves of this document. This deed will not protect the unjust and the sinner. The man who goes forth to fight and the man who stays at home in the city (Or In Medina). Whether Medina is meant or not, the passage stands self-condemned as a later interpolation because the town is consistently called Yathrib. There is a similar problem with 'Mecca' which is mentioned in the Koran only one time, and this well might be an interpolation too in order to present a conclusive story.) is safe unless he has been unjust and sinned. God is the protector of the good and God-fearing man and Mohammed is the apostle of God.

BROTHERHOOD BETWEEN EMIGRANTS AND HELPERS

The apostle instituted brotherhood between his fellow emigrants and the helpers, and he said according to what I have heard—and I appeal to God lest I should attribute to him words that he did not say—'Let each of you take a brother in God.' He himself took Ali by the hand and said, 'This is my brother.' So God's apostle, the lord of the sent ones and leader of the God-fearing, apostle of the Lord of the worlds, the peerless and unequalled, and Ali b. Abu Talib became brothers. Hamza, the lion of God and the lion of his apostle and his uncle, became the brother of Zayd b. Haritha the apostle's freedman. To him Hamza gave his last testament on the day of Uhud when battle was imminent in case he should meet his death. Jafar b. Abu Talib—the 'one of the wings' who was to fly in Paradise—and Muadh b. Jabal brother of B. Salama became brothers (285).

The pairs were arranged thus:

Abu Bakr and Kharija b. Zuhayr brother of B. I-Harith b. al-Khazraj.

Umar and Tiban b. Malik brother of B. Salim . . . b. al-Khazraj.

Abu Ubayda, Amir b. Abdullah and Sad b. Muadh b. al-Numan.

Abdul-Rahman b. Auf and Sad b. al-Rabi brother of B. al-Harith.

Al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam and Salama b. Salama b. Waqsh brother of B. Abdul-Ashhal though others say that he linked up with Abdullah b. Masud the ally of the B. Zuhra.

Uthman b. Affan and Aus b. Thabit b. al-Mundhir brother of B. al-Najjar. Talha b. Ubaydullah and Kab b. Malik brother of the B. Salama.

Sad b. Zayd b. Amr b. Nufayl and Ubayy b. Kab brother of the B. al-Najjar.

Musab b. Umayr and Abu Ayyub Khalid b. Zayd brother of the B. al-Najjar Abu Hudhayfa b. Utba and Abbad b. Bishr b. Waqsh, brother of the B. Abdul-Ashhal.

Ammar b. Yasir ally of the B. Makhzum and Hudhayfa b. al-Yaman brother of B. Abdu Abs ally of the B. Abdul-Ashhal. (Others say that Thabit b. Qays b. al-Shamma brother of the B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj the prophet's orator and Ammar b. Yasir.)

Abu Dharr, Burayr b. Junada al-Ghifari and al-Mundhir b. Amr, 'he who hastened to his death', brother of B. Saida of al-Khazraj (286).

Hatib b. Abu Baltaa, ally of B. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza and Uwaym b. Saida brother of B. Amr b. Auf.

Salman the Persian and Abul-Darda Uwaymir b. Thalaba brother of B. al-Harith (287). Some say Uwaymir was the son of Amir or of Zayd.

Bilal freedman of Abu Bakr and the apostle's muezzin and Abu Ruwayha* Abdullah b. Abdul-Rahman al-Khathami, more precisely one of the Faza'. (* A kunya characteristic of negro, 'the father of the faint smell'. Cf. H. Lammens, L'Arabie occidentale avant l'Hégire, p. 246.) These are the men who were named to us as those to whom the apostle made his companions brothers.

When Umar compiled the registers in Syria, Bilal had gone there and remained as a combatant. He asked him with whom he wished to be grouped and he said with Abu Ruwayha. I will never leave him, for the apostle established brotherhood between us.' So he was linked with him and the register of the Abyssinians was linked with Khatham because of Bilal's position with them, and this arrangement continues to this day in Syria.

ABU UMAMA

During the months in which the mosque was being built Abu Umama Asad b. Zurara died; he was seized by diphtheria and a rattling in the throat. Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm told me on the authority of Yahya b. Abdullah b. Abdul-Rahman b. Asad b. Zurara that the apostle said: 'How unfortunate is the death of Abu Umama! The Jews and the Arab hypocrites are sure to say "If he were a prophet his companion would not die" and (truly) I have no power from God for myself or for my companion (to avert death).' Asim b. Umar b. Qatada al-Ansari told me that when Abu Umama died the B. al-Najjar came to the apostle, for Abu Umama was their leader, saying that he held the high rank the apostle knew of and would he appoint someone from among them to act in his place; to which the apostle replied, 'You are my maternal uncles, and we belong together so I will be your leader.' The apostle did not want to prefer any one of them to the others. Henceforth the B. al-Najjar regarded themselves as highly honoured in having the apostle as their leader.

THE CALL TO PRAYER

When the apostle was firmly settled in Medina and his brethren the emigrants were gathered to him and the affairs of the helpers were arranged Islam became firmly established. Prayer was instituted, the alms tax and fasting were prescribed, legal punishments fixed, the forbidden and the permitted prescribed, and Islam took up its abode with them. It was this clan of the helpers who 'have taken up their abode (in the city of the prophet) and in the faith' (Koran 59.9.). When the apostle first came, the people gathered to him for prayer at the appointed times without being summoned. At first the apostle thought of using a trumpet like that of the Jews who used it to summon to prayer. Afterwards he disliked the idea and ordered a clapper to be made, so it was duly fashioned to be beaten when the Muslims should Pray.

Meanwhile Abdullah b. Zayd b. Thalaba b. Abdu Rabbih brother of B. al-Harith heard a voice in a dream, and came to the apostle saying: A phantom visited me in the night. There passed by me a man wearing two green garments carrying a clapper in his hand, and I asked him to sell it to me. When he asked me what I wanted it for I told him that it was to summon people to prayer, whereupon he offered to show me a better way: it was to say thrice "Allah Akbar. I bear witness that there is no God but Allah I bear witness that Mohammed is the apostle of God. Come to prayer. Come to prayer. Come to divine service*. Come to divine service. Allah Akbar. Allah Akbar. There is no God but Allah".

(* Falah. This word is generally rendered 'salvation' or 'prosperity'; cf. Lane, 2430a. But it has always seemed to me that it must be an arabised form of the Aramaic 'pulhana', divine worship. Its original meaning is clearly cutting, especially ploughing. Among Aramaic-speaking Jews and Christians it was connected with the service of God. Between the words 'Come to the falah and Allah Akbar' the Shia cry 'Come to the best work (amal)' which must surely be a memory of the original meaning of falah. Ibn Sayyidil-Nas Uyunul-Athar, Cairo, 1356, i. 204, quotes this story in what appears to be a more primitive form.)

When the apostle was told of this he said that it was a true vision if God so willed it, and that he should go with Bilal and communicate it to him so that he might call to prayer thus, for he had a more penetrating voice. When Bilal acted as muezzin Umar heard him in his house and came to the apostle dragging his cloak on the ground and saying that he had seen precisely the same vision. The apostle said, 'God be praised for that!'

I was told of this tradition by Mohammed b. Ibrahim b. al-Harith on the authority of Mohammed b. Abdullah b. Zayd b. Thalaba himself (288).

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr told me on the authority of Urwa b. al-Zubayr from a woman of B. al-Najjar who said: My house was the highest of those round the mosque and Bilal used to give the call from the top of it at dawn every day. He used to come before daybreak and would sit on the housetop waiting for the dawn. When he saw it he would stretch his arms and say, 'O God, I praise thee and ask thy help for (the) Quraysh that they may accept thy religion.' I never knew him to omit these words for a single night.

ABU QAYS B. ABO ANAS

When the apostle was established in his house and God had manifested his religion therein and made him glad with the company of the emigrants and helpers Abu Qays spoke the following verses (289).

He was a man who had lived as a monk in heathen days and worn a black mantle of camel-hair, given up idols, washed himself after impurity, kept himself clean from women in their courses. He had thought of adopting Christianity but gave it up and went into a house of his and made a mosque of it, allowing no unclean person to enter. Tie said that he worshipped the Lord of Abraham when he abandoned idols and loathed them. When the apostle came to Medina he became a good Muslim. He was an old man, who always spoke the truth and glorified God in paganism. He composed some excellent poetry and it was he who said:

Said Abu Qays when near to depart
Perform all you can of my behest.

I enjoin piety, the fear of God, and
The preservation of your honour, but piety comes first.

If your people hold authority envy them not.

If you yourselves rule, be just.

If a calamity befalls your people,

Put yourselves in the front of your tribe.

If a heavy duty falls on them help them
And bear the burdens they put upon you.
If you are poor, practise austerly.
If you have money be generous with it (290).

He also said:

Praise God at every dawn
When His sun rises and at the new moon.
He knows what is clear and not clear to us.
What our Lord says is without error.
His are the birds which fly to and fro and shelter
In nests in their mountain retreats.
His are the wild creatures of the desert
Which you see on the dunes and in the shade of sandhills.

Him the Jews worship and follow
Every dreary custom you can think of*.
(* A. Dh. explains that Udāl', a wearisome incurable disease, is a metaphor.)

Him the Christians worship and keep Every feast and festival to their Lord.
His is the self-denying monk you see,
A prisoner of misery though once right happy.
My sons, sever not the bonds of kinship.
Be generous though they are mean.

( Commentators differ on the meaning of this phrase. Another possibility is: 'Though their pedigree is short their hearts are generous'. All through these verses one feels that the wretched rhymester is imprisoned within his rhymes.)

Fear God in dealing with defenceless orphans
Often the forbidden is regarded as lawful.
Know that the orphan has an All-knowing protector
Who guides aright without being asked.
Devour not the wealth of orphans,
A mighty protector watches over the same.
My sons, transgress not the proper limits
Transgressing the bounds brings one to a halt.
O my sons, trust not the days.
Beware their treachery and the passage of time.
Know that it consumes all creation,
Both the new and the old.

Live your lives in piety and godliness.
Abandon obscenity and hold fast to what is right
(The influence of Aramaic Syriac as in the words shammasa and tukhum is clear, and some of the verses are reminiscent of the Psalms.)

In the following poem he mentioned how God had honoured them with Islam and His special favour in sending His apostle to them:

He abode among (the) Quraysh some ten years
Hoping for a friend to help him.
He displayed himself to those who came to the fairs
But found none to offer him hospitality.
But when he came to us God displayed his religion
And he became happy and contented in Medina (Tiba, 'the Fragrant', is the ancient honorific of Medina. Cf. Hassan's opening line on p. 1022, In Tiba are the monuments of his luminous sojourn').

He found friends and ceased to long for home
And was plainly helped by God.
He told us what Noah said to his people
And what Moses answered when he was called.
None near at hand need he fear
And those afar he recked not of.

We spent on him the best of our possessions,
Sparing not our lives in war at his side.
We know that there is nought beside God
And we know that God is the best guide.
We shall fight any man that fights Him,
Be he our dearest friend.
In every mosque when I pray to Thee
I say Blessed art Thou (Oft have I mentioned Thy name).

I say when I traverse a land I fear
'Mercy! Let not my enemies triumph over me.'
Go where you will death comes in many guises

And you cannot live for ever.
A man does not know how to protect himself
Unless he makes God his protector.
The palm that needs water cares naught for its owner
If it has moisture, though he be dead (291).

(Tabari 1253:) All b. Mujahid said on the authority of Mohammed b. Ishaq from al-Zuhri and from Mohammed b. Salih from al-Shabi that they both said:
The B. Ismail dated from the fire of Abraham and the building of the temple when Abraham and Ismail built it; then they dated from the building of the temple until they dispersed, and it happened that whenever people left Tihama they dated from their leaving it, and those who remained in Tihama of B. Ismail used to date from the going out of Sa'd and Nahd and Juhayna of B. Zayd from Tihama until Kab b. Luayy died.
Then they dated from the death of Ka'b to the elephant.
The dating from the time of the elephant continued until Umar b. al-Khattab dated from the Hijra which was the year 17 or 18. (This paragraph is part of a long chapter which Tabari devotes to the question of chronology in reference to the principal events in the prophet's life. It is put here because the last passage he quotes from Ibn Ishaq is the poem of Abu Qays mentioning the length of the prophet's sojourn in Mecca after the beginning of his mission; the connexion with chronology is obvious.)

THE NAMES OF THE JEWISH ADVERSARIES

About this time the Jewish rabbis showed hostility to the apostle in envy, hatred, and malice, because God had chosen His apostle from the Arabs. They were joined by men from al-Aus and al-Khazraj who had obstinately clung to their heathen religion. They were hypocrites, clinging to the polytheism of their fathers denying the resurrection; yet when Islam appeared and their people flocked to it they were compelled to pretend to accept it to save their lives. But in secret they were hypocrites whose inclination was towards the Jews because they considered the apostle a liar and strove against Islam.

It was the Jewish rabbis who used to annoy the apostle with questions and introduce confusion, so as to confound the truth with falsity. The Koran used to come down in reference to these questions of theirs, though some of the questions about what was allowed and forbidden came from the Muslims themselves.
These are the names of those Jews:

From B. al-Nadir: Huyayy b. Akhjab and his brothers Abu Yasir and Judayy; Sallam b. Mishkam; Kinana b. al-Rabi b. Abul-Huqayq; Sallam b. Abul-Huqayq Abu Raft al-Awar whom the apostle's companions killed in Khaybar; al-Rabi b. al-Rabi b.
Abul-Huqayq; Amr b. Jahhash; Kab b. al-Ashraf who belonged to Tay, of the clan of B. Nabhan, his mother being from B. al-Nadir; al-Hajjaj b. Amr, an ally of Kab; and Kardam b. Qays, an ally of Kab.

From B. Thalaba b. al-Fityaun: Abdullah b. Suriya the one-eyed who was the most learned man of his time in the Hijaz in Torah studies; Ibn Saluba; and Mukhayriq their rabbi who became a Muslim.

From B. Qaynuqa: Zayd b. al-Lasit (291); Sad b.
Hunayf; Mahmud b. Sayhan; Uzayr b. Abu Uzayr; and Abdullah b. Sayf (292). Suwayd b. al-Harith; Rifaa b.
Qays; Finhas; Ashya; Numan b. Ada; Bahriy b. Amr; Shas b. Adiy; Shas b. Qays; Zayd b. al-Harith; Numan
b. Amr; Sukayn b. Abu Sukayn; Adiy b. Zayd; Numan
b. Abu Aufa; Abu Anas; Mahmud b. Dahya; Malik b.
Sayf (293). Kab b. Rashid; Azar; Rafi b. Abu Rafi; Khalid; Azar b. Abu Azar (294); Rafi b. Haritha; Rafi
b. Huraymila; Rafi b. Kharija; Malik b. Auf; Rifaa b.
Zayd b. al-Tabut Abdullah b. Salam b. al-Harith; who was their rabbi and most learned man. His name was al-Husayn. The apostle named him Abdullah when he accepted Islam.

From B. Qurayza: al-Zubayr b. Bata b. Wahb; Azzal
b. Shamwil; Kab b. Asad responsible on behalf of his tribe for the agreement which was broken in the year of the Parties; Shamwil b. Zayd; Jabal b. Amr b.

Sukayna; al-Nahham b. Zayd; Qardam b. Kab; Wahb
b. Zayd; Nafi b. Abu Nafi; Abu Nafi; Adiy b. Zayd; al-Harith b. Auf; Kardam b. Zayd; Usama b. Habib; Rafi
b. Rumayla; Jabal b. Abu Qushayr; Wahb b. Yahudha.

From B. Zurayq: Labid b. Asam who bewitched the apostle of God so that he could not come at his wives*.
(* meaning that he could not uncover, encounter or approach his wives sexually. In commenting on this Suhayli asserts that the tradition is sound and is accepted by the traditionists. He found in the Jami of Muammar b. Rashid the statement that the spell lasted for a year. The prophets were not preserved from physical and psychological afflictions.)

From B. Haritha: Kinana b. Suriya.

B. Amr b. Auf; Qardam b. Amr.

From B. al-Najjar: Silsila b. Barham.

These were the Jewish rabbis, the rancorous opponents of the apostle and his companions, the men who asked questions, and stirred up trouble against Islam to try to extinguish it, except for Abdullah b.
Salam and Mukhayriq (It is noteworthy how few Hebrew names are to be found among the Jews of Medina. Their ancestors obviously have converted to Judaism.)

ABDULLAH B. SALAM ACCEPTS ISLAM

I was told the story of Abdullah b. Salam, a learned rabbi, by one of his family. He said: 'When I heard about the apostle I knew by his description, name, and the time at which he appeared that he was the one we were waiting for, and I rejoiced greatly thereat, though I kept silent about it until the apostle came to Medina. When he stayed in Quba among the B. Amr b.
Auf a man came with the news while I was working at the top of a palm-tree and my aunt Khalida d. al-Harith was sitting below. When I heard the news I cried Allah Akbar and my aunt said, "Good gracious, if you had heard that Moses b. Imran had come you could not have made more fuss!" "Indeed, aunt," I said,
"he is the brother of Moses and follows his religion, being sent with the same mission." She asked, "Is he really the prophet who we have been told will be sent at this very time?" and she accepted my assurance that he was. Straightway I went to the apostle and became a Muslim, and when I returned to my house I ordered my family to do the same.

I concealed the matter from the Jews, and then went to the apostle and said, "The Jews are a nation of liars and I wish you would take me into one of your houses and hide me from them. Then ask them about me so that they may tell you the position I hold among them before they know that I have become a Muslim. For if they know it beforehand they will utter slanderous lies against me." The prophet housed me; the Jews came; and the apostle asked them about my standing among them. They said: "He is our chief, and the son of our chief; our rabbi, and our learned man." When they said this I emerged and said: "O Jews, fear God and accept what He has sent you. For by God you know that he is the apostle of God. You will find him described in your Torah and even named. I testify that he is the apostle of God, I believe in him, I hold him to be true, and I acknowledge him." They accused me of lying and reviled me. Then I reminded the apostle that I had said that they would do this, for they were a treacherous, lying, and evil people. I publicly proclaimed my conversion and my household and my aunt Khalida followed suit.'

THE STORY OF MUKHAYRIQ

He was a learned rabbi owning much property in date palms. He recognised the apostle by his description and his own learning, and he felt a predilection for his religion (Presumably 'Mohammed's religion'; the pronoun is ambiguous.)
until on the day of Uhud, which fell on the sabbath, he reminded the Jews that they were bound to help
Mohammed. They objected that it was the sabbath.

'May you have no sabbath (Or, perhaps, 'You have no sabbath'),' he answered, and took his weapons and joined the apostle in Uhud. His parting testimony to his people was: 'If I am killed today my property is to go to Mohammed to use as God shows him.' He was killed in the battle that followed. I am told that the apostle used to say 'Mukhayriq is the best of the Jews.' The apostle took over his property and all the alms he distributed in Medina came from it.

THE TESTIMONY OF SAFIYA

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm told me that he was told that Safiya d. Huyayy b. Akhtab said I was the favourite child of my father and my uncle Abu Yasir. When I was present they took no notice of their other children. When the apostle was staying in Quba with the B. Amr b. Auf, the two went to see him before daybreak and did not return until after nightfall, weary, worn out, drooping and feeble. I went up to them in childish pleasure as I always did, and they were so sunk in gloom that they took no notice of me. I heard my uncle say to my father, "Is he he? Do you recognise him, and can you be sure?" "Yes!" "And what do you feel about him?" "By God, I shall be his enemy as long as I live!"

THE JEWS ARE JOINED BY AKSARI HYPOCRITES

The following hypocrites* from al-Aus and al-Khazraj joined the Jews according to information given me. God knows best about the truth. (* What Arabic writers mean by 'hypocrites' has been made clear in the section on the Jewish adversaries. It is not a really good rendering of munafiq, but no one word suggests itself as better. Muslims look with a tolerant eye on a man who conceals [See: al-taqiyyah!] his belief to prevent a personal catastrophe or religion he is suppose to support, but to pretend to be a Muslim is a crime [of course! Here already Islam reveals itself as being not interested in equality, equal rights, etc. but in being supreme over anyone else!]. It is the very same arrogant and uncompromising attitude that was already prevalent in the Jewish ancient Messianic Movement and led to its downfall.) From Aus of the section of B. Amr b. Auf b. Malik of the subdivision Laudhan b. Amr b. Auf: Zuwayy b. al-Harith. From B. Hubayb b. Amr b. Auf: Julas b. Suwayd b. al-Samit and his brother al-Harith. Julas was one of those who withdrew from the apostle in the raid on Tabuk. He said, 'If this man is right we are worse than donkeys.' Umayr b. Sad, one of them, who was closely related to Julas, he having married his mother after his father's death, reported what he had said to the apostle. But first he said to Julas: 'You are dearer to me than any man, the most generous to me, and it is most painful to me that anything should happen to upset you; but you have said words which if I repeat them I shall bring shame upon you, and if I keep silence I shall bring my religion into peril. One is preferable to the other.' Then he went to the apostle and told him what Julas had said. Julas swore by God that he had not said the words attributed to him by Umayr. And God sent down concerning him: 'They swear by God that they did not say, when they did actually say, words of unbelief and did disbelieve after they had surrendered themselves. They planned what they could not carry out and they had nothing to avenge but that God and His apostle had enriched them by His bounty. If they repent it will be better for them; and if they turn back God will afflict them with a painful punishment in this world and the next. In this world they have no friend or helper' (Koran 9.75) (295).

It is alleged that he repented and was known to be a good Muslim. His brother al-Harith who killed al-Mujadhhar b. Dhiyad al-Balawi and Qays b. Zayd one of B. Pubaya at Uhud, went out with the Muslims. He was a hypocrite, and when battle was joined he fell upon these two men, killed them, and attached himself to (the) Quraysh (296).

Muadh b. Afra killed Suwayd treacherously when there was no war. He shot him with an arrow before the battle of Buath.

The apostle—so they say—had ordered Umar to kill him if he could get hold of him, but he escaped and got to Mecca. Then he sent to his brother Julas asking for forgiveness so that he might return to his people. God sent down concerning him according to what I have heard on the authority of Ibn Abbas: 'How can God guide a people who have disbelieved after having believed and witnessed that the apostle is true and sure proofs have come to them from God. God does not guide a sinful people (Koran 3.80).'

From B. PubayA b. Zayd b. Malik b. Auf b. Amr b. Auf: Bijad b. Uthman b. Amir. From B. Laudhan b. Amr b. Auf: Nabtal b. al-Harith. I have heard that it was of him that the apostle said, 'Whoever wants to see Satan let him take a look at Nabtal b. al-Harith!' He was a sturdy black man with long flowing hair, inflamed eyes, and dark ruddy cheeks. He used to come and talk to the apostle and listen to him and then carry what he had said to the hypocrites. It was he who said: 'Mohammed is all ears: if anyone tells him anything he believes it.' God sent down concerning him: 'And of them are those who annoy the prophet and say he is all ears. Say: Good ears for you. He believes in God and trusts the believers and is a mercy for those of you who believe; and those who annoy the apostle of God for them there is a painful punishment (Koran 9.61).'

A man of B. al-Ajlan told me that he was told that Gabriel came to the apostle and said, 'There comes to sit with you a black man with long flowing hair, ruddy cheeks, and inflamed eyes like two copper pots. His heart (Lit. 'liver') is more gross than a donkey's; he carries your words to the hypocrites, so beware of him.' This, so they say, was the description of Nabtal.

Also from B. Dubaya was Abu Habiba b. al-Azar, one of those who had built the mosque of al-Dirar; Thalaba b. Hatib; and Muattib b. Qushayr. It was those two who made a covenant with God saying, 'If he gives us of his bounty we will give alms and be of the righteous (Koran 9.76)' to the end of the story. And it was Muattib who said at Uhud: 'If we had any part in the ordering of things we should not be killed here.' So God sent down concerning what he said: 'A party who were anxious about their hves thought wrongly about God as the pagans thought. They said: "If we had any part in the ordering of things we should not be killed here (Koran 3.148)" to the end of the context. It was he who said on the day of the Parties, "Mohammed promises us that we shall enjoy the treasures of Chosroes and Caesar whereas it is not safe for one of us to go to the privy!" So God revealed concerning him: And when the hypocrites and those in whose hearts is a disease say God and his apostle have promised us nothing but a delusion (Koran 33.12).'

Also al-Harith b. Hatib (297).

Also Abbad b. Hunayf brother of Sahl, and Bahzaj who were among the builders of the mosque of al-Dirar. And Amr b. Khidham and Abdullah b. Nabtal.

Of the B. Thalaba were Jariya b. Amir b. al-Attaf and his two sons Zayd and Mujammi. They were also concerned with the mosque of al-Dirar. Mujammi was a youth who had collected most of the Koran and lie used to lead them in prayer. When the mosque had been destroyed and certain men of B. Amr b. Auf who used to lead their people in prayer in their mosque, died, in the time of Umar, Mujammi was mentioned to act as leader, but Umar would not have it, saying, 'Was he not the imam of the hypocrites in the mosque of al-Dirar?' He replied: 'By God, I knew nothing of their affairs. But I was a youngster who could recite the Koran, whereas they could not, so they put me forward to lead the prayers. Their affair seemed to me to accord with the best account they gave.' They allege that Umar let him go and lead the prayers of his people.

Of B. Umayya b. Zayd b. Malik: Wadia b. Thabit, one of the builders of the Pirar mosque who said, 'We were only talking and jesting (joking).' So God sent down: 'If you ask them they will say we were only talking and jesting. Say: Is it about God and His signs and His apostle you were jesting?' to the end of the passage.

Of B. Ubayd b. Zayd b. Malik: Khidham b. Khalid, from whose house the mosque of al-Dirar was carved out; and Bishr and Rafi the two sons of Zayd.

Of B. al-Nabit (298) of the clan of B. Haritha b. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj b. Amr b. Malik b. al-Aus: Mirba b. Qayzi who said to the apostle when he passed through his garden on his way to Uhud: 'I do not allow you Mohammed to pass through my garden even if you are a prophet.' He took a handful of dirt and said: 'By God, if I did not know that I might throw it on others I would throw this dirt at you.' The people pressed on him to kill him and the apostle said: 'Let him alone. For this blind man is blind of heart and blind of perception'. Sad b. Zayd brother of B. Abdul-Ashhal hit him with his bow and wounded him; also his brother Aus b. Qayzi, who said to the apostle on the day of the Trench: 'Our houses lie open to the enemy, so give us leave to go back to them.' So God revealed concerning him: 'They say Our houses lie open to the enemy. They are not open; all they want is to run away (Koran 9.66.)' (290).

Of B. Zafar (Zafar's name was Kab b. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj): Hatib b. Umayya b. Rafi. He was a sturdy old man steeped long in paganism. A son of his was one of the best of the Muslims, Yazid by name. He was disabled by wounds received at Uhud and was carried to the house of the B. Zafar.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that the Muslims there both men and women gathered to him when he was at the point of death and were saying: 'Rejoice! O son of Hatib, in the thought of paradise!' Then his hypocrisy showed itself, for his father said, 'Humph! By God, it is a garden of rue. You have sent this poor fellow to his death by your deception.'

Also Bushayr b. Ubayriq Abu Tuma, the 'Stealer of the Two Breastplates' concerning whom God sent down: 'And argue not on behalf of those who deceive themselves lod does not love a sinful deceiver.' Also Quzman, an ally of theirs.

The same Asim told me that the apostle used to say: 'He belongs to the people of hell.' At Uhud he fought so valiantly that he killed several polytheists. But they severely wounded him and he was carried to the quarters of the B. Zafar. The Muslims said, 'Cheer up, O Quzman; you have done gallantly today and your sufferings have been for God's sake.' He said: 'Why should I cheer up? I fought only to protect my people.' And when the pain of his wounds became unendurable he took an arrow from his quiver and cut a vein in his hand and thus committed suicide.

Among B. Abdul-Ashhal no hypocrite male or female was known except al-Dahhak b. Thabit, one of the B. Kab of the family of Sad b. Zayd. He was suspected of hypocrisy and love of the Jews.

Hassan b. Thabit said of him (Diwan, p. 34.):

Who will tell al-Dahhak that his veins
Were unable to be glorified in Islam?
Do you love the Jews of al-Hijaz and their religion,
You liver-hearted ass, and not love Mohammed?
Their religion will never march with ours
As long as men roam the open desert.

I have heard that before his repentance Julas together with Muattib, Rafi, and Bishr used to make false profession of Islam (Read yadda-una in accord with Sura 67.27; and for the meaning see Lane 884a and b.). Some Muslims asked them to go to the apostle to settle a matter in dispute between them, while they wanted to refer it to the kahins who acted as arbitrators in the pagan era. So God sent down concerning them: 'Hast thou considered those who allege that they believe in what has been sent down to thee and what was sent down before thee who wish to go to idolatry for arbitration when they have been commanded to give up belief in it? Satan wishes to lead them far astray (Koran 4.63).'

Of Khazraj from B. al-Najjar: Rafi b. Wadia, Zayd b. Amr, Amr b. Qays, and Qays b. Amr b. Sahl.

Of B. Jusham of the clan of B. Salima: al-Jidd b. Qays who said, 'O Mohammed, give me leave (to stay at home) and tempt me not.' So God sent down concerning him: 'Of them is he who says, Give me leave (to stay at home) and tempt me not. Surely it is into temptation that they have fallen and hell encompasses the unbelievers (Koran 9.49).'

Of B. Auf b. al-Khazraj: Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul. He was the head of the hypocrites. They used to gather to him and it was he who said, 'If we go back to Medina the stronger will drive out the weaker.' This was during the raid on the B. al-Mustaliq and the whole sura of the Hypocrites (Koran 63. Cf. Wüstenfeld 727 infra.) came down about him and Wadia a man of B. Auf and Malik b. Abu Qauqal and Suwayd and Dais of the clan of Abdullah b. Ubayy. Those were his men who sent secret messages to B. al-Nadir (Cf. Wüstenfeld 653. 10.2) when the apostle besieged them: 'Stand fast, for by God if you are driven out we will go forth with you and we will never obey anyone against you and if you are attacked we will help you.' So God sent down concerning them: 'Hast thou not considered the hypocrites who say to their brethren of the scripture folk, If you are driven out we will go forth with you and we will never obey anyone against you and if you are attacked we will help you. God bears witness that they are liars', as far as His words 'Like Satan when he says to men, "Disbelieve," and when they disbelieve he says, "I am not responsible for you; for my part I fear God the Lord of the worlds (Koran 59.11-16)."

THE RABBIS WHO ACCEPTED ISLAM HYPOCRITICALLY

The following are the Jewish rabbis who took refuge in Islam along with the Muslims and hypocritically professed it: Of B. Qaynuqa: Sad b. Hunayf; Zayd b. al-Lusayt; Numan b. Aufa b. Amr; Uthman b. Aufa; Zayd b. al-Lusayt who fought with Umar in the market of the B. Qaynuqa. He was the man who said when the apostle's camel wandered off: 'Mohammed alleges that revelations come to him from heaven and he does not know where his camel is! When the apostle heard of what this enemy of God had said and God had told him where his camel was he said, I only know what God lets me know. And God has shown me. It is in such-and-such a glen caught by its rope to a tree.' The Muslims went and found it in that very spot caught up as the apostle had said.

Also Rafi b. Huraymila of whom I have heard that the prophet said, 'One of the greatest hypocrites has died today.' And Rifaa b. Zayd b. al-Tabut of whom the prophet said when there was a high wind as he was returning from the expedition against the B. al-Mustaliq and the Muslims were in great anxiety: 'Do not be afraid; the wind is blowing because a great unbeliever is dead.' When he got back to Medina he found that Rifaa had died the day the wind blew. Also Silsila b. Barham and Kinana b. Suriya.

These hypocrites used to assemble in the mosque and listen to the stories of the Muslims and laugh and scoff at their religion. When some of them* were there one day the apostle saw them talking with lowered voice among themselves huddled together. (* It is by no means certain that these men were Jews. The previous section almost certainly proves that they were not; however they may well have been half converted to Judaism like so many of the inhabitants of Medina.)

He ordered that they should be ejected and they were put out with some violence. Abu Ayyub Khalid b. Zayd b. Kulayb got up and went to Amr b. Qays, one of B. Ghanm b. Malik b. al-Najjar who was the custodian of their gods during the pagan era, took hold of his foot and dragged him outside the mosque, he saying meanwhile 'Would you drag me out of the datebarn of the B. Thalaba!' Then he went for Rafi b. Wadia, one of the B. al-Najjar, gripped him by his robe, slapped his face, and dragged him forcibly out of the mosque, saying, 'Faugh! you dirty hypocrite! Keep out of the apostle's mosque, you hypocrite!' (300).

Umara b. Hazm went for Zayd b. Amr who had a long beard and seized him by it and dragged him violently out of the mosque. Then clenching his fists he punched him in the chest and knocked him down, Zayd crying the meanwhile, 'You have torn my skin off!' 'God get rid of you, you hypocrite,' he answered, 'God has a worse punishment than that in store for you, so do not come near the apostle's mosque again!' (301).

Abu Mohammed Masud b. Aus b. Zayd b. Asram b. Zayd b. Thalaba b. Ghanm b. Malik b. al-Najjar (who was at Badr) went for Qays b. Amr b. Sahl who was a youth (the only young man known to have been among the hypocrites) and pushed him in the back of the neck until he ejected him from the mosque.

A man of B. al-Khudra b. al-Khazraj of the family of Abu Sad called Abdullah b. al-Harith, hearing the order to clear the mosque, went for al-Harith b. Amr, a man with long hair, and taking a good grip of it he dragged him violently the whole way along the floor until he put him out, the hypocrite meanwhile saying 'You are very rough, Ibnul-Harith.' 'Serve you right, you enemy of God, for what God has sent down about you,' he answered, 'Do not come near the apostle's mosque again, for you are unclean (Muslims, just like once all members of the Jewish ancient Messianic Movement from the Qumran communities at the Death Sea, get themselves tangled up in the delusion that everyone and everything has to be clean and totally purified, a mindset that has its origin in Hinduism and Zoroastrianism. This is, by the way, also the origin of Christian baptism.)'

A man of B. Amr b. Auf went for his brother Zuwayb b. al-Harith and put him out violently, saying, 'Faugh! You are doing Satan's work for him!'

These were the hypocrites whom the apostle ordered to be expelled from the mosque that day.

REFERENCES TO THE HYPOCRITES AND THE JEWS IN THE SURA ENTITLED 'THE COW'

The first hundred verses of the sura of the Cow came down in reference to these Jewish rabbis and the hypocrites of Aus and Khazraj, according to what I have been told, and God knows best. He said: Alif Lam Mim. That is the book wherein there is no doubt.' The word rayb means doubt (302).

A guidance to the god-fearing', i.e. those who fear God's punishment for abandoning the guidance they recognise, and hope for His mercy through believing in what has come to them from Him. 'Who believe in the unseen and establish prayer and give out what We have provided them with,' i.e. they establish prayer in its prescribed form and pay the poor-tax expecting a (future) reward for it. And those who believe* in what has been sent down to thee and to those who were before thee,' i.e. they believe thee to be true in what thou hast brought from God and what the sent ones brought before thee, making no difference between them nor opposing what they brought from their Lord. (* To believe in Islam, the Koran, Allah and Mohammed is definitely not a matter of free choice in Islam. Not to believe in those things is considered a despicable sin and even crime in Islam which is liable to the harshest possible punishment. Apostasy, the abandonment of the once accepted Islam, and any connected crime that leads to it, is punishable by death!). And are certain of the latter end,' i.e. the waking from death, the resurrection, paradise and hell, the reckoning and the scales, i.e. these are those who allege that they believe in what was before thee and in what has come to thee from thy Lord. 'These live in guidance from their Lord,' i.e. according to light from their Lord and uprightly according to what has come to them. 'These are they who prosper,' i.e. who attain what they seek and escape the evil they flee from. As for those who disbelieve,' i.e. in what has been sent down to thee though they say we have long believed in what came to us before thee, It is all one to them whether thou warn them or do not warn them they will not believe,' i.e. they disbelieve that thou art mentioned (in the books) they have and they reject the covenant which was made with them with reference to thee. They disbelieve in what has come to thee and in what they have already which others brought to them so how will they listen to warning and exhortation from thee when they have denied that they have any knowledge of thee? 'God hath sealed their hearts and their hearing and over their sight there is a covering,' i.e. so that they will never find guidance, meaning: because they have declared you a liar so that they will not believe in the truth which has come to thee from thy Lord though they believe in all that came before thee. For opposing thee they will have an awful punishment. Thus far concerning the Jewish rabbis for calling the truth a lie after they knew it.

And there are some men who say, We believe in God and the last day when they do not believe.' He means the hypocrites of Aus and Khazraj and their followers. 'They would deceive God and those who believe, but they deceive only themselves, and perceive it not. In their hearts is a sickness,' i.e. doubt. And God increases their sickness,' i.e. doubt. A painful punishment is theirs because they lie. And when it is said to them, 'Do not make mischief in the land they say we are only putting things to right,' i.e. we only wish to make peace between the two parties of the believers and the scripture folk. God said: Are not they indeed the mischief makers but they perceive it not? And when it is said to them, Believe as the people believe they say: Are we to believe as the foolish believe? Surely they are the foolish but they know it not. And when they meet those who believe they say, We believe; and when they go apart to their leaders (Lit. 'their satans'),' i.e. the Jews who order them to deny the truth and contradict what the apostle brought, 'They say Certainly we are with you,' i.e. we agree entirely with you. 'We were only mocking,' i.e. mocking the people and jesting with them. God said: 'God will mock at them and let them continue to wander blindly in their error' (303).

These are they who buy error at the price of guidance.' i.e. disbelief for faith. 'So their traffic is not profitable and they are not rightly guided.' Then God employed a simile and said: 'They are like a man who lights a fire and when it lightens his environment God takes away their light and leaves them in darkness unable to see,' i.e. they cannot see the truth and profess it so that when they go out with it from the darkness of unbelief they extinguish it with their unbelief and hypocrisy, and God leaves them in the darkness of unbelief and they do not see guidance and are not upright in truth. 'Deaf, dumb, blind, and they return not,' i.e. they return not to guidance, deaf, dumb, blind to what is good, they return not to good and find no escape from their condition. 'Or like a rainstorm from heaven wherein is darkness and thunder and lightning. They put their fingers in their ears because of the thunderings, in fear of death. God encompasses the unbelievers' (304), i.e. because of the darkness of unbelief and the fear of death in which they are, arising from their opposition and fear of you, they are like the man in the rainstorm who puts his fingers in his ears at the thunderclaps in fear of death. He says: And God brings that vengeance upon them, i.e. He encompasses the unbelievers (Kafir or kufr is the correct Arab word here which is not a neutral description [such as disbeliever, non-Muslim, or infidel] but a extremely biased and bigotted curse word that should teach readers of the Koran hatred towards anyone who does not believe in Islam, the Koran, Allah and Mohammed.). 'The lightning almost takes away their sight,' i.e. because of the exceeding brightness of the truth. 'Whenever it gives light to them they walk in it and when it is dark for them they stand still,' i.e. they know the truth and talk about it and so far as their talk goes they are on the straight path; but when they relapse from it into infidelity they come to a halt in bewilderment. And if God willed He could take away their hearing and their sight,' i.e. because they have forsaken the truth after they knew it. 'God is able to do all things.'

Then He says: 'O men, worship your Lord,' addressing both unbelievers and hypocrites, i.e. acknowledge His unity. 'Who created you and those before you, perchance you may ward off evil. Who has made the earth a bed for you and the heaven a building, and sent down water from heaven and has brought forth fruits thereby as food for you. So make not rivals of God when you know (better)' (305), i.e. do not associate with God rivals which can neither profit nor harm when you know that you have no Lord that can feed you other than He, and you know that the monotheism to which the apostle calls you is the truth about which there is no doubt. And if you are in doubt about that which We have sent down to our servant,' i.e. in doubt about what he has brought you, 'then produce a sura like it and summon your witnesses other than God,' i.e. whatever helpers you can get. If you are truthful; and if you do not and you cannot' for the truth has become clear to you, 'then fear hell whose fuel is men and stones (It is said that the stones were those worshipped by the pagan Arabs.) prepared for the unbelievers,' i.e. for those who are in a state of infidelity like you.

Then he appeals to their interest and warns them against breaking the covenant which He made with them in reference to His prophet when He came to them, and He reminds them of the beginning of their creation when He created them, and what happened to their forefather Adam and how he was dealt with for his disobedience; then He says (Koran 2.40): 'O children of Israel,' addressing the Jewish rabbis, 'Remember the favour I showed you,' i.e. My care for you and your fathers, wherewith He delivered them from Pharaoh and his army. And fulfil My covenant' which I placed on your necks with regard to My prophet Ahmad when he should come to you. I shall fulfil My part of the covenant.' I shall carry out what I promised you for believing in and following him by removing the bonds and chains which were upon your necks because of the sins which you had committed. And stand in awe of Me,' i.e. lest I bring down on you what I brought down on your fathers before you — the vengeance that you know of, bestial transformation and the like. And believe in what I have sent down confirming what you already have, and be not the first to disbelieve it' seeing that you have knowledge which others have not about it. And fear Me and do not mingle truth with falsehood nor hide the truth which you know,' i.e. do not conceal the knowledge which you have about My apostle and what he has brought when you will find it with you in what you know of the books which are in your hands. 'Would you tell men to be good and forget to be so yourselves, you being readers of scripture? Do you not understand?' i.e. would you forbid men to disbelieve in the prophecy you have and the covenant of the Torah and abandon it yourselves? i.e. when you deny that it contains My covenant with you that you must pronounce My apostle to be true, and you break My agreement* and you contradict what you know to be in My book.

Then He recounts their sins, mentioning the calf and what they did with it; how He forgave them and pardoned them; then their words 'Show us God plainly' (306), and how the storm came upon them because of their presumptuousness; then He quickened them after they had died; overshadowed them with the cloud, sent down to them manna and quails and said to them, 'Enter the gate with prostrations and say Hitta*

(The meaning of this word [lit. unloading, or relief], and indeed the significance of the whole passage, is obscure. Presumably a Jewish midrash lies behind it. Cf. Geiger, op. cit. 17 f), i.e. say what I command you, and I will remove your sins from you; and their changing that word making a mockery of His command; and His forgiving them after their mockery (307).

With regard to their changing that word, the apostle said according to what Salih b. Kaisan from Salih, freedman of al-Tauama d. Umayya b. Khalaf from Abu Hurayra and someone above suspicion from Ibn Abbas: They entered the gate they were ordered to enter with prostrations in a crowd saying, 'Wheat is in the barley' (308). (He also reminded them of) Moses praying for water for his people and His commanding him to strike the rock with his staff so that the water gushed forth in twelve streams, one for each tribe to drink from, each tribe knowing the one from which it was to drink. And their saying to Moses, 'We cannot bear one kind of food. Pray to your Lord for us that He may bring forth to us vegetables which the earth produces such as cucumbers and corn (309) and beans and onions. He said: Will you exchange that which is better for that which is baser? Go down to Egypt; thus you will get what you ask for.' They did not do so. Further how He raised the mountain above them (Cf. Sura 7. 170 and Geiger, Was hat Mohammed aus dem Judentum aufgenommen? [What has Mohammed taken up from Judaism?] Bonn, 1833, pp. 164 f. and A. S. Yahuda in Ignace Goldziher Memorial Volume, Pt. I. Budapest, 1948, p. 283.) that they might receive what was brought to them; and the bestial transformation when He made them into apes for their sins; and the cow which God showed them in which there was a lesson concerning the slain man about whom they differed until God made clear to them his affair after their repeated requests to Moses for a description of The Cow; further the hardness of their hearts afterwards so that they were harder than stone. Then He said: 'There are rocks from which rivers gush forth and there are rocks which split asunder and water comes out of them, and there are rocks which fall down for fear of God,' i.e. some rocks are softer than your hearts in regard to the truth to which you were called. And God is not unaware of what you do.'

Then He said to Mohammed and the believers with him, causing them to despair of them: 'Do you hope that they will believe you when there is a party of them who listen to the word of God then change it after they understand it, doing so knowingly?' His saying 'They listen to the Torah'" does not mean that they all heard it, but only a party of them, i.e. a selected number according to what I was told by a scholar. (These words are Ibn Ishaq's explanation. 'The word of God'" just mentioned could only have been the Torah. They said to Moses: Something has come between us and the vision of God so let us hear His word when He speaks to thee. Moses conveyed the request to God who said: Yes, command them to purify themselves or to purify their clothing and to fast; and they did so. Then he brought them forth to the mountain, and when the cloud covered them Moses commanded them to prostrate themselves and his Lord spoke to him and they heard His voice giving them commands and prohibitions so that they understood what they heard. Then he went back with them to the Children of Israel and when he came to them a party of them changed the commandments they had been given; and when Moses said to the Children of Israel, 'God has ordered you to do so-and-so,' they contradicted him and said that God had ordered something else. It is they to whom God refers.

Then God said: And when they meet those who believe they say: 'We believe,' i.e. in your leader the apostle of God; but he (has been sent) to you alone. And when they go apart with one another they say, 'Do not talk to the Arabs about this for you used to ask for victory over them through him and he is of them. So God sent down concerning them: And when they meet those who believe they say, 'We believe. But when they go apart with one another they say, 'Will you talk about what God has revealed to you that they may contend with you about it before your Lord? Have you no understanding?' i.e. maintain that he is a prophet since you know that God has made a covenant with you that you should follow him, while he tells you that he is the prophet whom we are expecting and find in our book. Oppose him and do not recognise him. God said: 'Do they not know that God knows what they conceal and what they proclaim, and some of them are gentiles' (non-Jews) who do not know the book but merely recite passages (That is to say these Arabs cannot read the sacred books, but they can join in the Jewish liturgy reciting the prayers and responses.) (310). 'They only think they know,' i.e. they do not know the book and they do not know what is in it, yet they oppose thy prophethood on mere opinion. And they say the fire will not touch us except for a limited time. Say, 'Have ye received a covenant from God? God will not break His covenant (with Moses)—or do you say what you do not know about God?'

(* The word Ummi' for 'gentile' is generally translated 'illiterate'. Guillaume: In Sura 7. 157 and 158 Mohammed calls himself 'the gentile prophet'; but practically all Arab writers claim that he meant that he could not read or write [see, e.g., Pickthall's Koran translation]. Geiger, op. cit. 26 f., was, I think, the first to point out the only possible derivation of the word, and he has been followed by every subsequent European Arabist. But this passage brings to light the fact that he was preceded by these two early traditionists who identified the ummiyun as Arab proselytes who did not themselves know the scriptures. LH: Seeing this matter from the viewpoint of a Muslim seem to be wrong as 'gentile' is a word used by Jews for non-Jews and in particular for Greeks and Romans who were outside of the sphere of Semitic languages and civilisation. The reference 'gentile prophet' could rather have meant that Mohammed used to live in a Greek-Roman city in Arabia, such as the City of Petra [Arabic: 'Raqumu' / Al-Batra] or the City of Hegira [Arabic: Hijra / Hijrah / Madaln Saleh.]

A freedman of Zayd b. Thabit told me as from Ikrima or from Said b. Jubayr from Ibn Abbas: The apostle came to Medina when the Jews were saying that the world would last for seven thousand years and that God would only punish men in hell one day in the next world for every thousand in this world. There would be only seven days and then punishment would cease. So God sent down concerning this saying: And they say, 'The fire will not touch us except for a limited time. Say, 'Have ye received a covenant from God? God will not break His covenant—or do you say what you do not know about God? Nay whoso docs evil and his sin encompasses him,' i.e. he who docs as you do and disbelieves as you disbelieve, his unbelief encompasses the good he has acquired with God. 'They are the people of hell; they will be there eternally,' i.e. for ever. And those who do good, they are the people of paradise; they will be there eternally,' i.e. those who believe in what you deny and do what you have left undone of His religion. They shall have paradise for ever. He tells them that the recompense for good and evil is eternal: it will never cease.

Then He said in blaming them, 'And when We made a covenant with the children of Israel,' i.e. your covenant. 'Worship none but God, showkindness to parents and to near relatives, and to orphans and the poor, and speak kindly to men, and establish prayer and pay the poor-tax, then you turned your backs except a few of you, being averse.'" i.e. you abandoned all that--nothing less. And when we made a covenant with you, 'Shed not your blood' (Your blood and yourselves because in ancient Semitic thought the tribe was one blood and had as it were one personality.) (311). And do not turn (some of) your people out of your dwellings. Then ye ratified it and you are witnesses thereof,' i.e. that My covenant condition truly binds you. 'Then you are they who kill your people and drive some of them from their houses, supporting one another against them by crime and transgression,' i.e. the polytheists, so that they shed their blood along with them and drive them from their houses along with them. And if they came to you as prisoners you would ransom them' knowing that that is incumbent upon you in your religion, 'while their expulsion is forbidden to you' in your scripture. 'Will you believe in a part of the scripture and disbelieve in another part?' i.e. will you ransom them believing in one part and expel them disbelieving in another part? And what is the recompense of those of you who do that but shame in this world and on the day of resurrection they will be sent to the severest punishment. For God is not unaware of what you are doing.

These are they who buy this life at the price of the next life. Their punishment will not be lightened nor will they be helped.' Thus God blamed them for what they were doing, He having in the Torah prohibited them from shedding each other's blood and charged them to redeem their prisoners.

There were two parties: The B. Qaynuqa' and their adherents, allies of Khazraj; and al-Nadir and Qurayza and their adherents allies of Aus. When there was war between A" * and Khazraj the B. QaynuqS' went out with Khazraj, and al-Nadir and Qurayza with Aus, each side helping his allies against his own brethren so that they shed each other's blood, while the Torah was in their hands by which they knew what was allowed and what was forbidden them. Aus and Khazraj were polytheists worshipping idols knowing nothing about paradise and hell, the waking and the resurrection, the scriptures, the permitted and the forbidden. When the war came to an end they ransomed their prisoners in accordance with the Torah each side redeeming those of their men who had been captured by the other side, disregarding the bloodshed that had been incurred in helping the polytheists. God said in blaming them for that: 'Will you believe in a part of the scripture and disbelieve in another part?' i.e. would you redeem him in accordance with the Torah and kill him when the Torah forbids you to do so, killing him and driving him out of his house and helping the polytheist who worships idols instead of God against him, all for the sake of this world's gain? According to my information this passage came down with reference to their behaviour with Aus and Khazraj.

He continued: 'We gave Moses the scripture and We sent apostles after him and we gave Jesus, Son of Mary, the clear proofs,' i.e. the signs which were wrought by Him in raising the dead; forming the likeness of birds from clay and then breathing into them so that they became birds by God's permission healing the sick; and news of many hidden things which they stored in their houses; and His confuting them from the Torah and the Gospel which God had created for Him' (* Ahdatha ilayhi. Apparently this is a pregnant construction meaning 'created and sent to him'). Then he mentions their disbelief in all that and says: Is it that whenever there comes to you an apostle with what you do not like you act arrogantly; some you declare liars and some you put to death? Then he says: And they said, Our hearts are uncircumcised,' i.e. in coverings. 'Nay, but God has cursed them for their unbelief. Little do they believe. And when a scripture comes to them from God confirming what they already have, though before that they were asking for a victory over the unbelievers, when there comes to them what they know they deny it. God's curse is on the unbelievers.'

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that shaykhs of his people said: This passage came down about us and them. We had got the better of them in the pagan era, we being polytheists and they scripture folk. They used to say to us, 'Soon a prophet will be sent whom we shall follow; his time is at hand. With his help we shall kill you like Ad and Iram.' And when God sent His apostle from (the) Quraysh and we followed him they denied him. God said: And when there comes to them what they know they deny it. God's curse is on the unbelievers. Wretched is that for which they sell themselves in disbelieving in what God has sent down, grudging that God should send down of His bounty upon whom He will of His servants,' i.e. that He should have given it to one who was not of them. 'They have incurred anger upon anger and for the unbelievers there is a shameful punishment' (312).

The double anger is His anger at what they have disregarded of the Torah which they had and His anger at their disbelieving in this prophet whom God had sent to them (* Ahdatha ilayhim). Apparently this is a pregnant construction meaning 'created and sent to him'. Then He told them of* the raising of the mountain above them and their taking the calf as a god instead of their Lord (*The text of W. and C. annabahum 'blamed them' yields no suitable meaning. The true text is given in Wüstenfeld's notes, ii. in, anba-ahum. I owe this correction to Dr. Ararat.) God then said: 'Say, If the last dwelling with God is for you alone excluding others, then long for death if you are truthful,' i.e. pray for death to which of the two parties is most false with God. And they refused the apostle's suggestion. God said to His prophet: 'They will never long for it because of what their hands have sent before them (their past deeds),' i.e. because they know about thee by the knowledge which they have and deny it. It is said that if they had longed for it the day he said that to them, not a single Jew would have remained on the earth but would have died. Then He mentions their love of this life and of a long life and God said: 'Thou wilt find them the most eager of men for life', the Jews, 'even more than the polytheists; each one would like to live a thousand years and to be allowed to live long would not remove him from the punishment,' i.e. it would not deliver him from it. The reason is that the polytheist does not hope for raising after death so he wants to live long, and the Jew knows what awaits him of shame in the next life because he has wasted the knowledge that he has. Then God said: 'Say, Who is an enemy to Gabriel? For it is he who brought it down to thy heart by God's permission.'

Abdullah b. Abdul-Rahman b. Abu Husayn al-Makki told me from Shahr b. Haushab al-Ashari that a number of Jewish rabbis came to the apostle and asked him to answer four questions, saying that if he did so they would follow him and testify to his truth, and believe in him. He got them to swear a solemn oath that if he gave them the right answers they would acknowledge his truth and they began: 'Why does a boy resemble his mother when the semen comes from the man? I adjure you by God and His favours towards the children of Israel ('Children of Israel' is a typical phrase from The Tanakh, the Hebrew Bible.), do you not know that a man's semen is white and thick while a woman's is yellow and thin, and the likeness goes with that which comes to the top?'

Agreed,' they said. 'Tell us about your sleep.' 'Do you not know that a sleep which you allege I do not have is when the eye sleeps but the heart is awake?' Agreed.' 'Thus is my sleep. My eye sleeps but my heart is awake.' 'Tell us about what Israel voluntarily forbade himself.' 'Do you not know that the food he loved best was the flesh and milk of camels and that once when he was ill God restored him to health so he deprived himself of his favourite food and drink in gratitude to God?' Agreed. Tell us about the Spirit.' 'Do you not know that it is Gabriel, he who comes to me?' Agreed, but O Mohammed he is an enemy to us, an angel who comes only with violence and the shedding of blood, and were it not for that we would follow you.' So God sent down concerning them: 'Who is an enemy to Gabriel? For it is he who brought it down to thy heart by God's permission confirming what was before it and a guidance and good tidings to the believers' as far as the words Is it not that when they make a covenant some of them set it aside, nay most of them do not believe. And when an apostle comes to them from God confirming that which they have, some of them who have received the scripture, the book of God, put it behind them as if they did not know it and they follow that which the satans read concerning the kingdom of Solomon,' i.e. sorcery. 'Solomon did not disbelieve, but the satans disbelieved, teaching men sorcery.'

This, so I have heard, happened when the apostle mentioned Solomon b. David among the sent ones. One of the rabbis said, 'Do you not wonder at Mohammed? He alleges that Solomon was a prophet, and by God he was nothing but a sorcerer.' So God sent down concerning that: 'Solomon did not disbelieve but the satans disbelieved,' i.e. in following sorcery and practising it. And that which was revealed to the two angels Harut and Mariit in Babylon and they taught nobody.'

Someone above suspicion told me from Ikrima from Ibn Abbas that he used to say: 'What Israel forbade himself was the two lobes of the liver, the kidneys and the fat (except what was upon the hack), for that used to be offered in sacrifice and the fire consumed it (This is the sacrificial law given in the Hebrew Bible / Old Testament, Leviticus 3, 4, 10, 15, etc., and the tradition shows a remarkable knowledge of the Jewish Law.)'

The apostle wrote to the Jews of Khaybar according to what a freedman of the family of Zayd b. Thabit told me from Ikrima or from Said b. Jubayr from Ibn Abbas: In the name of God the compassionate the merciful from Mohammed the apostle of God friend and brother of Moses who confirms what Moses brought. God says to you, O scripture folk, and you will find it in your scripture "Mohammed is the apostle of God; and those with him are severe against the unbelievers, merciful among themselves. Thou seest them bowing, falling prostrate seeking bounty and acceptance from God. The mark of their prostrations is on their foreheads. That is their likeness in the Torah and in the Gospel like a seed which sends forth its shoot and strengthens it and it becomes thick and rises straight upon its stalk delighting the sowers that He may anger the unbelievers with them. God has promised those who believe and do well forgiveness and a great reward (Koran 48.29)." I adjure you by God, and by what He has sent down to you, by the manna and quails He gave as food to your tribes before you, and by His drying up the sea for your fathers when He delivered them from Pharaoh and his works, that you tell me, Do you find in what He has sent down to you that you should believe in Mohammed? If you do not find that in your scripture then there is no compulsion upon you. "The right path has become plainly distinguished from error (Koran 2.257)" so I call you to God and His prophet' (313).

Among those people concerning whom the Koran came down, especially the rabbis and unbelieving Jews who used to ask him questions and annoy him in confusing truth with falsehood —as I was told on the authority of Abdullah b. Abbas and Jabir b. Abdullah b. Riab— was Abu Yasir b. Akhtab who passed by the apostle as he was reciting the opening words of The Cow: Alif, Lam, Mim, That is the book about which there is no doubt.' He came to his brother Huyayy who was with some other Jews and said: 'Do you know that I have heard Mohammed reciting in what has been sent down to him Alif Lam Mim, etc.?' After expressing surprise Huyayy and these men went to the apostle and told him what had been reported to them and asked if Gabriel had brought the message from God. When he said that he had they said: God sent prophets before you but we do not know of anyone of them being told how long his kingdom would last and how long his community would last. Huyayy went up to his men and said to them: Alif is 1; Lam is 30; and Mim is 40, i.e. 71 years. Are you going to adopt a religion whose kingdom and community will last for only 71 years?' Then he went to the apostle and said, 'Have you anything else, Mohammed?' 'Yes, Alif Lam Mim Sad.' 'This by God is more weighty and longer: Alif 1; Lam 30; Mim 40, Sad 90, i.e. 161 years.'

Similar questions were asked and answered in respect of Alif Lam Ra 231; Alif Lam Mim Ra 271; then he said, 'Your situation seems obscure to us, Mohammed, so that we do not know whether you will have a short or long duration.' Then they left him. Abu Yasir said to his brother Huyayy and the others, 'How do you know that all these totals should not be added together to make a grand total of 734 years?' They answered, 'His affair is obscure to us.' They allege that these verses came down in reference to them: 'The plain verses are the mother of the Book; the rest are obscure (Koran 3.5).'

I heard a scholar above suspicion mentioning that these verses were sent down about the people of Najran (the Nazrani / Nazoreans, the followers of the Law, the movement of Jesus and his brother James.) when they came to the apostle to ask him about Jesus, Son of Mary.

Mohammed b. Abu Umama b. Sahl b. Hunayf told me that he had heard that they were sent down about a number of Jews, but he did not explain that to me. God knows best.

According to what I heard from Ikrima, freedman of Ibn Abbas or from Said b. Jubayr from Ibn Abbas, Jews used to hope that the apostle would be a help to them against Aus and Khazraj before his mission began; and when God sent him from among the Arabs they disbelieved in him and contradicted what they had formerly said about him (This and similar passages seem to indicate that the messianic hope was still strong among the Jews. Mohammed knew about it and probably wanted to use this knowledge but most Jews did not fall for it. This caused Mohammed's anger. The Messianic Jews resisted him as they were in this very moment involved in a struggle of life and death against the Romans and Persians.). Muadh b. Jabal and Bishr b. al-Bara b. Marur brother of the B. Salama said to them: "O Jews, fear God and become Muslims, for you used to hope for Mohammed's help against us when we were polytheists and to tell us that he would be sent and describe him to us." Salam b. Mishkam, one of B. al-Nadir, said, 'He has not brought us anything we recognize and he is not the one we spoke of to you.' So God sent down about that saying of theirs: And when a book comes to them from God confirming what they have, though beforehand they were asking for help against those who disbelieve, when there came to them what they knew, they disbelieved in it, so God's curse rests on the unbelievers (Koran 2.83).'

Malik b. al-Sayf (Or al-Dayf. v.s.) said when the apostle had been sent and they were reminded of the condition that had been imposed on them and what God had covenanted with them concerning him, 'No covenant was ever made with us about Mohammed.' So God sent down concerning him: Is it not that whenever they make a covenant a party of them set it aside? Nay most of them do not believe (Koran 2.94).'

Abu Saluba al-Fityuni said to the apostle: 'O Mohammed, you have not brought us anything we recognize, and God has not sent down to you any sign that we should follow you.' So God sent down concerning his words, 'We have sent down to thee plain signs and only evildoers disbelieve in them.'

Rafi b. Huraymila and Wahb b. Zayd said to the apostle, 'Bring us a book; bring it down to us from heaven that we may read it; bring out rivers for us from the earth, then we will follow you and believe in you.' So God sent down concerning that: 'Or do you wish to question your apostle as Moses was questioned aforetime; he who exchanges faith for unbelief has wandered from the straight road' (Koran 2.102) (314).

Huyayy and Abu Yasir were the most implacable enemies of the Arabs when God chose to send them an apostle from among themselves and they used to do all they could to turn men away from Islam. So God sent down concerning them: 'Many of the scripture folk wish to make you unbelievers again after you have believed being envious on their own account after the truth has become plain to them. But forgive and be indulgent until God shall give you His orders. God can do anything (Koran 2.107).'

When the Christians of Najran (the Nazoreans) came to the apostle the Jewish rabbis came also and they disputed one with the other before the apostle. Rafi said, 'You have no standing,' and he denied Jesus and the Gospel; and a Christian said to the Jews, 'You have no standing' and he denied that Moses was a prophet and denied the Torah. So God sent down concerning them: 'The Jews say the Christians have no standing; and the Christians say that Jews have no standing, yet they read the scriptures. They do not know what they are talking about. God will judge between them on the day of resurrection concerning their controversy,' i.e. each one reads in his book the confirmation of what he denies, so that the Jews deny Jesus though they have the Torah in which God required them by the word of Moses to hold Jesus true; while in the Gospel is what Jesus brought in confirmation of Moses and the Torah he brought from God: so each one denies what is in the hand of the other.

Rafi said: If you are an apostle from God as you say, then ask God to speak to us so that we may hear His voice.' So God revealed concerning that: And those who do not know say, Why does not God speak to us or a sign come to us? Those who were before them said the same. Their minds are just the same. We have made the signs clear to a people who are sure.'

Abdullah b. Suriya, the one-eyed man, said to the apostle, 'The only guidance is to be found with us, so follow us, Mohammed, and you will be rightly guided.' The Christians said the same. So God sent down concerning them both: And they say, Be Jews or Christians then you will be rightly guided. Say, Nay, the religion of Abraham a hanif who was no polytheist,' as far as the words 'Those are a people who have passed away; they have what they earned and you have what you have earned and you will not be asked about what they used to do (Koran 129-36, i.e. 'You are not responsible).'

And when the qibla was changed from Syria to the Kaaba—it was changed in Rajab at the beginning of the seventeenth month after the apostle's arrival in Medina—Rifaa b. Qays; Qardam b. Amr; Kab b. al-Ashraf; Rafi b. Abu Rafi; al-Hajjaj b. Amr, an ally of Kab's; al-Rabi b. al-Rabi b. Ahul-Huqayq; and Kinana b. al-Rabi b. Abul-Huqayq came to the apostle asking why he had turned his back ori the qibla he used to face when he alleged that he followed the religion of Abraham. If he would return to the qibla in Jerusalem they would follow him and declare him to be true. Their sole intention was to seduce him from his religion, so God sent down concerning them: 'The foolish people will say: What made them turn their back on the qibla that they formerly observed? Say, To God belongs the east and the west. He guides whom He will to the straight path. Thus we have made you a central community that you may be witnesses against men and that the apostle may be a witness against you. And we appointed the qibla which thou didst formerly observe only that we might know who will follow the apostle from him who turns upon his heels,' i.e. to test and find them out. 'Truly it was a hard test except for those whom God guided,' i.e. a temptation, i.e. those whom Allah established. It was not Allah's purpose to make your faith vain,' i.e. your faith in the first qibla, your believing your prophet, and your following him to the later qibla and your obeying your prophet therein, i.e. so that he may give you the reward of both of them. 'God is kind and compassionate to men.'

Then God said, 'We sometimes see thee turning thy face towards heaven and We will make thee turn towards a qibla which will please thee; so turn thy face towards the sacred mosque and wherever you are turn your faces towards it' (315). 'Those who have received the scripture know that it is the truth from their Lord, and God is not unmindful of what they do. If thou didst bring to those who have the scripture every sign they would not follow thy qibla and thou wouldst not follow their qibla nor would some of them follow the qibla of others. If thou shouldst follow their desires after the knowledge which has come to thee then thou wouldst be an evildoer,' as far as the words It is the truth from thy Lord so be not of the doubters (Koran 2.140-2).'

Muadh b. Jabal and Sad b. Muadh brother of B. Abdul-Ashhal, and Kharija b. Zayd brother of B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj, asked some of the Jewish rabbis about something in the Torah and they concealed it from them and refused to tell them anything about it. So God sent down about them: 'Those who conceal the proofs and guidance We have sent down after We have made it plain to men in the book, God will curse them and those who curse will curse them.'

The apostle summoned the Jewish scripture folk to Islam and made it attractive to them and warned them of God's punishment and vengeance. Rafi b. Kharija and Malik b. Auf said to him that they would follow the religion of their fathers, for they were more learned and better men than they. So God sent down concerning their words: And when it is said to them, Follow what God has sent down, they say: Nay, but we will follow what we found our fathers doing. What! even if their fathers understood nothing and were not rightly guided?'

When God smote (the) Quraysh at Badr, the apostle assembled the Jews in the market of the B. Qaynuqa' when he came to Medina and called on them to accept Islam before God should treat them as he had treated (the) Quraysh. They answered, 'Do not deceive yourself, Mohammed. You have killed a number of inexperienced (the) Quraysh who did not know how to fight. But if you fight us you will learn that we are men and that you have met your equal.' So God sent down concerning their words: 'Say to those who disbelieve, You will be defeated and gathered into hell, a wretched restingplace. You had a sign in the two parties which met: one party fought in the way of God and the other was unbelieving seeing twice their number with their very eyes. God will strengthen with His help whom He will. In that there is a warning for the observant (Koran 3.10).'

The apostle entered a Jewish school where there was a number of Jews and called them to God. Al-Numan b. Amr and al-Harith b. Zayd said to him:

'What is your religion, Mohammed?
'The religion of Abraham.'
'But Abraham was a Jew.'
'Then let the Torah judge between us.'

They refused, and so God sent down concerning them: 'Hast thou not seen how those who have received a portion of scripture when invited to God's book that it may judge between them, a party of them turn their backs in opposition. That is because they say, The fire will not touch us except for a limited time. What they were inventing has deceived them in their religion.'

The Jewish rabbis and the Christians of Najran, when they were together before the apostle, broke into disputing. The rabbis said that Abraham was nothing but a Jew. The Christians said he was nothing but a Christian; so God revealed concerning them: 'O Scripture folk, Why do you argue about Abraham when the Torah and the Gospel were not sent down until after his time? Can it be that you do not understand? Behold, you are they who argue of what you know something, but why do you argue about what you know nothing? God knows but you do not know. Abraham was neither a Jew nor a Christian but he was a Muslim hanif and he was not a polytheist. Those who are the nearest to Abraham are those who follow him and this prophet and those who believe, God being the friend of believers (Koran 3.58).'

Abdullah b. Sayf and Adiy b. Zayd and al-Hanth b. Auf agreed among themselves that they should affect to believe in what had been sent down to Mohammed and his companions at one time and deny it at another so as to confuse them, with the object of getting them to follow their example and give up his religion. So God sent down concerning them: 'O Scripture folk, why confuse ye the true with the false and conceal the truth which you know? Some of the Scripture folk said, Believe in that which has been sent down to those that believe at the beginning of the day and deny it at the end of the day; perhaps they will go back (on it).'

Believe only in one who follows your religion. Say, The guidance is God's guidance that anyone should be given the like of what you have been given or that they may argue with you before their Lord. Say: the bounty is in the hand of God. He giveth it to whom he pleases and God is all-embracing and all-knowing (Koran 3.64).'

Abu Rafi al-Qurazi said when the rabbis and the Christians from Najran had assembled before the apostle and he invited them to Islam, 'Do you want us, Mohammed, to worship you as the Christians worship Jesus, Son of Mary?' One of the Christians called al-Ribbis (or al-Ris or al-Rais) said, 'Is that what you want of us and invite us to, Mohammed?' or words to that effect. The apostle replied, 'God forbid that I should worship anyone but God or order that any but He should be worshipped. God did not send me and order me to do that' or words to that effect. So God sent down concerning their words: 'No mortal to whom God has sent a book and authority and prophecy could say to men. Worship me instead of God; but Be learned in that you teach the book and in that you study it' as far as the words 'After ye had become Muslims' (Koran 3.73) (316). And he did not command you to take the angels and prophets as lords. Would He command you to disbelieve after you had become Muslims?'

Then he mentions how God had imposed on them and on their prophets the obligation to bear witness to his truth when he came to them and their taking that upon themselves and he says: 'When God made His covenant with the prophets (He said) Behold that which I have given you—a book and wisdom. Then when an apostle shall come to you confirming what you have, you shall believe in him and help him. He said, Do you agree and take upon yourselves my burden? They answered, We agree. He said, Then bear witness, I being with you as a witness' to the end of the passage.

Shas b. Qays, who was an old man hardened in unbelief and most bitter against the Muslims and exceeding envious of them, passed by a number of the apostle's companions from Aus and Khazraj in a meeting while they were talking together. When he saw their amity and unity and their happy relations in Islam after their enmity in pagan times he was filled with rage and said: 'The chiefs of B. Qayla in this country having united there will be no firm place for us with them.' So he gave orders to a Jewish youth who was with them to go to them and sit with them and mention the battle of Buath and the preceding events, and recite to them some of the poetry composed by each side.

Now at the battle of Buath Aus and Khazraj fought and the victory went to Aus who were commanded at the time by Hudayr b. Simak al-Ashhali the father of Usayd b. Hudayr, Khazraj being led by Amr b. al-Numan al-Bayadi, and both were killed (317).

The youth did so. Thereupon the people began to talk and to quarrel and to boast until two men of the two clans leapt up, Aus b. Qayl of B. Haritha b. Harith of Aus and Jabbar b. Sakhr of B. Salama of Khazraj. They began to hold forth against each other until one of them said, 'If you wish we will do the same again.' Thereupon both sides became enraged and said,

'We will. Your meeting-place is outside—that being the volcanic tract—To arms! To arms!' So out they went and when the news reached the apostle he went out with such of the emigrants as were with him and said to them: 'O Muslims, remember God. Remember God. Will you act as pagans while I am with you after God has guided you to Islam and honoured you thereby and made a clean break with paganism; delivered you thereby from unbelief; made you friends thereby? Then the people realised that the dissension was due to Satan and the guile of their enemy. They wept and the men of Aus and Khazraj embraced one another. Then they went off with the apostle, attentive and obedient, God having quenched the guile of the enemy of God Shas b. Qays. So God sent down concerning him, and what he did: 'Say: O Scripture folk, why do you deny God's signs while God is witness of what you do? Say, O Scripture folk, why do you keep those who believe from God's way wishing to make it crooked when you are witnesses and God is not unmindful of what you are doing? (Koran 3.93)'

God sent down concerning Aus and Jabbar and the people who were with them when Shas brought back for a moment the atmosphere of pagan days, 'O you who believe, if you obey some of those to whom a book has been given they will make you unbelievers again after your faith. How can you disbelieve when God's verses are read to you and His apostle is with you? He who holds fast to God is guided to a straight path. O ye who believe, fear God as He ought to be feared and die not except as Muslims' as far as the words 'Those shall have a painful punishment'.

When Abdullah b. Salam, Thalaba b. Saya, and Usayd b. Saya, and Asad b. Ubayd and other Jews became Muslims and believed and were earnest and firm in Islam, the rabbis who disbelieved said that it was only the bad Jews who believed in Mohammed and followed him. Had they been good men they would not have forsaken the religion of their fathers and adopted another. So God sent down concerning what they had said: 'They are not (all) alike: of the scripture folk there is an upright community who read God's verses in the night season prostrating themselves (318). They believe in God and the last day and enjoin good conduct and forbid evil and vie with one another in good works. Those are the righteous.'

Some Muslims remained friends with the Jews because of the tie of mutual protection and alliance which had subsisted between them, so God sent down concerning them and forbidding them to take them as intimate friends: 'O you who believe, do not choose those outside your community as intimate friends. They will spare no pains to corrupt you longing for your ruin. From their mouths hatred has already shown itself and what their breasts conceal is greater. We have made the signs plain to you if you will understand. Behold you love them but they love not you and you believe in the book—all of it (Koran 3.114; "Believing in the book" is a very important feature of those religion which we could identify as belief systems in which the "Law of God" is prevalent over societies that are ruled by the "Law of Man", such as Greece or Rome. These two fundamental viewpoints are diametrical opposed to one another and caused conflict between them for 3000 years.), i.e. you believe in their book and in the books that were before that while they deny your book, so that you have more right to hate them than they to hate you. And when they meet you they say, We believe and when they go apart they bite their fingers against you in rage. Say, Die in your rage', etc.

Abu Bakr went into a Jewish school and found a good many men gathered round a certain Finhas, one of their learned rabbis, and another rabbi called Ashya". Abu Bakr called on the former to fear God and become a Muslim because he knew that Mohammed was the apostle of God who had brought the truth from Him and that they would find it written in the Torah and the Gospel. Finhas replied: 'We are not poor compared to Allah but He is poor compared to us. We do not humble ourselves to Him as He humbles Himself to us; we are independent of Him while He needs us. Were He independent of us He would not ask us to lend Him our money as your master pretends, prohibiting you to take interest and allowing us to. Had He been independent of us He would not have given us interest'. (* The key to this seemingly blasphemous utterance is in the words 'As your master pretends'. Later Muslim scholars would have called it an ilzam, a form of the argumentum ad absurdum in which an opponent's proposition is adopted and followed to its (absurd) conclusion. The Jews had objected to contributing to the cost of the war against the Meccans saying that if God needed their money as the apostle said they must be better off than He!)

Abu Bakr was enraged and hit Finhas hard on the face, saying, 'Were it not for the treaty between us I would cut off your head, you enemy of Allah!' Finhas immediately went to the apostle and said, 'Look, Mohammed, at what your companion has done.' The apostle asked Abu Bakr what had impelled him to do such a thing and he answered: 'The enemy of Allah spoke blasphemy. He alleged that Allah was poor and that they were rich and I was so angry that I hit his face.' Finhas contradicted this and denied that he had said it, so Allah sent down refuting him and confirming what Abu Bakr had said: 'Allah has heard the speech of those who say: "Allah is poor and we are rich." We shall write what they say and their killing the prophets wrongfully and we shall say, Taste the punishment of burning (Koran 3.177; Notice how much Islam is obsessed with torture, torment, fear, pain, punishment, anger and hatred against any non-Muslim or any other kind of 'law-breaker'. These emotional displays are not only rhetoric but became a cult meant to be real. Notice also in what kind of environment this fervour grew up. In the 6th and 7th centuries, the entire West of Asia, the North of Africa, and Europe in its entirety were in the grip of several different plagues, most nations were engulfed in total war. An incredible misery and a cult of torture and death was the outcome, pretty much like in medieval Europe between the 14th to the 16th centuries. Millions of people died on the world-war-scale.)'

And there came down concerning Abu Bakr and the anger that he felt: 'And you will certainly hear from those who received the book before you and from the polytheists much wrong but if you persevere and fear God that is of the steadfastness of things.'

Then He said concerning what Finhas and the other rabbis with him said: 'And when God laid a charge upon those who had received the book: You are to make it clear to men and not to conceal it, they cast it behind their backs and sold it for a small price. Wretched is the exchange!'

Think not that those who rejoice in what they have done and want to be praised for what they have not done—think not that they will escape the punishment: theirs will be a painful punishment'. (* Koran 3.114; Muslims, just like the Jewish ancient Messianic Movement from the Qumran communities and James the brother of Jesus, believe to follow a righteous cause by absolutely following 'the book', the 'Law of God'. Threatenings, hatred, and punishments are considered righteous and important political tools to achieve total supremacy over Kafirs, apostates, traitors and other opponents.) He means Finhas and Ashya and the rabbis like them who rejoice in what they enjoy of worldly things by making error attractive to men and wish to be praised for what they have not done so that men will say they are learned when they are nothing of the kind, not bringing them to truth and guidance and wanting men to say that they have so done.

Kardam, Usama, Nafi, Bahri, Huyayy, and Rifaa (Their names have already been given in full.) used to go to some of the helpers advising them not to contribute to the public expenses, 'for we fear that you will come to poverty. Don't be in a hurry to contribute, for you do not know the outcome.' So God sent down concerning them: 'Who are avaricious and enjoin avarice on others concealing the bounty they have received from God', i.e. the Torah which confirms what Mohammed brought (One would naturally suppose that their wealth is referred to here.). 'We have prepared for the unbelievers a shameful punishment, and those who spend their money to be seen of men and believe not in God and the last day' as far as the words 'God knows about them'.

Rifaa was a notable Jew. When he spoke to the apostle he twisted his tongue and said: 'Give us your attention, Mohammed, so that we can make you understand.' Then he attacked Islam and reviled it. So God sent down concerning him: 'Hast thou considered those to whom a part of the book has been given how they buy error and wish that you should err as to the way. But God knows best about your enemies. God is sufficient as a friend and helper. Some of the Jews change words from their contexts and say: We hear and disobey; hear thou as one that heareth not and listen to us, twisting their tongues and attacking religion. Had they said, 'We hear and we obey; hear thou and look at us, it would have been better for them and more upright. But God has cursed them for their unbelief and only a few will believe'.' (Koran 4.47; This text shows that Mohammed knew (1st) that when they said 'We hear' and Asaynd they were playing on the similar-sounding Hebrew word asinu (with sin) meaning 'we carry out', and (2nd) that raina to them meant 'our evil one'. It seems, therefore, probable that ghayra musmain is not to be understood in the sense given above, but as a vocative, 'O thou that hast not been made to hear', i.e. thou who hast not received a divine revelation. The 'tongue-twisting' is revealed as the sarcastic use of Arabic in a Hebrew sense by a bilingual scholar.)

The apostle spoke to two of the chiefs of the Jewish rabbis Abdullah b. Suriya al-A'war and Kab b. Asad calling on them to accept Islam, for they knew that he had brought them the truth; but they denied that they knew it and were obstinate in their unbelief. So God sent down concerning them: 'O you to whom the book was sent, Believe in what We have sent down in confirmation of what you have before We efface (your) features and turn them back to front or curse you as We cursed the sabbath-breakers when God's command was carried out' (Koran 4.50) (319).

And those who formed parties of (the) Quraysh and Ghatafan and B. Qurayza were Huyayy and Sallam and Abu Rafi and al-Rabi' and Abu Ammar and Wahwah b. Amir, and Haudha b. Qays, the latter three being of B. Wail while the rest were of B. al-Nadir. When they came to (the) Quraysh they told them that these were Jewish rabbis, the folk who possessed the first (sacred) book, and they could ask them whether their religion or that of Mohammed was the better. When they did ask them they answered: 'Your religion is better than his and you are on a better path than he and those who follow him.' So God sent down concerning them: 'Hast thou considered those to whom a part of the book has been sent how they believe in al-Jibt and al-Taghut? (320). And they say of those who disbelieve: These are better guided to the right path than those who believe' as far as the words 'or are they envious of men because God has given them of His bounty. We gave the family of Abraham the book and wisdom and We gave them a great kingdom (Koran 4.57).'

Sukayn and Adly b. Zayd said: 'O Mohammed, we do not know of God's having sent down to mortals anything after Moses.' So God sent down concerning their words: 'We have revealed unto thee as we revealed unto Noah and the prophets after him, and we revealed unto Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac and Jacob and the tribes and Jesus and Job and Jonah and Aaron and Solomon and we brought to David the Psalms; and apostles We have told thee of before and apostles We have not told thee of; and God spoke directly to Moses; apostles bringing good news and warning that men might have no argument against God after the apostles (had come). God is Mighty, Wise (Koran 4.161).'

A number of them came in to the apostle and he said to them, 'Surely you know that I am an apostle from God to you.' They replied that they did not know it and would not bear witness to him. So God sent down concerning their words: 'But God testifies concerning what He has sent down to thee. With His knowledge did He send it down and the angels bear witness. And God is sufficient as a witness.'

The apostle went out to the B. al-Nadir to ask their help in the matter of the blood-money of the two Amirites whom Amr b. Umayya al-Damri had slain. And when they were alone together they said, 'You will not find Mohammed nearer than he is now; so what man will get on top of the house and throw a stone on him so that we may be rid of him?' Amr b. Jihash b. Kab volunteered to do so. The apostle got to know of their scheme and he left them and God sent down concerning him and his people's intention: 'O you who believe, remember God's favour to you when a people purposed to stretch out their hands against you and He withheld their hands from you. Fear God and on God let the believers rely (Koran 5.14).'

Numan b. Ada and Bahri b. Amr and Sha's b. Adiy came to the apostle and he invited them to come to God and warned them of His vengeance.

They replied: 'You cannot frighten us, Mohammed. We are the sons and the beloved of God' as the Christians say. So God sent down concerning them: And the Jews and the Christians say, We are the sons and the beloved of God. Say, Then why does He punish you for your sins? Nay you are but mortals of those He has created. He pardons whom He will and He punishes whom He will and to God belongs the kingdom of the heavens and the earth and what lies between them and to Him is the journeying (Koran 5.21; The last word masir may mean 'return').'

The apostle invited the Jews to Islam and made it attractive to them and warned them of God's jealousy and His retribution; but they repulsed him and denied what he brought them. Muadh b. Jabal and Sad b. Ubada and Uqba b. Wahb said to them: 'Fear God, for you know right well that he is the apostle of God and you used to speak of him to us before his mission and describe him to us.' Rafi b. Huraymila and Wahb b. Yahudhi said, 'We never said that to you, and God has sent down no book since Moses nor sent an evangelist or warner after him.' So God sent down concerning their words: 'O scripture folk, our apostle has come to you to make things plain to you after a cessation of apostles lest you should say: No evangelist and no warner has come to us when an evangelist and warner has come to you (now). God is able to do all things.'

Then he recounted to them the story of Moses and their opposition to him, and how they disobeyed God's commands through him so that they wandered in the wilderness forty years as a punishment.

Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri told me that he heard a learned man of Muzayna telling Said b. al-Musayyab that Abu Hurayra had told them that Jewish rabbis had gathered in their school when the apostle came to Medina. A married man had committed adultery with a married woman and they said: 'Send them to Mohammed and ask him what the law about them is and leave the penalty to him. If he prescribes tajbih (which is scourging with a rope of palm fibre smeared with pitch, the blackening of their faces, mounting on two donkeys with their faces to the animal's tail) then follow him, for he is a king and believe in him. If he prescribes stoning for them, he is a prophet so beware lest he deprive you of what you hold.' They brought the pair to Mohammed and explained the position. The prophet walked to meet the rabbis in the school house and called on them to bring out their learned men and they produced Abdullah b. Suriya.

One of the B. Qurayza told me that Abu Yasir and Wahb b. Yahudha were with them and the apostle questioned them so that he got to the bottom of their affair until they said (pointing) to Abdullah b. Suriya, 'This is the most learned man living in the Torah' (321).

He was one of the youngest of them and when the apostle was alone with him he put him on his oath as to whether the Torah did not prescribe stoning for adulterers. 'Yes,' he said, 'they know right well, Abul-Qasim, that you are a prophet sent (by God) but they envy you.' The apostle went out to them and commanded that the two should be stoned and they were stoned at the door of his mosque among B. Ghanm b. Malik b. al-Najjar. Afterwards Ibn Suriya disbelieved and denied that the apostle was a prophet. So God sent down concerning them: 'O apostle, let not those who vie with one another in unbelief sadden thee, those who say with their mouths, We believe, but their hearts do not believe, those Jews who listen to lies, listening for other people who do not come to thee,' i.e. those who sent others and stayed behind themselves and gave them orders to change the judgement from its context. Then He said: 'They change words from their places, saying, If this be given to you receive it, and if it is not given to you, i.e. the stoning, beware of it', etc.

Mohammed b. Talha b. Yazid b. Rukana from Ismail b. Ibrahim from Ibn Abbas told me that the apostle ordered them to be stoned, and they were stoned at the door of his mosque. And when the Jew felt the first stone he crouched over the woman to protect her from the stones until both of them were killed. This is what God did for the apostle in exacting the penalty for adultery from the pair.

Salih b. Kaisan from Nafi, freedman of Abdullah b. Umar from Abdullah b. Umar, told me: When the apostle gave judgement about them he asked for a Torah. A rabbi sat there reading it having put his hand over the verse of stoning. Abdullah b. Salam struck the rabbi's hand, saying, This, O prophet of God, is the verse of stoning which he refuses to read to you.' The apostle said, 'Woe to you Jews! What has induced you to abandon the judgement of God which you hold in your hands?' They answered: 'The sentence used to be carried out until a man of royal birth and noble origin committed adultery and the king refused to allow him to be stoned. Later another man committed adultery and the king wanted him to be stoned but they said No, not until you stone so-and-so. And when they said that to him they agreed to arrange the matter by tajbih and they did away with all mention of stoning.' The apostle said: I am the first to revive the order of God and His book and to practise it.' They were duly stoned and Abdullah b. Umar said, I was among those that stoned them.'

Daud b. al-Husayn from Ikrima from Ibn Abbas said that the verses of The Table in which God said: 'Then judge between them or withdraw from them and if you withdraw from them they will do thee no harm. And if thou judgest, judge with fairness, for God loveth those who deal fairly' were sent down concerning the blood-money between B. al-Nadir and B. Qurayza. Those slain from B. al-Nadir were leaders and they wanted the whole bloodwit while B. Qurayza wanted half of it. They referred the matter for arbitration to the apostle, and God sent down that passage concerning them. The apostle ordered that the matter should be settled justly and awarded the bloodwit in equal shares. But God knows which account is correct.

Kab b. Asad and Ibn Saluba and his son Abdullah and Sha's said one to another, 'Let us go to Mohammed to see if we can seduce him from his religion, for he is only a mortal'; so they went to him and said: 'You know, Mohammed, that we are the rabbis, nobles, and leaders of the Jews; and if we follow you the rest of the Jews will follow you and not oppose us. Now we have a quarrel outstanding with some of our people and if we believe in you and say that you are truthful will you, if we appoint you arbitrator between us, give judgement in our favour?' The apostle refused to do so and God sent down concerning them: And judge between them by what God has sent down and follow not their vain desires; and beware of them lest they seduce thee from some of what God has sent down to thee. And if they turn their backs then know that God wishes to smite them for some of their sins. Many men are evil-doers. Is it that they are seeking the judgement of paganism? Who is better than God in judgement for a people who are certain? (Koran 5.54)

Abu Yasir and Nafi b. Abu Nafi and Azir and Khalid and Zayd and Izar and Ashya came to the apostle and asked him about the apostles he believed in. So the apostle said: 'We believe in God and what he has sent down to us and what was sent down to Abraham and Ishmael and Isaac and Jacob and the tribes and what was given to Moses and Jesus and what was given to the prophets from their Lord; we make no difference between any one of them. And we are submissive unto Him (Koran 3.58).' When he mentioned Jesus, Son of Mary, they denied that he was a prophet, saying, 'We do not believe in Jesus, Son of Mary, or in anyone who believes in him.' So God sent down concerning them: 'O Scripture folk, do you blame us for anything but our belief in God and what He has sent down to us and what was sent down aforetime and because most of you are evil-doers? (Koran 5.64)'

Rafi b. Hariitha and Sallam b. Mishkam and Malik b. al-Sayf and Rafi b. Huraymila came to him and said: 'Do you not allege that you follow the religion of Abraham and believe in the Torah which we have and testify that it is the truth from God?' He replied, 'Certainly, but you have sinned and broken the covenant contained therein and concealed what you were ordered to make plain to men, and I dissociate myself from your sin.' They said, 'We hold by what we have. We live according to the guidance and the truth and we do not believe in you and we will not follow you.' So God sent down concerning them: 'Say, O Scripture folk, you have no standing until you observe the Torah and the Gospel and what has been sent down to you from your Lord. What has been sent down to thee from thy Lord will assuredly increase many of them in error and unbelief. But be not sad because of the unbelieving people (Koran 5.72; meaning any Kafir).'

Al-Nahham and Qardam and Bahri came and said to him: 'Do you not know that there is another god with God?' The apostle answered: 'God, there is no God but He. With that (message) I was sent and that I preach.' God sent down concerning their words: 'Say, What is the greatest testimony? Say God is witness between me and you, and this Koran has been revealed to me that I might warn you by it and whomsoever it reaches. Do you actually testify that with God there are other gods? Say, I do not testify to that. Say He is only One God, and I dissociate myself from what you associate (with Him). Those to whom We sent the book know it as they know their own sons. Those who destroy themselves will not believe (The charge of polytheism made against the Jews is very puzzling and hard to explain. Certainly this passage [Sura 6.19] and the context in which it occurs refers not to the Jews but to the polytheists. That could be one reason. Another is that he wanted to get rid of the political Jewish problem as the Jews accounted for about half of the population. In mind of the Messianic Jews, Mohammed was a liar and imposter as many 'messiahs' and 'prophets' before him and at his time too. This was most certainly a daunting prospect for the future of his Islam in which he demanded total submission of everybody--do not forget: Islam means Submission / Surrender!).'

Rifaa and Suwayd had hypocritically affected to embrace Islam and some of the Muslims were friendly with them. So God sent down concerning these two men: 'O Believers, choose not as friends those who have chosen your religion to make a jest and game of it from among those who received the scripture before you, nor the unbelievers, and fear God if you are believers', as far as the words And when they come to you they say, Wc believe, but they came in in unbelief and they went out with it and God knows best about what they are concealing (Koran 5.62).'

Jabal and Shamwil came to the apostle and said: 'Tell us when the hour will be if you are a prophet as you say.' So God sent down concerning them: 'They will ask you about the hour when it will come to pass. Say, only my Lord knows of it. None but He will reveal it at its proper time. It is heavy in the heavens and the earth. Suddenly will it come upon you. They will ask you as though you knew about it. Say Only God knows about it, but most men do not know (Koran 7.186; To make sense we must supply the words 'that they do not know at the end.')(322).

Sallam and Numan b. Aufa and Mahmud b. Dihya and Sha's and Malik came and said to him: 'How can we follow you when you have abandoned our Qibla and you do not allege that Uzayr is the son of God?' So God sent down concerning these words: 'The Jews say that Uzayr is the son of God and the Christians say the Messiah is the son of God. That is what they say with their mouths copying the speech of those who disbelieved aforetime. God fight them! How perverse they are' to the end of the passage (Koran 9.30) (323).

Mahmud b. Sayhan and Numan b. Ada and Bahri and Lzayr and Sallam came to him and said: Is it true, Mohammed, that what you have brought is the truth from God? For our part we cannot see that it is arranged as the Torah is.' He answered, 'You know quite well that it is from God; you will find it written in the Torah which you have. If men and jinn came together to produce its like they could not.' Finhas and Abdullah b. Suriya and Ibn Saluba and Kinana b. al Rabi and Ashya and Kab b. al-Asad and Shamwil and Jabal were there and they said: 'Did neither men nor jinn tell you this, Mohammed?' He said: 'You know well that it is from God and that I am the apostle of God. You will find it written in the Torah you have.' They said: 'When God sends an apostle He does for him what he wishes, so bring down a book to us from heaven that we may read it and know what it is, otherwise we will produce one like the one you bring.' So God sent down concerning their words: 'Say, Though men and jinn should meet to produce the like of this Koran they would not produce its like though one helped the other' (Koran 17.90) (324).

Huyayy, Kab, Abu Rafi, Ashya, and Shamwil said to Abdullah b. Salam when he became a Muslim, 'There is no prophesy among the Arabs, but your master is a king.' Then they went to the apostle and asked him about Dhul-Qarnayn and he told them what God had sent him about him from what he had already narrated to (the) Quraysh. They were of those who ordered (the) Quraysh to ask the apostle about him when they sent al-Nadr and Uqba to them.

I was told that Said b. Jubayr said: A number of Jews came to the apostle and said: 'Now, Mohammed, Allah created creation, but who created Allah?' The apostle was so angry that his colour changed and he rushed at them being indignant for his Lord. Gabriel came and quietened him saying, 'Calm yourself, O Mohammed.' And an answer to what they asked came to him from God: 'Say, He God is One. God the Eternal. He begetteth not neither is He begotten and there is none equal to Him.'

When he recited that to them they said, 'Describe His shape to us, Mohammed; his forearm and his upper arm, what are they like?' The apostle was more angry than before and rushed at them. Gabriel came to him and spoke as before. And an answer to what they asked came to him from God: 'They think not of God as He ought to be thought of; the whole earth will be in His grasp at the day of resurrection and the heavens folded up in His right hand. Glorified and Exalted is He above what they associate with Him.'

Utba b. Muslim freedman of the B. Taym from Abu Salama b. Abdul-Rahman from Abu Hurayra told me: I heard the apostle say, 'Men question their prophet to such an extent that one would almost say, Now God created creation, but who created God? And if they say that, say ye: He God is One,' etc. Then let a man spit three times to the left and say I take refuge in God from Satan the damned' (325).

A DEPUTATION FROM THE CHRISTIANS OF NAJRAN

A deputation from the Christians of Najran came to the apostle. There were sixty riders, fourteen of them from their nobles of whom three were in control of affairs, namely (1st) the Aqib the leader of the people, a man of affairs, and their chief adviser whose opinion governed their policy, Abdul-Masih by name; (2nd) the Sayyid, their administrator who saw to transport and general arrangements, whose name was al-Ayham; and (3rd) their Bishop, scholar, and religious leader who controlled their schools, Abu Hariitha b. Alqama, one of B. Bakr b. Wail.

Abu Hariitha occupied a position of honour among them, and was a great student, so that he had an excellent knowledge of their religion, and the Christian emperors of the Roman Empire had honoured him and paid him a subsidy and gave him servants, built churches for him and lavished honours on him, because of his knowledge and zeal for their religion.

When they set out from Najran to see the apostle Abu Hariitha was riding on a mule of his with a brother at his side whose name was Kuz b. Alqama (326). Abu Hariitha's mule stumbled and Kuz said, 'May So-and-so stumble,' [i.e. Curse him!], meaning the apostle. Abu Hariitha said, 'Nay but may you stumble.' 'But why, brother?' he asked. 'Because by God he is the prophet we have been waiting for.' Kuz said, 'Then if you know that, what stops you from accepting him?' He replied, 'The way these people have treated us. They have given us titles, paid us subsidies, and honoured us. But they are absolutely opposed to him, and if I were to accept him they would take from us all that you see.' Kuz pondered over the matter until later he adopted Islam, and used to tell this story, so I have heard (327).

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr told me that when they came to Medina they came into the apostle's mosque as he prayed the afternoon prayer clad in Yamanl garments, cloaks, and mantles, with the elegance of men of B. al-Harith b. Kab. The prophet's companions who saw them that day said that they never saw their like in any deputation that came afterwards. The time of their prayers having come they stood and prayed in the apostle's mosque, and he said that they were to be left to do so. They prayed towards the east.

The names of the fourteen principal men among the sixty riders were: Abdul-Maslh the Aqib, al-Ayham the Sayyid; Abu Hariitha b. Alqama brother of B. Bakr b. Wail; Aus; al-Harith; Zayd; Qays; Yazid; Nubayh; Khuwaylid; Amr; Khalid; Abdullah; Johannes; of these the first three named above spoke to the apostle. They were Christians according to the Byzantine rite, though they differed among themselves in some points, saying He is God; and He is the son of God; and He is the third person of the Trinity, which is the doctrine of Christianity. They argue that he is God because he used to raise the dead, and heal the sick, and declare the unseen; and make clay birds and then breathe into them so that they flew away (Koran 3.43), and all this was by the command of God Almighty, 'We will make him a sign to men (Koran 19.21).' They argue that he is the son of God in that they say he had no known father; and he spoke in the cradle and this is something that no child of Adam has ever done. They argue that he is the third of three in that God says: We have done, We have commanded, We have created and We have decreed, and they say, If He were one he would have said I have done, I have created, and soon, but He is He and Jesus and Mary. Concerning all these assertions the Koran came down.

When the two divines spoke to him the apostle said to them, 'Submit (surrender) yourselves (The ordinary meaning of the word must stand here. Mohammed, of course, meant 'Become Muslims'. The Christians answered that they had already submitted themselves to God.)' They said, 'We have submitted.' He said: 'You have not submitted, so submit.' They said, 'Nay, but we submitted before you.' He said, 'You lie. Your assertion that God has a son, your worship of the cross, and your eating pork hold you back from submission.' They said, 'But who is his father, Mohammed?' The apostle was silent and did not answer them. So God sent down concerning their words and their incoherence the beginning of the sura of the Family of Imran up to more than eighty verses, and He said: Alif Lam Mim. God there is no God but He the living the Ever-existent.' Thus the sura begins with the statement that He transcends what they say, and His oneness in creation and authority, without associate therein, in refutation of the infidelity they have invented, and their making rivals to Him; and using their own arguments against them in reference to their master to show them their error thereby. 'God there is no God but He,' no associate is with Him in His authority. 'The Living the Ever-existent,' the living Who cannot die, whereas Jesus died and was crucified according to their doctrine; 'The Ever-existent' one who remains unceasingly in the place of His sovereignty in His creation, whereas Jesus, according to their doctrine, removed from the place where he was and went from it elsewhere. 'He has brought down to thee the book in truth,' i.e. with the truth about which they differ. And He sent down the Torah and the Gospel, 'the Torah to Moses and the Gospel to Jesus, as He sent down books to those who were before him. And He sent down the Criterion,' i.e. the distinction between truth and falsehood about which the sects differ in regard to the nature* of Jesus and other matters. (* Not in the theological sense, though undoubtedly christological differences form background of this sura.) 'Those who disbelieve in God's signs will have a severe punishment. God is Mighty, Vengeful,' i.e. God will take vengeance on all who deny His signs after knowing about them and about what comes from Him in them. 'Nothing in heaven or earth is hidden from God,' i.e. He knows what they intend and scheme and what comparison they seek to establish in their doctrine of Jesus when they make him God and Lord, when they possess the knowledge that he is nothing of the kind, thus behaving with insolence and infidelity. He it is who forms you in the womb as He pleases i.e. Jesus was one who was formed in the womb—they do not attempt to deny that—like every other child of Adam, so how can he be God when he had occupied such a place? Then He says, to lift His transcendence and His essential Unity above what they put with Him, 'There is no God but He the Mighty the Wise.' The Mighty in His victory over those who deny Him when He wills, and the Wise in His argument and His case against His creatures. 'He it is who has sent down to thee the book which has plain verses: they are the core (Lit. 'the mother'.) of the book', in them is the divine argument, the protection of (His) creatures, and the thrusting aside of controversy and falsehood. These are not subject to modification or alteration* in the meaning which has been given. (* The two words used, tasrif and tahrif, are not always clearly defined by the Arab commentators. Lane says that the tasrif of the verses means 'the varying or diversifying of the verses of the Koran by repeating them in different forms, or the making of them distinct in their meanings by repeating and varying them'. As to tahrif. Buhl's article in E.I. should be consulted: It may happen in various ways, by direct alteration of the written text, by arbitrary alterations in reading aloud the text which is itself correct, by omitting parts of it or by interpolations or by a wrong exposition of the true sense. . . ' Ibn Ishaq says that neither the plain nor the obscure verses may be treated with tahrif; but in the latter category tasrif and interpretation may be resorted to—i.e. a meaning may be given to them which the words taken as they stand do not justify.) And others are obscure', they are subject to modification and interpretation. By them God tests His creatures as He tests them with things permitted and forbidden that they should not be changed into what is false and altered by declining from the truth. 'But as to those in whose hearts is a deviation,' i.e. turning away from true guidance, 'they follow what is ambiguous,' i.e. what can be otherwise interpreted to substantiate thereby what they have invented and introduced anew that they may have an argument and a plausible reason for their doctrine, 'desiring fitna,' i.e. confusion, and 'desiring an arbitrary interpretation,' e.g. the error they adopted in explaining 'We created' and 'We decreed'. And none knows its interpretation,' i.e. what they mean by it, 'except God; and those grounded in knowledge. They say, We believe in it. Everything comes from our Lord.' So how can there be any controversy when it is one speech from one Lord? Then they carry over the interpretation of the obscure to the plain which can have only one meaning and thus the book becomes consistent, one part confirming another, the argument effective and the case clear; falsehood is excluded and unbelief is overcome. 'None but the intelligent take heed' in this way. 'O Lord, Suffer not our hearts to go astray after Thou hast guided us,' i.e. Do not let our hearts swerve, though we swerve aside through our sins. 'Grant us mercy from Thy presence. Thou art the Generous Giver.' Then He says, 'God witnesses that there is no God but He, and the angels and the men of knowledge too' contrary to what they say 'subsisting ever in justice,' i.e. in equity. 'There is no God but He the Mighty the Wise. The religion with God is Islarh,' i.e. the religion you practise, O Mohammed, acknowledging the oneness of God and confirming the apostles. 'Those to whom the book was brought differed only after knowledge had come to them,' i.e. that which came to thee, namely that God is One without associate, 'through transgression among themselves. And whosoever disbelieves in God's revelations—God is swift to take into account. And if they argue with thee,' i.e. with the false doctrine they produce about 'We created,' 'We did,' and 'We commanded', it is only a specious argument devoid of truth. 'Say, I have surrendered my purpose to God,' i.e. to Him alone, As have those who follow me. And 'say to those who received the book and to the gentile (converts) who have no book, 'Have you surrendered? For if they have surrendered they will be rightly guided and if they turn their backs it is only incumbent on thee to deliver the message. And God sees (His) servants.'

Then He combined the Jews and Christians and reminded them of what they had newly invented and said: 'Those who disbelieve in God's revelations and kill the prophets wrongfully and kill men who enjoin justice' as far as the words, 'Say, O God possessor of sovereignty,' i.e. Lord of mankind and the King who alone decrees among them. 'Thou givest sovereignty to whom Thou wilt and takest it away from whom Thou wilt. Thou exaltest and abasest whom Thou wilt; in Thy hand is good,' i.e. there is no God but Thee. 'Thou canst do all things,' i.e. none but Thou can do this in thy majesty and power. 'Thou causest the night to pass into day and the day into night and bringest forth the living from the dead and the dead from the living' by that power. And Thou nurturkest whom Thou wilt without stint.' None has power to do that but Thou; i.e. though I gave Jesus power over those matters in virtue of which they say that he is God such as raising the dead, healing the sick, creating birds of clay, and declaring the unseen, I made him thereby a sign to men and a confirmation of his prophethood wherewith I sent him to his people.

But some of My majesty and power I withheld from him such as appointing kings by a prophetic command and placing them where I wished, and making the night to pass into day and the day into night and bringing forth the living from the dead and the dead from the living and nurturing whom I will without stint, both the good and the evil man. All that I withheld from Jesus and gave him no power over it. Have they not an example and a clear proof that if he were a God all that would be within his power, while they know that he fled from kings and because of them he moved about the country from town to town.

Then he admonished and warned the believers and said: Say, If you love God,' i.e. if what you say is true in love to God and in glorifying Him And follow me, God will love you and forgive you your sins,' i.e. your past unbelief. And God is Forgiving Merciful. Say, Obey God and His apostle,' for you know him and find him (mentioned) in your book. But it you turn back,' i.e. to your unbelief, 'God loveth not the unbelievers

Then He explained to them how what God intended to do with Jesus originated and said: 'God chose Adam and Noah and the family of Abraham and the family of Imran above the worlds. They were descendants one of another and God is a Hearer, a Knower.' Then he mentioned the affair of Imran's wife and how she said: 'My Lord, I vow to Thee what is in my womb as a consecrated offering,' i.e. I have vowed him and made him entirely devoted to God's service subservient to no worldly interest. Accept (him) from me. Thou art the Seer the Knower. And when she was delivered of him she said: O my Lord, I have given birth to a female — and God knew best of what she was delivered— and the male is not as the female,' i.e. the two were not the same when I vowed her to thee as a consecrated offering. I have called her Mary and I put her in Thy keeping and her offspring from Satan the damned.' God said: And her Lord accepted her with kindly acceptance and made her grow up to a goodly growth and made Zachariah her guardian' after her father and mother were dead (328).

He mentions that she was an orphan and tells of her and Zachariah and what he prayed for and what He gave him when He bestowed on him Yahya. Then He mentions Mary and how the angels said to her, 'O Mary, God hath chosen thee and purified thee and chosen thee above the women of the worlds. O Mary, be obedient to Thy Lord and prostrate thyself and bow with those that bow', saying, 'That is some of the tidings of things hidden. We reveal it to thee. Thou wast not present with them,' i.e. thou wast not with them 'when they threw their arrows to know which of them should be the guardian of Mary' (329).

Later her guardian was Jurayj, the ascetic, a carpenter of B. Israil. The arrow came out for him so he took her, Zachariah having been her guardian heretofore. A grievous famine befell B. Israil and Zachariah was unable to support her so they cast lots to see who should be her guardian and the lot fell on Jurayj the ascetic and he became her guardian. And thou wast not with them when they disputed,' i.e. about her. He tells him about what they concealed from him though they knew it to prove his prophethood and as an argument against them by telling them what they had concealed from him.

Then He said: 'Then the angels said: O Mary, God giveth thee good tidings of a word from Him whose name is the Messiah Jesus, Son of Mary,' i.e. thus was his affair not as you say concerning him, illustrious in this world and the next,' i.e. with God And of those who are brought near ('to God' or 'by God'). He will speak to men in his cradle and as a grown man, and he is of the righteous ones,' telling them of the phases of life through which he would pass like the other sons of Adam in their lives young and old, although God marked him out by speech in his cradle as a sign of his prophethood and to show mankind where his power lay. 'She said, O my Lord, how can I have a child when no man hath touched me? He said: Thus (it will be) God creates what He will,' i.e. He does what He wishes, and creates what He wills of mortal or non-mortal. 'When He decrees a thing He merely says to it Be' of what He wills and how He wills And it is' as He wishes.

Then He tells her of His intention in regard to him: And He will teach him the book and the wisdom and the Torah' which had been with them from the time of Moses before him And the Gospel,' another book which God initiated and gave to him they had only the mention of him that he would be one of the prophets after him. And an apostle to B. Israil (saying) I have come to you with a sign from your Lord,' i.e. confirming thereby my prophethood that I am an apostle from Him to you. I will create for you from clay the likeness of the form of birds and I will breathe into them and they will become birds by God's permission,' Who has sent me unto you, He being my Lord and yours And I will heal him who was born blind and the leper' (330). And I will quicken the dead by God's permission and I will tell you of what you eat and store up in your houses. Therein is a sign for you' that I am an apostle from God to you, If you become believers. And confirming that which was before me of the Torah,' i.e. what of it preceded me, And to make lawful to you some of that which was forbidden you,' i.e. I tell you about it that it was forbidden you and you abandoned it; then I make it lawful to you to relieve you of it and you can enjoy it and be exempt from its penalties. And I bring you signs from your Lord, so fear God and obey me. God is my Lord and your Lord,' i.e. disowning what they say about him and proving that his Lord (is God). 'So worship Him. This is a straight path,' i.e. that to which I urge you and bring you. 'But when Jesus perceived their disbelief and enmity against him 'He said, Who are my helpers towards God? The disciples said: We are God's helpers. We believe in God.' This is their saying by which they gained favour from their Lord. And bear witness that we are Muslims,' not what those who argue with thee say about Him. 'O our Lord, we believe in what Thou hast sent down and we follow the apostle, so write us down among the witnesses,' i.e. thus was their saying and their faith.

Then He mentions His taking up of Jesus to Himself when they decided to kill him and says: And they plotted and God plotted and God is the best of plotters.' Then He tells them—refuting what they assert of the Jews in regard to his crucifixion—how He took him up and purified him from them and says: 'When God said, O Jesus I am about to cause thee to die and to exalt thee to Myself and to purify thee from those who disbelieve' when they purposed as they did, And am setting those who follow thee above those who disbelieve until the day of resurrection.' The narration continues until the words 'This which We recite unto thee,' O Mohammed, 'of the signs (Koran verses) and the wise warning,' the final, the decisive, the true, in which no falsehood is mingled, of the story of Jesus and of what they differed in regard to him, so accept no other report. 'The likeness of Jesus with God,' And listen! Is as the likeness of Adam whom God created of earth; then said to him: Be; and he was. The truth is from thy Lord,' i.e. the report which comes to thee about Jesus, 'so be not of the doubters,' i.e. the truth has come to thee from thy Lord so do not be doubtful about it; and if they say, Jesus was created without a male (intervening), I created Adam from earth by that same power without a male or a female. And he was as Jesus was: flesh and blood and hair and skin. The creation of Jesus without a male is no more wonderful than this.

Whoso argues with thee about him after knowledge has come to thee,' i.e. after I have told thee his story and how his affair was, 'Then say: Come, let us summon our sons and your sons, our wives and your wives, ourselves and yourselves, then let us pray earnestly (At the sequel shows, the meaning is 'let us invoke God's curse on which of us is lying') and invoke God's curse upon the liars' (331). 'Verily this' which I have brought you of the story of Jesus is the true story' of his affair. 'There is no God but God, and God is Mighty Wise. If they turn back God knows about the corrupt doers. Say, O Scripture folk, Come to a just word between us that we will worship only God and associate nothing with Him and some of us will not take others as lords beside God. And if they turn back say: Bear witness that we are Muslims.' Thus he invited them to justice and deprived them of their argument.

When there came to the apostle news of Jesus from God and a decisive judgement between him and them, and he was commanded to resort to mutual invocation of a curse if they opposed him, he summoned them to begin. But they said: 'O Abu I-Qasim, let us consider our affairs; then we will come to you later with our decision.' So they left him and consulted with the Aqib who was their chief adviser and asked him what his opinion was. He said: 'O Christians, you know right well that Mohammed is a prophet sent (by God) and he has brought a decisive declaration about the nature of your master. You know too that a people has never invoked a curse on a prophet and seen its elders live and its youth grow up. If you do this you will be exterminated. But if you decide to adhere to your religion and to maintain your doctrine about your master, then take your leave of the man and go home.' So they came to the apostle and told him that they had decided not to resort to cursing and to leave him in his religion and return home. But they would like him to send a man he could trust to decide between them in certain financial matters in dispute among them.

Mohammed b. Jafar said: The apostle said, If you come to me this evening I will send a firm and trusty man.' Umar used to say, I never wanted an office more than I wanted that one and hoped that I should get it. I went to the noon prayer in the heat and when the apostle had concluded it he looked to right and left and I began to stretch myself to my full height so that he could see me; but he kept on searching with his eyes until he saw Abu Ubayda b. al-Jarrah and calling him he said, "Go with them and judge between them faithfully in matters they dispute about.'" So, said Umar, Abu Ubayda went with them.

SOME ACCOUNT OF THE HYPOCRITES

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that when the apostle came to Medina the leader there was Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul al-Auf of the clan of B. al-Hubla; none of his own people contested his authority and Aus and Khazraj never rallied to one man before or after him until Islam came, as they did to him. With him was a man of Aus whom Aus obeyed, Abu Amir Abdu Amr b. Sayfi b. al-Numan, one of B. Dubaya b. Zayd, the father of Hanzala, 'the washed' on the day of Uhud.' He had been an ascetic in pagan days and had worn a coarse hair garment and was called 'the monk'. These two men were damned through their high status and it did them harm.

Abdullah b. Ubayy's people had made a sort of jewelled diadem to crown him and make him their king when God sent His apostle to them; so when his people forsook him in favour of Islam he was filled with enmity realising that the apostle had deprived him of his kingship. However, when he saw that his people were determined to go over to Islam he went too, but unwillingly, retaining his enmity and dissimulating.

Abu Amir stubbornly refused to believe and abandoned his people when they went over to Islam and went off to Mecca with about ten followers to get away from Islam and the apostle. Mohammed b. Abu Umama from one of the family of Hanzala b. Abu Amir told me that the apostle said, 'Don't call him the monk but the evil-doer.'

Jafar b. Abdullah b. Abul-Hakam whose memory went back to apostolic days and who was a narrator of tradition told me that before he left for Mecca Abu Amir came to the apostle in Medina to ask him about the religion he had brought.

'The Hanifiya, the religion of Abraham.'

That is what I follow.'

'You do not.'

'But I do! You, Mohammed, have introduced into the Hanifiya things which do not belong to it.'

I have not. I have brought it pure and white.'

'May God let the liar die a lonely, homeless, fugitive!' (meaning the apostle as if he had falsified his religion).

'Well and good. May God so reward him!'

That actually happened to the enemy of God. He went to Mecca and when the apostle conquered it he went to (the City of) Taif; when Taif became Muslim he went to Syria and died there a lonely, homeless, fugitive.

Now there went with him Alqama b. Ulatha b. Auf b. al-Ahwas b. Jafar b. Kilab, and Kinana b. Abd Yalil b. Amr b. Umayr al-Thaqafi.

When he died they brought their rival claims to his property before Caesar, lord of Rome (Nova Roma = Constantinople = Constantinopolis). Caesar said, 'Let townsmen inherit townsmen and let nomads inherit nomads.' So Kinana b. Abd Yalil inherited his property and not Alqama.

Kab b. Malik said of Abu Amir and what he had done:

God save me from an evil deed

Like yours against your clan, O Abdu Amr.

You said, I have honour and wealth',

But of old you sold your faith for infidelity (332).

Abdullah b. Ubayy while maintaining his position among his people kept wavering until finally he adopted Islam unwillingly.

Mohammed b. Muslim al-Zuhri from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Usama b. Zayd b. Haritha, the beloved friend of the apostle, told me that the apostle rode to Sad b. Ubada to visit him during his illness, mounted on an ass with a saddle surmounted by a cloth of Fadak with a bridle* of palmfibre. Said Zayd: 'The apostle gave me a seat behind him. He passed Abdullah b. Ubayy as he was sitting in the shade of his fort Muzaham (333). Round him were sitting some of his men, and when the apostle saw him his sense of politeness would not allow him to pass without alighting. So he got off the animal and sat for a little while reciting the Koran and inviting him to God. He admonished and warned him and preached the good news to him while he, with his nose in the air, uttered not a word. Finally, when the apostle had finished speaking he said, "There would be nothing finer than what you say if it were true. But sit in your own house and if anyone comes, talk to him about it; but don't importune those who do not come to you, and do not come into a man's gathering with talk which he does not like." Abdullah b. Rawaha, who was one of the Muslims who were sitting with him, said, "Nay, do come to us with it and come into our gatherings and quarters and houses. For by God it is what we love and what God has honoured us with, and guided us to." When Abdullah b. Ubayy saw that his people were opposed to him he said:

When your friend is your opponent you will always be humiliated

And your adversaries will overthrow you.

Can the falcon mount without his wings?

If his feathers are clipped he falls to the ground (334).

Al-Zuhri from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Usama told me that the apostle got up and went into the house of Sad b. Ubada, his face showing the emotions raised by Ibn Ubayy, the enemy of God. Sa'd asked the apostle why he looked so angry as though he had heard something that displeased him, and then he told him what Ibn Ubayy had said. Sa'd said: 'Do not be hard on him; for God sent you to us as we were making a diadem to crown him, and by God he thinks that you have robbed him of a kingdom.'

FEVER ATTACKS THE APOSTLE'S COMPANIONS

Hisham b. Urwa and Umar b. Abdullah b. Urwa from Urwa b. al-Zubayr told me that Aisha said: When his apostle came to Medina it was the most fever-infested land on earth, and his companions suffered severely from it, though God kept it from His apostle (This is a realistic description of the 'Justinian Plague' that was ravaging the entire Mediterranean and neighbouring regions between the 6th and 8th centuries.). Amir b. Fuhayra and Bilal, freedmen of Abu Bakr, were with him in one house when the fever attacked them, and I came in to visit them, for the veil had not then been ordered for us. Only God knows how much they suffered from the fever. I came to my father and asked him how he fared and he said:

Any man might be greeted by his family in the morning

While death was nearer than the thong of his sandal.

I thought that my father did not know what he was saying. Then I went to Amir and asked him how he was and he said:

I have experienced death before actually tasting it:

The coward's death comes upon him as he sits.

Every man resists it with all his might

Like the ox who protects his body with his horns (335).

I thought that Amir did not know what he was saying. Bilal when the fever left him lay prostrate in a corner of the house. Then he lifted up his voice and said:

Shall I ever spend a night again in Fakhkh*

With sweet herbs and thyme around me?

Will the day dawn when I come down to the waters of Majanna

Shall I ever see Shama and Tafil again? (336)

(* Cf. Yaq. iii. 854. 11, and Bukhari, i. 471.13. Fakhkh is a place outside Mecca. Majanna in the lower part of Mecca was a market of the Arahs in pagan days.)

I told the apostle what they had said and he remarked that they were delirious and out of their minds with a high temperature. He said, "O God, make Medina as dear to us as Mecca and even dearer! And bless to us its food, and carry its fever to Mahyaa." Mahyaa is al-Juhfa.'

( Cf. Yaq. i. 35. 16, who says it was once a large village with a pulpit on the road from Medina to Mecca about four stages distant from the latter. It was the rendezvous of the Egyptians and Syrians if they wished to avoid Medina.)

Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri from Abdullah b. Amr b. al-As mentioned that, when the apostle came to Medina with his companions, the fever of Medina smote them until they were extremely ill (though God turned it away from his prophet) to such a degree that they could only pray sitting. The apostle came out to them when they were praying thus and said: 'Know that the prayer of the sinner is only half as valuable as the prayer of the stander.' Thereupon the Muslims painfully struggled to their feet despite their weakness and sickness, seeking a blessing.

Then the apostle prepared for war in pursuance of God's command to fight his enemies and to fight those polytheists who were near at hand whom God commanded him to fight. This was thirteen years after his call.

THE DATE OF THE HIJRA

By the preceding isndd from Abdullah b. Hisham who said Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai from Mohammed b. Ishaq told me that the apostle came to Medina on Monday at high noon on the 12th of Rabiul-awwal.

The apostle on that day was fifty-three years of age, that being thirteen years after God called him. He stayed there for the rest of Rabiul-awwal, the month of Rabiul-Akhir, the two Jumadas, Rajab, Shaban, Ramadan, Shawwal, Dhul-Qada, Dhul-Hijja (when the polytheists supervised the pilgrimage), and Muharram.

(THE RAID ON WADDAN WHICH WAS HIS FIRST RAID)

Then he went forth raiding in Safar at the beginning of the twelfth month from his coming to Medina (337) until he reached Waddan, which is the raid of al-Abwa, making for (the) Quraysh and B. Pamra b. Bakr b. Abdu Manat b. Kinana. The B. Damra there made peace with him through their leader Makhshi b. Amr al-Damra.

Then he returned to Medina without meeting war and remained there for the rest of Safar and the beginning of Rabiul-awwal (338).

THE EXPEDITION OF UBAYDA B. AL-H ARITH

During that stay in Medina the apostle sent Ubayda b. al-Harith b. al-Muttalib with sixty or eighty riders from the emigrants, there not being a single one of the Ansar among them. He went as far as water in the Hijaz below Thaniyatul-Murra, where he encountered a large number of (the) Quraysh. No fighting took place except that Sad b. Abu Waqqas shot an arrow on that day. It was the first arrow to be shot in Islam. Then the two companies separated, the Muslims having a rearguard. Al-Miqdad b. Amr al-Bahrani, an ally of the B. Zuhra, and Utba b. Ghazwan b. Jabir al-Mazini, an ally of the B. Naufal b. Abdu Manaf, fled from the polytheists and joined the Muslims to whom they really belonged. They had gone out with the unbelievers in order to be able to link up with the Muslims.

Ikrima b. Abu Jahl was in command of the Meccans (339).

Concerning this raid Abu Bakr composed the following (340).

Could you not sleep because of the spectre of Salma in the sandy valleys,

And the important event that happened in the tribe?

You see that neither admonition nor a prophet's call

Can save some of Luayy from unbelief;

A truthful prophet came to them and they gave him the lie,

And said, 'You shall not live among us.'

When we called them to the truth they turned their backs,

They howled like bitches driven back panting to their lairs;

With how many of them have we ties of kinship,

Yet to abandon piety did not weigh upon them;

If they turn back from their unbelief and disobedience

(For the good and lawful is not like the abominable);

If they follow their idolatry and error

God's punishment on them will not tarry;

We are men of Ghalib's highest stock

From which nobility comes through many branches;

I swear by the lord of camels urged on at even by singing,

Their feet protected by old leather thongs,

Like the red-backed deer that haunt Mecca

Going down to the well's slimy cistern;

I swear, and I am no perjurer,
If they do not quickly repent of their error,
A valiant band will descend upon them,
Which will leave women husbandless.
It will leave dead men, with vultures wheeling round,
It will not spare the infidels as Ibn Harith did (i.e. Ubayda.).

Give the Banu Sahn with you a message
And every infidel who is trying to do evil;
If you assail* my honour in your evil opinion
I will not assail* yours.

(* Abu Dharr refers the meaning of this word to the divine omniscience. In this line possibly Ancestry' rather than 'honour' is the meaning of 'Ird'.)

Abdullah b. al-Zibara al-Sahmi replied thus:

Does your eye weep unceasingly
Over the ruins of a dwelling that the shifting sand obscures?

And one of the wonders of the days

(For time is full of wonders, old and new)

Is a strong army which came to us

Led by Ubayda, called Ibn Harith in war,

That we should abandon images venerated in Mecca,
Passed on to his heirs by a noble ancestor.

When we met them with the spears of Rudayna,

And noble steeds panting for the fray,

And swords so white they might be salt-strewn

In the hands of warriors, dangerous as lions,

Wherewith we deal with the conceited

And quench our thirst for vengeance without delay,

They withdrew in great fear and awe,

Pleased with the order of him who kept them back.

Had they not done so the women would have wailed,

( Lit., the turning away of him who turns to one side. Possibly the writer has in mind Koran 31.17, 'Turn not thy cheek in scorn towards people'.)

Bereft of their husbands all of them.

The slain would have been left for those concerned

And those utterly heedless to talk about.

Give Abu Bakr with you a message:

You have no further part in the honour of Fihri,

No binding oath that cannot be broken

That war will be renewed is needed from me (341).

Sad b. Abu Waqqas, according to reports, said about his having shot an arrow:

Has the news reached the apostle of God

That I protected my companions with my arrows?

By them I defended their vanguard

In rough ground and plain.

No archer who shoots an arrow at the enemy

Will be counted before me, O apostle of God.

'Twas (it was) because thy religion is true

Thou hast brought what is just and truthful.

By it the believers are saved

And unbelievers recompensed at the last.

Stop, thou hast gone astray, so do not slander me.

Woe to thee Abu Jahl, lost one of the tribe! (342).

The flag of Ubayda b. al-Harith according to my information was the first flag which the apostle entrusted to a believer in Islam. Some scholars allege that the apostle sent him when he came back from the raid of al-Abwa before he got to Medina.

HAMZA'S EXPEDITION TO THE SEA-SHORE

While he was staying there he sent Hamza b. Abdul-Muttalib to the seashore in the neighbourhood of Al-Is (Tabari: in the territory of Juhayna) with thirty riders from the emigrants; none of the helpers took part. He met Abu Jahl with three hundred riders from Mecca on the shore, and Majdi b. Amr al-Juhani intervened between them, for he was at peace with both parties. So the people separated one from another without fighting. Some people say that Hamza's flag was the first which the apostle gave to any Muslim because he sent him and Ubayda at the same time, and thus people became confused on the point. They alleged that Hamza had composed poetry in which he says that his flag was the first which the apostle entrusted to anyone. Now if Hamza actually said that, it is true if God wills. He would not have said it if it were not true, but God knows what happened. We have heard from learned people that Ubayda was the first man to receive a flag. Hamza said concerning that, so they allege (343):

Wonder, O my people, at good sense and at folly,
At lack of sound counsel and at sensible advice,
At those who have wronged us, while we have left
Their people and their property inviolate,
As though we had attacked them;
But all we did was to enjoin chastity and justice
And call them to Islam, but they received it not,
And they treated it as a joke.
They ceased not so until I volunteered to attack them
Where they dwelt, desiring the satisfaction of a task well done
At the apostle's command—the first to march beneath his flag,
Seen with none before me,
A victorious flag from a generous, mighty God,
Whose acts are the most gracious.
At even they sallied forth together,
Each man's pot burning with his companion's rage;
When we saw each other, they halted and hobbled
the camels,
And we did the same an arrow-shot distant.
We said to them, 'God's rope is our victorious defence,
You have no rope but error.'
Abu Jahl warred there unjustly,
And was disappointed, for God frustrated his schemes.
We were but thirty riders, while they were two hundred and one.
Therefore, O Lu'ayy, obey not your deceivers,
Return to Islam and the easy path,
For I fear that punishment will be poured upon you
And you will cry out in remorse and sorrow.

Abu Jahl answered him, saying:

I am amazed at the causes of anger and folly
And at those who stir up strife by lying controversy,
Who abandon our fathers' ways.
Those noble, powerful men,
They come to us with lies to confuse our minds,
But their lies cannot confuse the intelligent.
We said to them, O our people, strive not with your folk-
Controversy is the utmost folly—
For if you do, your weeping women will cry out
Wailing in calamity and bereavement.
If you give up what you are doing,
We are your cousins, trustworthy and virtuous.'
They said to us, 'We find Mohammed
One whom our cultured and intelligent accept.'
When they were obstinately contentious
And all their deeds were evil,
I attacked them by the sea-shore, to leave them
Like a withered leaf on a rootless stalk.
Majdi held me and my companions back from them
And they helped me with swords and arrows
Because of an oath binding on us, which we cannot discard,
A firm tie which cannot be severed.
But for Ibn Amr I should have left some of them
Food for the ever-present vultures, unavenged:
But he had sworn an oath, which made
Our hands recoil from our swords.
If time spares me I will come at them again,
With keen, new polished swords,
In the hands of warriors from Lu'ayy, son of Ghalib, Generous in times of dearth and want (The language of this 'poem' and its predecessor owes much to the Koran.) (344).

THE RAID ON BUWAT

Then the apostle went raiding in the month of Rabiul-Awwal making for (the) Quraysh (345), until he reached Buwat in the neighbourhood of Radwa. Then he returned to Medina without fighting, and remained there for the rest of Rabiul-Akhir and part of Jumadal-Ula.

THE RAID ON AL-USHAYRA

Then he raided the Quraysh (346). He went by the way of B. Dinar, then by Fayfaul-Khabar, and halted under a tree in the valley of Ibn Azhar called Dhatul-Saq. There he prayed and there is his mosque. Food was prepared and they all ate there. The place occupied by the stones which supported his cooking-pot is still known. He drank from a watering place called al-Mushtarib (Tabari and Suhayli have Al-Mushayrih). Then he went on leaving al-Khalaiq (According to Yaqut there is a place of this name near Medina which belonged to Abdullah b. Ahmad b. Jahsh.) on the left and went through a glen called Abdullah to this day; then he bore to the left until he came down to Yalyal and halted where it joins al-Dabua.

He drank of the well at al-Dabua and then traversed the plain of Malal until he met the track in Sukhayrat al-Yamam which carried him straight to al-Ushayra in the valley of Yanbu where he stopped during Jumadal-Ula and some days of the following month. He made a treaty of friendship there with B. Mudlij and their allies B. Damra, and then returned to Medina without a fight. It was on this raid that he spoke the well-known words to Ali.

Yazid b. Mohammed b. Khaytham al-Muharibi from Mohammed b. Kab. al-Qurazi from Mohammed b. Khaytham the father of Yazid from Ammar b. Yasir told me that the latter said: Ali and I were close companions in the raid of al-Ushayra and when the apostle halted there we saw some men of B. Mudlij working at a well and on the date palms. Ali suggested (In Tabari 1271 ult, the suggestion is made to Ali by Ammar. Someone has been guilty of a deliberate alteration.) that we should go and see what the men were doing, so we went and watched them for a time until we were overcome by drowsiness and we went and lay down under some young palms and fell fast asleep in the soft fine dust. And then who should wake us but the apostle himself as he stirred us with his foot! It was as we were dusting ourselves that the apostle said to Ali when he saw him covered with dust, 'What have you been up to, Abu Turab (father of dust)?' Then he went on, 'Shall I tell you of the two most wretched creatures? Uhaymir of Thamud who slaughtered the camel, and he who shall strike you here, Ali—and he put his hand to the side of his head—Until this is soaked from it'—and he took hold of his beard.

A learned traditionist told me that the real reason why the apostle called Ali Abu Turab was that when Ali was angry with Fatima he would not speak to her. He did not say anything to annoy her, but he used to sprinkle dust on his head. Whenever the apostle saw dust on Ali's head he knew that he was angry with Fatima and he would say, 'What is your trouble, O Abu Turab?' But God knows the truth of the matter.

THE RAID OF SAD B. ABU WAQQAS

Meanwhile the apostle had sent Sad b. Abu Waqqas with eight men from the emigrants. He went as far as al-Kharrar in the Hijaz. Then he returned without fighting (347).

THE RAID ON SAFAWAN, WHICH IS THE FIRST RAID OF BADR

The apostle stayed only a few nights, less than ten, in Medina when he came back from raiding Al-Ushayra, and then Kurz b. Jabir al-Fihri raided the pasturing camels of Medina. The apostle went out in search of him (348), until he reached a valley called Safawan, in the neighbourhood of Badr. Kurz escaped him and he could not overtake him. This was the first raid of Badr. Then the apostle returned to Medina and stayed there for the rest of Jumadal Akhira, Rajab, and Shaban.

EXPEDITION OF ABDULLAH B. JAHSH AND THE COMING DOWN OF 'THEY WILL ASK YOU ABOUT THE SACRED MONTH'

The apostle sent Abdullah b. Jahsh b. Riab al-Asadi in Rajab on his return from the first Badr. He sent with him eight emigrants, without any of the Ansar. He wrote for him a letter, and ordered him not to look at it until he had journeyed for two days, and to do what he was ordered to do, but not to put pressure on any of his companions. The names of the eight emigrants were, Abu Hudhayfa, Abdullah b. Jahsh, Ukkasha b. Mihsan, Utba b. Ghazwan, Sad b. Abu Waqqas, Amir b. Rabia, Waqid b. Abdullah, and Khalid b. al-Bukayr. (As these men have already been named with full particulars of their genealogy and tribes, only their first names are repeated here.)

When Abdullah had travelled for two days he opened the letter and looked into it, and this is what it said: 'When you have read this letter of mine proceed until you reach Nakhla between Mecca and Al-Taif. Lie in wait there for (the) Quraysh and find out for us what they are doing.' Having read the letter he said, 'To hear is to obey.' Then he said to his companions, 'The apostle has commanded me to go to Nakhla to lie in wait there for (the) Quraysh so as to bring him news of them. He has forbidden me to put pressure on any of you, so if anyone wishes for martyrdom let him go forward, and he who does not, let him go back; as for me I am going on as the prophet has ordered.' So he went on, as did all his companions, not one of them falling back. He journeyed along the Hijaz until at a mine called Bahran above al-Furu', Sa'd and Utba lost the camel which they were riding by turns, so they stayed behind to look for it, while Abdullah and the rest of them went on to Nakhla. A caravan of (the) Quraysh carrying dry raisins and leather and other merchandise of (the) Quraysh passed by them, Amr b. al-Hadrami (349), Uthman b. Abdullah b. al-Mughira and his brother Naufal the Makhzumites, and al-Hakam b. Kaysan, freedman of Hisham b. al-Mughira being among them. When the caravan saw them they were afraid of them because they had camped near them. Ukkasha, who had shaved his head, looked down on them, and when they saw him they felt safe and said, 'They are pilgrims, you have nothing to fear from them.' The raiders took council among themselves, for this was the last day of Rajab, and they said, 'If you leave them alone tonight they will get into the sacred area and will be safe from you; and if you kill them, you will kill them in the sacred month,' so they were hesitant and feared to attack them. Then they encouraged each other, and decided to kill as many as they could of them and take what they had. Waqid shot Amr b. al-Hadrami with an arrow and killed him, and Uthman and al-Hakam surrendered. Naufal escaped and eluded them. Abdullah and his companions took the caravan and the two prisoners and came to Medina with them. One of Abdullah's family mentioned that he said to his companions, 'A fifth of what we have taken belongs to the apostle.' (This was before God had appointed a fifth of the booty to him.) So he set apart for the apostle a fifth of the caravan, and divided the rest among his companions.

When they came to the apostle, he said, 'I did not order you to fight in the sacred month,' and he held the caravan and the two prisoners in suspense and refused to take anything from them. When the apostle said that, the men were in despair and thought that they were doomed. Their Muslim brethren reproached them for what they had done, and the Quraysh said 'Mohammed and his companions have violated the sacred month, shed blood therein, taken booty, and captured men.' The Muslims in Mecca who opposed them said that they had done it in Shaban. The Jews turned this raid into an omen against the apostle. Amr b. al-Hadrami whom Waqid had killed they said meant amaratil-harb (war has come to life) al-Hadrami meant hadaratil-harb (war is present), and Waqid meant waqadatil-harb (war is kindled); but God turned this against them, not for them, and when there was much talk about it, God sent down to his apostle: 'They will ask you about the sacred month, and war m it. Say, war therein is a serious matter, but keeping people from the way of God and disbelieving in Him and in the sacred mosque and driving out His people therefrom is more serious with God (Koran 2.214).' i.e. If you have killed in the sacred month, they have kept you back from the way of God with their unbelief in Him, and from the sacred mosque, and have driven you from it when you were its people. This is a more serious matter with God than the killing of those of them whom you have slain. And seduction is worse than killing.' i.e. They used to seduce the Muslim in his religion until they made him return to unbelief after believing, and that is worse with God than killing. And they will not cease to fight you until they turn you back from your religion if they can.' i.e. They are doing more heinous acts than that contumaciously.

And when the Koran came down about that and God relieved the Muslims of their anxiety in the matter, the apostle took the caravan and the prisoners. (The) Quraysh sent to him to redeem Uthman and al-Hakam, and the apostle said, 'We will not let you redeem them until our two companions come,' meaning Sad and Utba, 'for we fear for them on your account. If you kill them, we will kill your two friends.' So when Sad and Utba turned up the apostle let them redeem them. As for al-Hakam he became a good Muslim and stayed with the apostle until he was killed as a martyr at Bir Mauna. Uthman went back to Mecca and died there as an unbeliever. When Abdullah and his companions were relieved of their anxiety when the Koran came down, they were anxious for reward, and said, 'Can we hope that it will count as a raid for which we shall be given the reward of combatants?' So God sent down concerning them: 'Those who believe and have emigrated and fought in the way of God, these may hope for God's mercy, for God is forgiving, merciful.' That is, God gave them the greatest hopes therein. The tradition about this comes from Al-Zuhri and Yazid b. Ruman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr.

One of Abdullah's family mentioned that God divided the booty when He made it permissible and gave four-fifths to whom God had allowed to take it and one-fifth to God and His apostle. So it remained on the basis of what Abdullah had done with the booty of that caravan (350).

Abu Bakr said concerning Abdullah's raid (though others say that Abdullah himself said it), when (the) Quraysh said, 'Mohammed and his companions have broken the sacred month, shed blood therein, and taken booty and made prisoners' (351):

You count war in the holy month a grave matter,
But graver is, if one judges rightly,
Your opposition to Mohammed's teaching, and your Unbelief in it, which God sees and witnesses,
Your driving God's people from His mosque
So that none can be seen worshipping Him there.
Though you defame us for killing him,
More dangerous to Islam is the sinner who envies.
Our lances drank of Ibn al-Hadrami's blood
In Nakhia when Waqid lit the flame of war,
Uthman ibn Abdullah is with us,

A leather band streaming with blood restrains him (Koran 2.214 f. which these lines endeavour to put into verse.).

THE CHANGE OF THE QIBLA TO THE KAABA

It is said that the Qibla was changed in Shaban at the beginning of the eighteenth month after the apostle's arrival in Medina.

THE GREAT EXPEDITION OF BADR

Then the apostle heard that Abu Sufyan b. Harb was coming from Syria with a large caravan of (the) Quraysh, containing their money and merchandise, accompanied by some thirty or forty men, of whom were Makhrama b. Naufal b. Uhayb b. Abdu Manaf b. Zuhra, and Amr b. al-As b. Wail b. Hisham (352).

Mohammed b. Muslim al-Zuhri and Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr and Yazid b. Ruman from Unva b. al-Zubayr, and other scholars of ours from Ibn Abbas, each one of them told me some of this story and their account is collected in what I have drawn up of the story of Badr. They said that when the apostle heard about Abu Sufyan coming from Syria, he summoned the Muslims and said, 'This is the Quraysh caravan containing their property. Go out to attack it, perhaps God will give it as a prey.' The people answered his summons, some eagerly, others reluctantly because they had not thought that the apostle would go to war. When he got near to the Hijaz, Abu Sufyan was seeking news, and questioning every rider in his anxiety, until he got news from some riders that Mohammed had called out his companions against him and his caravan. He took alarm at that and hired Damdam b. Amr al-Ghifari and sent him to Mecca, ordering him to call out (the) Quraysh in defence of their property, and to tell them that Mohammed was lying in wait for it with his companions. So Damdam left for Mecca at full speed.

THE DREAM OF ATIKA D. OF ABDUL-MUTTALIB

A person above suspicion told me on the authority of Ikrima from b. Abbas and Yazid b. Ruman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, saying: 'three days before Pamdam arrived Atika saw a vision which frightened her. She sent to her brother al-Abbas saying, "Brother, last night I saw a vision which frightened me and I am afraid that evil and misfortune will come upon your people, so treat what I tell you as a confidence." He asked what she had seen, and she said, "I saw a rider coming upon a camel who halted in the valley. Then he cried at the top of his voice, 'Come forth, O people, do not leave your men to face a disaster that will come in three days time (Lit. 'Come forth ye perfidious to your disaster', etc. See Suhayli's note in he.)' I saw the people flock to him, and then he went into the mosque with the people following him. While they were round him his camel mounted to the top of the Kaaba. Then he called out again, using the same words. Then his camel mounted to the top of Abu Qubays (A mountain hard by.), 2 and he cried out again. Then he seized a rock and loosened it, and it began to fall, until at the bottom of the mountain it split into pieces. There was not a house or a dwelling in Mecca but received a bit of it." al-Abbas said, "By God, this is indeed a vision, and you had better keep quiet about it and not tell anyone." Then Abbas went out and met al-Walid b. Utba, who was a friend of his, and told him and asked him to keep it to himself. al-Walid told his father and the story spread in Mecca until (the) Quraysh were talking about it in their public meetings.

Al-Abbas said, "I got up early to go round the temple, while Abu Jahl was sitting with a number of (the) Quraysh talking about Atika's vision. When he saw me he said, 'Come to us when you have finished going round the temple.' When I had finished I went and sat with them, and he said, 'O Banu Abdul-Muttalib, since when have you had a prophetess among you?' And what do you mean by that?' I said, 'That vision which Atika saw,' he answered. I said, 'And what did she see?' He said, 'Are you not satisfied that your men should play the prophet that your women should do so also? Atika has alleged that in her vision someone said, "Come forth to war in three days." We shall keep an eye on you these three days, and if what she says is true, then it will be so; but if the three days pass and nothing happens, we will write you down as the greatest liars of the temple people among the Arabs.' Nothing much had passed between us except that I contradicted that and denied that she had seen anything. Then we separated. When night came every single woman of B. Abdul-Muttalib came to me and said, 'Have you allowed this evil rascal to attack your men, and then go on to insult your women while you listened? Have you no shame that you should listen to such things?' I said, 'By God, I have done something; nothing much passed between us but I swear by God that I will confront him, and if he repeats what he has said, I will rid you of him.'

On the third day after Atika's vision, while I was enraged, thinking that I had let something slip which I wanted to get from him, I went into the mosque and saw him, and as I was walking towards him to confront him so that he should repeat some of what he had said and I could attack him, for he was a thin man with sharp features, sharp tongue, and sharp sight, lo, he came out towards the door of the mosque hurriedly, and I said to myself, 'What is the matter with him, curse him, is all this for fear that I should insult him?' But lo, he had heard something which I did not hear, the voice of Pamdam crying out in the bottom of the wadi, as he stood upon his camel, having cut its nose, turned its saddle round, and rent his shirt, while he was saying, 'O Quraysh, the transport camels, the transport camels! Mohammed and his companions are lying in wait for your property which is with Abu Sufyan. I do not think that you will overtake it.

Help! Help! This diverted him and me from our affair."

THE QURAYSH PREPARE TO GO TO BADR

The men prepared quickly, saying, "Do Mohammed and his companions think this is going to be like the caravan of Ibn Hadrami? By God, they will soon know that it is not so." Every man of them either went himself or sent someone in his place. So all went; not one of their nobles remained behind except Abu Lahab. He sent in his place al-As b. Hisham b. al-Mughira who owed him four thousand dirhams which he could not pay. So he hired him with them on the condition that he should be cleared of his debt. So he went on his behalf and Abu Lahab stayed behind.'

Abdullah b. Abu Najih told me that Umayya b. Khalaf had decided to stay at home. He was a stately old man, corpulent and heavy. Uqba b. Abu Muayt came to him as he was sitting in the mosque among his companions, carrying a censer burning with scented wood. He put it in front of him and said, 'Scent yourself with that, for you belong to the women!1 'God curse you and what you have brought,' he said, and then got ready and went out with the rest. When they had finished their preparations and decided to start, they remembered the quarrel there was between them and B. Bakr b. Abdu Manaf b. Kinana, and were afraid that they would attack them in the rear.

The cause of the war between (the) Quraysh and (the) Bani Bakr, according to what one of B. Amir b. Luayy from Mohammed b. Said b. al-Musayyab told me, was a son of Hafs b. al-Akhyaf, one of the B. Mais b. Amir b. Luayy. He had gone out seeking a lost camel of his in Pajnan. He was a youngster with flowing locks on his head, wearing a robe, a good-looking, clean youth.

He passed by Amir b. Yazid b. Amir b. al-Mulawwih, one of (the) B. Yamar b. Auf b. Kab b. Amir b. Layth b. Bakr b. Abdu Manaf b. Kinana in Pajnan, he being the chief of (the) B. Bakr at that time. When he saw him he liked him and asked him who he was. When he told him, and had gone away, he called his tribesmen, and asked them if there was any blood outstanding with (the) Quraysh, and when they said there was, he said, 'Any man who kills this youngster in revenge for one of his tribe will have exacted the blood due to him.' So one of them followed him and killed him in revenge for the blood (the) Quraysh had shed. When (the) Quraysh discussed the matter, Amir b. Yazid said, 'You owed us blood so what do you want? If you wish pay us what you owe us, and we will pay you what we owe. If you want only blood, man for man, then ignore your claims and we will ignore ours'; and since this youth was of no great importance to this clan of (the) Quraysh, they said, 'All right, man for man', and ignored his death and sought no compensation for it.

Now while his brother Mikraz was travelling in Marr al-Zahran he saw Amir on a camel, and as soon as he saw him Amir went up to him and made his camel kneel beside him. Amir was wearing a sword, and Mikraz brought his sword down on him and killed him. Then he twirled his sword about in his belly, and brought it back to Mecca and hung it overnight among the curtains of the Kaaba. When morning came (the) Quraysh saw Amir's sword hanging among the curtains of the Kaaba and recognised it. They said, 'This is Amir's sword; Mikraz has attacked and killed him.' This is what happened, and while this vendetta was going on, Islam intervened between men, and they occupied themselves with that, until when (the) Quraysh decided to go to Badr they remembered the vendetta with B. Bakr and were afraid of them.

Mikraz b. Hafis said about his killing Amir:

When I saw that it was Amir I remembered the fleshless corpse of my dear brother.

I said to myself, it is Amir, fear not my soul and look to what you do. I was certain that as soon as I got in a shrewd blow with the sword, it would be the end of him.

I swooped down on him, on a brave, experienced man, with a sharp sword. When we came to grips I did not show myself a son of ignoble parents, I slaked my vengeance, forgetting not revenge which only weaklings forgo (353).

Yazid b. Ruman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr told me that when (the) Quraysh were ready to set off they remembered their quarrel with (the) B. Bakr and it almost deterred them from starting. However, Iblis appeared to them in the form of Suraqa b. Malik b. Jutham al-Mudlijji who was one of the chiefs of (the) B. Kinana saying, 'I will guarantee that Kinana will not attack you in the rear,' so they went off speedily.

The apostle set out in the month of Ramadan (354). He gave the flag to MusAb b. Umayr b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf b. Abdul-Dar (355). The apostle was preceded by two black flags, one with Ali called al-Uqab and the other with one of the Ansar. His companions had seventy camels on which men rode in turns: the apostle with Ali and Marthad b. Abu Marthad al-Ghanawi one camel; Hamza and Zayd b. Hariitha and Abu Kabsha and Anasa freedmen of the apostle one camel; and Abu Bakr, and Umar, and Abdul-Rahman b. Auf one camel. The apostle put over the rearguard Qays b. Abu Sasaa brother of (the) B. Mazin b. al-Najjar (356).

He took the road to Mecca by the upper route from Medina, then by al-Aqiq, Dhul-Hulayfa, and Ulatul-Jaysh (357). Then he passed Turban, Malal, Ghamisul-Hamam, Sukhayratul-Yamam, and Sayala; then by the ravine of al-Rauha to Shanuka, which is the direct route, until at Irqul-Zabya (358) he met a nomad. He asked him about the Quraysh party, but found that he had no news. The people said, 'Salute God's apostle.' He said, 'Have you got God's apostle with you?' and when they said that they had, he said, 'If you are God's apostle, then tell me what is in the belly of my she-camel here.' Salama b. Salama said to him, 'Do not question God's apostle; but come to me and I will tell you about it. You leapt upon her and she has in her belly a little goat from you!' The apostle said, 'Enough! You have spoken obscenely to the man.' Then he turned away from Salama.

The apostle stopped at Sajsaj which is the well of al-Rauha'; then went on to al-Munsaraf, leaving the Meccan road on the left, and went to the right to al-Naziya making for Badr. Arrived in his neighbourhood he crossed a wadi called Ruhqan between al-Naziya and the pass of al-Safra'; then along the pass; then he debouched from it until when near al-Safra' he sent Basbas b. Amr al-Juhani, an ally of (the)

B. Saida, and Adiy b. Abu Zaghba al-Juhani, ally of (the) B. al-Najjar, to Badr to scout for news about Abu Sufyan and his caravan (Guillaume: Though there is no authority in the printed editions, or in the variants cited therein, I cannot help thinking that the reading should be Irihi and not ghayrihi, Anyone else'. In the earlier raids the prophet had not made inquiries about all and sundry and all he was concerned with was the Meccan caravan and the Meccan army. If the latter were meant in the assumed reading ghayrihi, one feels they would have been explicitly mentioned. Nöldeke reads Irihi, Tabari 1299.). Having sent them on ahead he moved off and when he got to al-Safra', which is a village between two mountains, he asked what their names were. He was told that they were Muslih and Mukhri' (Both names mean 'defecator'). He asked about their inhabitants and was told that they were B. al-Nar and B. Huraq ('Fire' and 'Burning' respectively.), two clans of B. Ghifar. The apostle drew an ill omen from their names and so disliked them that he refused to pass between them, so he left them and al-Safra' on his left and went to the right to a wadi called Dhafirah which he crossed and then halted. News came to him that (the) Quraysh had set out to protect their caravan, and he told the people of this and asked their advice. Abu Bakr and then Umar got up and spoke well. Then al-Miqdad got up and said, 'O apostle of God, go where God tells you for we are with you. We will not say as the children of Israel said to Moses, "You and your Lord go and fight and we will stay at home (Koran 5.27)," but you and your Lord go and fight, and we will fight with you. By God, if you were to take us to Bark al-Ghimad (A place in Yemen, others say the farthest point of Hajar. Tabari, 1300, adds A town of the Abyssinians' [Ethiopians].), we would fight resolutely with you against its defenders until you gained it.' The apostle thanked him and blessed him. Then he said, 'Give me advice, O Men,' "by which he meant the Ansar. This is because they formed the majority, and because when they had paid homage to him in al-Aqaba they stipulated that they were not responsible for his safety until he entered their territory, and that when he was there they would protect him as they did their wives and children. So the apostle was afraid that the Ansar would not feel obliged to help him unless he was attacked by an enemy in Medina, and that they would not feel it incumbent upon them to go with him against an enemy outside their territory. When he spoke these words Sad b. Muadh said, 'It seems as if you mean us,' and when he said that he did, Sad said, 'We believe in you, we declare your truth, and we witness that what you have brought is the truth, and we have given you our word and agreement to hear and obey; so go where you wish, we are with you; and by God, if you were to ask us to cross this sea and you plunged into it, we would plunge into it with you; not a man would stay behind. We do not dislike the idea of meeting your enemy tomorrow. We are experienced in war, trustworthy in combat. It may well be that God will let us show you something which will bring you joy, so take us along with God's blessing.' The apostle was delighted at Sad's words which greatly encouraged him. Then he said, 'Forward in good heart, for God has promised me one of the two parties (i.e. the caravan or the army. Koran 8.7), and by God, it is as though I now saw the enemy lying prostrate.' Then the apostle journeyed from Dhafirah and went over passes called Asafir. Then he dropped down from them to a town called al-Dabba and left al-Hannan on the right. This was a huge sandhill like a large mountain. Then he stopped near Badr and he and one of his companions (359) rode on, as Mohammed b. Yahya b. Habban told me, until he stopped by an old man of the Beduin and inquired about (the) Quraysh and about Mohammed and his companions, and what he had heard about them. The old man said, 'I shall not tell you until you tell me which party you belong to.' The apostle said, 'If you tell us we shall tell you.' He said,

'Tit for tat?' 'Yes,' he replied. The old man said, 'I have heard that Mohammed and his companions went out on such-and-such a day. If that is true, today they are in such-and-such a place,' referring to the place in which the apostle actually was, 'And I heard that (the) Quraysh went out on such-and-such a day, and if this is true, today they are in such-and-such a place,' meaning the one in which they actually were.

When he had finished he said, 'Of whom are you?' The apostle said, 'We are from Ma (i.e. Water.)' Then he left him, while the old man was saying, 'What does "from Ma" mean? Is it from the water of Iraq? (360).'

Then the apostle returned to his companions; and when night fell he sent Ali and al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam and Sad b. Abu Waqqas with a number of his companions to the well at Badr in quest of news of both parties, according to what Yazid b. Ruman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr told me, and they fell in with some water-camels of (the) Quraysh, among whom were Aslam, a slave of B. al-Hajjaj, and Arid Abu Yasar, a young man of B. Al-As b. Said, and they brought them along and questioned them while the apostle was standing praying. They said, 'We are the watermen of (the) Quraysh; they sent us to get them water.' The people were displeased at their report, for they had hoped that they would belong to Abu Sufyan, so they beat them, and when they had beaten them soundly, the two men said, 'We belong to Abu Sufyan,' so they let them go. The apostle bowed and prostrated himself twice, and said, 'When they told you the truth you beat them; and when they lied you let them alone. They told the truth; they do belong to (the) Quraysh. Tell me you two about the Quraysh.' They replied, 'They are behind this hill which you see on the farthest side.' (The hill was al-Aqanqal.) The apostle asked them how many they were, and when they said, 'Many,' he asked for the number, but they did not know; so he asked them how many beasts they slaughtered every day, and when they said nine or ten, he said, 'The people are between nine hundred and a thousand.' Then he asked how many nobles of (the) Quraysh were among them. They said: Utba, Shayba, Abul-Bakhtari, Hakim, Naufal, al-Harith b. Amir, Tuayma, al-Nadr, Zamaa, Abu Jahl, Umayya, Nabih, Munabbih, Suhayl, Amr b. Abdu Wudd.' The apostle went to the people and said, 'This Mecca has thrown to you the pieces of its liver (i.e. Its best men)!'

Basbas and Adiy had gone on until they reached Badr, and halted on a hill near the water. Then they took an old skin to fetch water while Majdi b. Amr al-Juhani was by the water. Adiy and Basbas heard two girls from the village discussing a debt, and one said to the other, 'The caravan will come tomorrow or the day after and I will work for them and then pay you what I owe you.' Majdi said, 'You are right,' and he made arrangements with them. Adiy and Basbas overheard this, and rode off to the apostle and told him what they had overheard.

Abu Sufyan went forward to get in front of the caravan as a precautionary measure until he came down to the water, and asked Majdi if he had noticed anything. He replied that he had seen nothing untoward: merely two riders had stopped on the hill and taken water away in a skin. Abu Sufyan came to the spot where they had halted, picked up some camel dung and broke it in pieces and found that it contained date-stones. 'By God,' he said, 'this is the fodder of Yathrib.' He returned at once to his companions and changed the caravan's direction from the road to the seashore leaving Badr on the left, travelling as quickly as possible.

(The) Quraysh advanced and when they reached al-Juhfa Quraym b. al-Salt b. Makhrama b. al-Muttalib saw a vision. He said, 'Between waking and sleeping I saw a man advancing on a horse with a camel, and then he halted and said: "Slain are Utba and Shayba and Abul-Hakam and Umayya" (and he went on to enumerate the men who were killed at Badr, all nobles of the Quraysh). Then I saw him stab his camel in the chest and send it loose into the camp, and every single tent was bespattered with its blood.' When the story reached Abu Jahl he said, 'Here's another prophet from B. al-Muttalib! He will know tomorrow if we meet them who is going to be killed!'

When Abu Sufyan saw that he had saved his caravan he sent word to (the) Quraysh, 'Since you came out to save your caravan, your men, and your property, and God has delivered them, go back.' Abu Jahl said, 'By God, we will not go back until we have been to Badr'—Badr was the site of one of the Arab fairs where they used to hold a market every year. 'We will spend three days there, slaughter camels and feast and drink wine, and the girls shall play for us. The Arabs will hear that we have come and gathered together, and will respect us in future. So come on!'

Al-Akhnas b. Shariq b. Amr b. Wahb al-Thaqafi, an ally of (the) Beni Zuhra who were in al-Juhfa, addressed the latter, saying, 'God has saved you and your property and delivered your companion Makhrama b. Naufal; and as you only came out to protect him and his property, lay any charge of cowardice on me and go back. There is no point in going to war without profit as this man would have us,' meaning Abu Jahl. So they returned and not a single Zuhrite was present at Badr. They obeyed him as he was a man of authority. Every clan of (the) Quraysh was represented except B. Adiy b. Kab: not one of them took part, so with the return of (the) Beni Zuhra with (the) al-Akhnas these two tribes were not represented at all.

There was some discussion between Talib b. Abu Talib, who was with the army, and some of (the) Quraysh. The latter said, 'We know, O Beni Hashim (clan of Hashim), that if you have come out with us your heart is with Mohammed.' So Talib and some others returned to Mecca. Talib said:

O God, if Talib goes forth to war unwillingly
With one of these squadrons,
Let him be the plundered not the plunderer,
The vanquished not the victor (361).

(The) Quraysh went on until they halted on the farther side of the wadi behind al-Aqanqal. The bed of the wadi—Yalyal—was between Badr and al-Aqanqal, the hill behind which lay (the) Quraysh, while the wells at Badr were on the side of the wadi bed nearest to Medina. God sent a rain which turned the soft sand of the wadi into a compact surface which did not hinder the apostle's movements, but gravely restricted the movements of (the) Quraysh. The apostle went forth to hasten his men to the water and when he got to the nearest water of Badr he halted.

I was told that men of B. Salama said that al-Hubab b. al-Mundhir b. al-Jamuh said to the apostle: Is this a place which God has ordered you to occupy, so that we can neither advance nor withdraw from it, or is it a matter of opinion and military tactics? When he replied that it was the latter he pointed out that it was not the place to stop but that they should go on to the water nearest to the enemy and halt there, stop up the wells beyond it, and construct a cistern so that they would have plenty of water; then they could fight their enemy who would have nothing to drink. The apostle agreed that this was an excellent plan and it was immediately carried out; the wells were stopped; a cistern was built and filled with water from which his men replenished their drinking-vessels.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that he was informed that Sad b. Muadh said: 'O prophet of God, let us make a booth (of palm-branches) for you to occupy and have your riding camels standing by; then we will meet the enemy and if God gives us the victory that is what we desire; if the worst occurs you can mount your camels and join our people who are left behind, for they are just as deeply attached to you as we are. Had they thought that you would be fighting they would not have stayed behind. God will protect you by them; they will give you good counsel and fight with you.' The apostle thanked him and blessed him. Then a booth was constructed for the apostle and he remained there.

The Quraysh, having marched forth at daybreak, now came on. When the apostle saw them descending from the hill Aqanqal into the valley, he cried, 'O God, here come the Quraysh in their vanity and pride, contending with Thee and calling Thy apostle a liar. O God, grant the help which Thou didst promise me. Destroy them this morning!' Before uttering these words he had seen among the enemy Utba b. Rabia, mounted on a red camel of his, and said, 'If there is any good in any one of them, it will be with the man on the red camel: if they obey him, they will take the right way.' Khufaf b. Aima b. Rahada, or his father Aima b. Rahada al-Ghifari, had sent to Quraysh, as they passed by, a son of his with some camels for slaughter, which he gave them as a gift, saying, 'If you want us to support you with arms and men, we will do so;' but they sent to him the following message by the mouth of his son—'You have done all that a kinsman ought. If we are fighting only men, we are surely equal to them; and if we are fighting God, as Mohammed alleges, none is able to withstand Him.' And when Quraysh encamped, some of them, among whom was Hakim b. Hizam, went to the cistern of the apostle to drink. 'Let them be!' he said; and every man that drank of it on that day was killed, except Hakim (Tabari adds: 'He escaped on a horse of his called al-Wajih.' So also al-Agh.) who afterwards became a good Muslim and used to say, when he was earnest in his oath, 'Nay, by Him who saved me on the day of Badr.'

My father, Ishaq b. Yasar, and other learned men told me on the authority of some elders of the Ansar that when the enemy had settled in their camp they sent Umayr b. Wahb al-Jumahi to estimate the number of Mohammed's followers. He rode on horseback round the camp and on his return said, 'Three hundred men, a little more or less; but wait till I see whether they have any in ambush or support.' He made his way far into the valley but saw nothing. On "his return he said, 'I found nothing, but O people of Quraysh, I have seen camels carrying Death—the camels of Yathrib laden with certain death. These men have no defence or refuge but their swords. By God! I do not think that a man of them will be slain till he slay one of you, and if they kill of you a number equal to their own, what is the good of living after that? Consider, then, what you will do.' When Hakim b. Hizam heard those words, he went on foot amongst the folk until he came to Utba b. Rabia and said, 'O Abul-Walid, you are chief and lord of Quraysh and he whom they obey. Do you wish to be remembered with praise among them to the end of time?' Utba said, 'How may that be, O Hakim?' He answered, 'Lead them back and take up the cause of your ally, Amr b. al-Hadrami.' "I will do it," said Utba, And you are witness against me (if I break my word): he was under my protection, so it behoves me to pay his bloodwit and what was seized of his wealth (to his kinsmen). Now go you to Ibn al-Hanzaliya, for I do not fear that any one will make trouble except him (362).' Then Utba rose to speak and said, 'O people of Quraysh! By God, you will gain naught by giving battle to Mohammed and his companions. If you fall upon him, each one of you will always be looking with loathing on the face of another who has slain the son of his paternal or maternal uncle or some man of his kin. Therefore turn back and leave Mohammed to the rest of the Arabs. If they kill him, that is what you want; and if it be otherwise, he will find that you have not tried to do to him what you (in fact) would have liked to do.' Hakim said: I went to Abu Jahl and found him oiling a coat of mail (Or 'shield'.) (363) which he had taken out of its bag. I said to him, "O Abul-Hakam, Utba has sent me to you with such-and-such a message," and I told him what Utba had said. "By God," he cried, "his lungs became swollen (with fear) when he saw Mohammed and his companions. No, by God, we will not turn back until God decide between us and Mohammed. Utba does not believe his own words, but he saw that Mohammed and his companions are (in number as) the eaters of one slaughtered camel, and his son is among them, so he is afraid lest you slay him." Then he sent to Amir b. al-Hadrami, saying, "This ally of yours is for turning back with the folk at this time when you see your blood-revenge before your eyes. Arise, therefore, and remind them of your covenant and the murder of your brother." Amir arose and uncovered; then he cried, "Alas for Amr! Alas for Amr!" And war was kindled and all was marred and the folk held stubbornly on their evil course and Utba's advice was wasted on them. When Utba heard how Abu Jahl had taunted him, he said, "He with the befouled garment (A coarse expression for a coward.) will find out whose lungs are swollen, mine or his (364)."' Then Utba looked for a helmet to put on his head; but seeing that his head was so big that he could not find in the army a helmet that would contain it, he wound a piece of cloth he had round his head.

Al-Aswad b. Abdul-Asad al-Makhzumi, who was a quarrelsome illnatured man, stepped forth and said, 'I swear to God that I will drink from their cistern or destroy it or die before reaching it.' Hamza b. Abdul-Muttalib came forth against him, and when the two met, Hamza smote him and sent his foot and half his shank flying as he was near the cistern. He fell on his back and lay there, blood streaming from his foot towards his comrades. Then he crawled to the cistern and threw himself into it with the purpose of fulfilling his oath, but Hamza followed him and smote him and killed him in the cistern. Then after him Utba b. Rabia stepped forth between his brother Shayba and his son al-Walid b. Utba, and when he stood clear of the ranks gave the challenge for single combat. Three men of the Ansar came out against him: Auf and MuAwwidh the sons of Harith (their mother was Afra) and another man, said to have been Abdullah b. Rawaha. The Quraysh said, 'Who are you?' They answered, 'Some of the Ansar,' whereupon the three of Quraysh said, 'We have nothing to do with you.' Then the herald of Quraysh shouted, 'O Mohammed! Send forth against us our peers of our own tribe!' The apostle said, 'Arise, O Ubayda b. Harith, and arise, O Hamza, and arise, O Ali.' And when they arose and approached them, the Quraysh said, 'Who are you?' And having heard each declare his name, they said, 'Yes, these are noble and our peers.' Now Ubayda was the eldest of them, and he faced Utba b. Rabia, while Hamza faced Shayba b. Rabia and Ali faced al-Walid b. Utba. It was not long before Hamza slew Shayba and Ali slew al-Walid. Ubayda and Utba exchanged two blows with one another and each laid his enemy low. Then Hamza and Ali turned on Utba with their swords and dispatched him and bore away their comrade and brought him back to his friends.

(Tabari 1318.2: His leg had been cut off and the marrow was oozing from it.

When they brought Ubayda to the prophet he said, 'Am I not a martyr,

O apostle of God?' Indeed you are,' he replied. Then Ubayda said,

'Were Abu Talib alive he would know that his words'

We will not give him up till we lie dead around him
And be unmindful of our women and children are truly realised in me.) Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that when the men of the Ansar declared their lineage, Utba said, 'You are noble and our peers, but we desire men of our own tribe.'

Then they advanced and drew near to one another. The apostle had ordered his companions not to attack until he gave the word, and if the enemy should surround them (Tabari: 1318.11 'come near'.) they were to keep them off with showers of arrows. He himself remained in the hut with Abu Bakr. I was informed by Abu Jafar Mohammed b. al-Husayn that the battle of Badr was fought on Friday morning on the 17th of Ramadan. Habban b. Wasi b. Habban told me on the authority of some elders of his tribe that on the day of Badr the apostle dressed the ranks of his companions with an arrow which he held in his hand. As he passed by Sawad b. Ghaziya, an ally of B. Adiy b. al-Najjar (365), who was standing out (366) of line he pricked him in his belly with the arrow, saying, 'Stand in line, O Sawad! 'You have hurt me, O apostle of God,' he cried, And God has sent you with right and justice so let me retaliate.' The apostle uncovered his belly and said 'Take your retaliation.' Sawad embraced him and kissed his belly. He asked what had made him do this and he replied, 'O apostle of God, you see what is before us and I may not survive the battle and as this is my last time with you I want my skin to touch yours.' The apostle blessed him.

Then the apostle straightened the ranks and returned to the hut and entered it, and none was with him there but Abu Bakr. The apostle was beseeching his Lord for the help which He had promised to him, and among his words were these: 'O God, if this band perish today Thou wilt be worshipped no more.' But Abu Bakr said, 'O prophet of God, your constant entreaty will annoy thy Lord, for surely God will fulfil His promise to thee.' While the apostle was in the hut he slept a light sleep; then he awoke and said, 'Be of good cheer, O Abu Bakr. God's help is come to you. Here is Gabriel holding the rein of a horse and leading it. The dust is upon his front teeth.' The first Muslim that fell was Mihja', a freedman of Umar: he was shot by an arrow. Then while Haritha b. Suraqa, one of B. Adiy b. al-Najjar, was drinking from the cistern an arrow pierced his throat and killed him.

Then the apostle went forth to the people and incited them saying, 'By God in whose hand is the soul of Mohammed, no man will be slain this day fighting against them with steadfast courage advancing not retreating but God will cause him to enter Paradise.' Umayr b. al-Humam brother of B. Salima was eating some dates which he had in his hand. 'Fine, Fine!' said he, 'Is there nothing between me and my entering Paradise save to be killed by these men?' He flung the dates from his hand, seized his sword, and fought against them till he was slain, [saying the while

In God's service take no food
But piety and deeds of good.
If in God's war you've firmly stood
You need not fear as others should
While you are righteous true and good.] (Mawardi, 67.)

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that Auf b. Harith—his mother was Afra—said 'O apostle of God, what makes the Lord laugh with joy at His servant?' He answered, 'When he plunges into the midst of the enemy without mail.' Auf drew off the mail-coat that was on him and threw it away: then he seized his sword and fought the enemy till he was slain.

Mohammed b. Muslim b. Shihab al-Zuhri on the authority of Abdullah b. Thalaba b. Suayr al-Udhri, an ally of B. Zuhra, told me that when the warriors advanced to battle and drew near to one another Abu Jahl cried, 'O God, destroy this morning him that more than any of us hath cut the ties of kinship and wrought that which is not approved.' Thus he condemned himself to death.

Then the apostle took a handful of small pebbles and said, turning towards Quraysh, 'Foul be those faces!' Then he threw the pebbles at them and ordered his companions to charge. The foe was routed. God slew many of their chiefs and made captive many of their nobles. Meanwhile the apostle was in the hut and Sad b. Muadh was standing at the door of the hut girt with his sword. With him were some of the Ansar guarding the apostle for fear lest the enemy should come back at him. While the folk were laying hands on the prisoners the apostle, as I have been told, saw displeasure on the face of Sa'd at what they were doing. He said to him, 'You seem to dislike what the people are doing.' 'Yes, by God,' he replied, 'It is the first defeat that God has brought on the infidel and I would rather see them slaughtered than left alive.'

Al-Abbas b. Abdullah b. Ma'bad from one of his family from Ibn Abbas told me that the latter said that the prophet said to his companions that day, 'I know that some of B. Hashim and others have been forced to come out against their will and have no desire to fight us; so if any of you meet one of B. Hashim or Abul-Bakhtari or al-Abbas the apostle's uncle do not kill him, for he has been made to come out against his will.' Abu Hudhayfa said: Are we to kill our fathers and our sons and our brothers and our families and leave al-Abbas? By God, if I meet him I will flesh my sword in him! (367).

This saving reached the apostle's ears and he said to Umar, 'O Abu Hafsa—and Umar said that this was the first time the apostle called him by this honorific—'ought the face of the apostle's uncle to be marked with the sword?' Umar replied, 'Let me off with his head! By God, the man is a false Muslim.' (The verb from which munafiqun, generally rendered 'hypocrites', is formed. Clearly it includes the meaning of a rebel against the prophet's authority; perhaps the underlying idea is feigned obedience.) Abu Hudhayfa used to say, 'I never felt safe after my words that day. I was always afraid unless martyrdom atoned for them.' He was killed as a martyr in the battle of al-Yamama.

The reason why the apostle forbade the killing of Abul-Bakhtari was because he had kept back the people in Mecca from the apostle; he never insulted him or did anything offensive; and he took a prominent part in the cancelling of the boycott which Quraysh had written against B. Hashim and B. al-Muttalib. Now al-Mujadhdhar b. Dhiyad al-Balawi, an ally of the Ansar, of the clan of B. Salim b. Auf, fell in with him and told him that the apostle had forbidden them to kill him. Now al-As Abul-Bakhtari was accompanied by his fellow-rider Junada b. Mulayha d. Zuhayr b. al-Harith b. Asad who was one of B. Layth, and he said, 'And what about my friend here?' 'No, by God,' said al-Mujadhdhar, 'we are not going to spare your friend. The apostle gave us orders about you only.' In that case,' he said, 'I will die with him. The women of Mecca shall not say that I forsook my friend to save my own life.' He uttered this rajaz as al-Mujadhdhar came at him and he insisted on fighting:

A son of the free betrays not his friend
Till he's dead, or sees him safe on his way.

The result was that al-Mujadhdhar killed him and composed these lines thereon:

Do you not know or have you forgotten?
Then note well my line is from Ball.
Those who thrust with Yazan! spears
Smiting down chiefs and bringing them low.
Tell Bakhtari! that he's bereaved of his father
Or tell my son the like of me.
I am he of whom it is said my origin is in Bali.
When I thrust in my spear it bends almost double.
I kill my opponent with a sharp Mashrafi sword,
I yearn for death like a camel overfull with milk.
You will not see Mujadhdhar telling a lie (368).

Then al-Mujadhdhar went to the apostle and told him that he had done his best to take him prisoner and bring him to him but that he had insisted on fighting and the result had been fatal to him (369).

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr told me on the authority of his father; and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr and others on the authority of Abdul-Rahman b. Auf told me the same, saying: Umayya b. Khalaf was a friend of mine in Mecca and my name was Abdu Amr, but I was called Abdul-Rahman when I became a Muslim. When we used to meet in Mecca he would say,

"Do you dislike the name your parents gave you?" and I would say yes; and he would say, "As for me, I do not know al-Rahman, so adopt a name which I can call you between ourselves. You will not reply to your original name, and I will not use one I do not know."

When he said "O Abdu Amr" I would not answer him, and finally I said, "O Abu Ali, call me what you like," and he called me "Abdul-Ilah" and I accepted the name from him. On the day of Badr I passed by him standing with his son Ali holding him by the hand. I was carrying coats of mail which I had looted; and when he saw me he said, "O Abdu Amr," but I would not answer until he said "O Abdul-Ilah." Then he said, "Will you not take me prisoner, for I am more valuable than these coats of mail which you have?" "By God I will," I said. So I threw away the mail and took him and his son by the hand, he saying the while "I never saw a day like this. Have you no use for milk?" Then I walked off with the pair of them' (370).

Abdul-Wahid b. Abu Aun from Sad b. Ibrahim from his father Abdul-Rahman b. Auf told me that the latter said: Umayya said to me as I walked between them holding their hands, 'Who is that man who is wearing an ostrich feather on his breast?' When I told him it was Hamza he said that it was he who had done them so much damage. As I was leading them away Bilal saw him with me. Now it was Umayya who used to torture Bilal in Mecca to make him abandon Islam, bringing him out to the scorching heat of the sun, laying him on his back, and putting a great stone on his chest, telling him that he could stay there until he gave up the religion of Mohammed, and Bilal kept saying 'One! One!' As soon as he saw him he said, 'The arch-infidel Umayya b. Khalaf! May I not live if he lives.' I said, '(Would you attack) my prisoners?' But he kept crying out these words in spite of my remonstrances until finally he shouted at the top of his voice, 'O God's Helpers, the arch-infidel Umayya b. Khalaf! May I not live if he lives.' The people formed a ring round us as I was protecting him. Then a man drew his sword (Akhlafa' means that he put his hand behind him to draw his sword which hung behind him.) and cut off his son's foot so that he fell down and Umayya let out a cry such as I have never heard; and I said to him 'Make your escape' (though he had no chance of escape) I can do nothing for you.' They hewed them to pieces with their swords until they were dead. Abdul-Rahman used to say, 'God have mercy on Bilal. I lost my coats of mail and he deprived me of my prisoners.'

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me he was told as from Ibn Abbas: A man of B. Ghifar told me: I and a cousin of mine went up a hill from which we could look down on Badr, we being polytheists waiting to see the result of the battle so that we could join in the looting. And while we were on the hill a cloud came near and we heard the neighing of horses and I heard one saying "Forward, Hayzum!" (The name of Gabriel's horse.) As for my cousin, his heart burst asunder and he died on the spot; I almost perished, then I pulled myself together.'

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr from one of B. Saida from Abu Usayd Malik b. Rabia who was present at Badr told him after he had lost his sight: If I were in Badr today and had my sight I could show you the glen from which the angels emerged. I have not the slightest doubt on the point.'

My father Ishaq b. Yasar from men of B. Mazin b. al-Najjar from Abu Daud al-Mazini, who was at Badr, told me: I was pursuing a polytheist at Badr to smite him, when his head fell off before I could get at him with my sword, and I knew that someone else had killed him.'

One above suspicion from Miqsam, freedman of Abdullah b. al-Harith from Abdullah b. Abbas, told me, 'The sign of the angels at Badr was white turbans flowing behind them: at Hunayn they wore red turbans' (370).

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

One above suspicion from Miqdam from Ibn Abbas told me: The angels did not fight in any battle but Badr. In the other battles they were there as reinforcements, but they did not fight.

As he was fighting that day Abu Jahl was saying:

What has fierce war to dislike about me,
A young he-camel with razor-like teeth?
For this very purpose did my mother bear me (372).

When the apostle had finished with the enemy he ordered that Abu Jahl should be looked for among the slain. (T. He said, 'O God, do not let him escape Thee!') The first man to find him—so Thaur b. Yazid from Ikrima from Ibn Abbas told me; as well as Abdullah b. Abu Bakr who told me the same—was Mu'adh b. 'Amr b. al-Jamuh, brother of B. Salama, whom they reported as saying: I heard the people saying when Abu Jahl was in a sort of thicket, Abul-Hakam cannot be got at' (373). When I heard that I made it my business, and made for him. When I got within striking distance I fell upon him and fetched him a blow which sent his foot and half his shank flying. I can only liken it to a date-stone flying from the pestle when it is beaten. His son Ikrima struck me on the shoulder and severed my arm and it hung by the skin from my side, and the battle compelled me to leave him. I fought the whole of the day dragging my arm behind me and when it became painful to me I put my foot on it and standing on it I tore it off.' He lived after that into the reign of Uthman.

Mu'awwidh b. Afra passed Abu Jahl as he lay there helpless and smote him until he left him at his last gasp. He himself went on fighting until he was killed. Then Abdullah b. Masud passed by Abu Jahl when the apostle had ordered that he was to be searched for among the slain. I have heard that the apostle had told them that if he was hidden among the corpses they were to look for the trace of a scar on his knee. When they both were young they had been pressed together at the table of Abdullah b. Judan. He was thinner than Abu Jahl and he gave him a push which sent him to his knees and one of them was scratched so deeply that it left a permanent scar. Abdullah b. Masud said that he found him at his last gasp and put his foot on his neck (for he had once clawed at him and punched him in Mecca), and said to him: 'Has God put you to shame, you enemy of God?' He replied 'How has He shamed me? Am I anything more remarkable than a man you have killed? (This is a difficult expression much commented on by Arab writers: other possibilities are: Am I to wonder at, or be angry', etc. Cf. Lane, 2151c and Tabari Glossary 376.) Tell me how the battle went. He told him that it went in favour of God and His apostle (374).

Men of B. Makhzum assert that Ibn Masud used to say: He said to me 'You have climbed high, you little shepherd.' Then I cut off his head and brought it to the apostle saying, 'This is the head of the enemy of God, Abu Jahl.' He said, 'By God than Whom there is no other, is it?' (This used to be his oath.) 'Yes,' I said, and I threw his head before the apostle and he gave thanks to God (375).

Ukkasha b. Mihsan b. Hurthan al-Asadi, ally of B. Abdu Shams, fought at Badr until his sword was broken in his hand. He came to the apostle who gave him a wooden cudgel telling him to fight with that. When he took it he brandished it and it became in his hand a long, strong, gleaming sword, and he fought with it until God gave victory to the Muslims. The word was called al-Aun and he had it with him in all the battles he fought with the apostle until finally he was killed in the rebellion, still holding it. Tulayha b. Khuwaylid al-Asadi (One of the leaders of the apostate rebels.) killed him, and this is what he said about it:

What do you think about a people when you kill them?

Are they not men though they are not Muslims?

If camels and women were captured
You will not get away scatheless after killing Hibal.
I set HIMALA'S breast against them—a mare well used to

The cry of 'Warriors down to the fight!
(One day you see her protected and covered,
Another day unencumbered dash to the fray)
The night I left Ibn Aqram lying
And Ukkasha the Ghanmite dead on the field (376).

When the apostle said, '70,000 of my people shall enter Paradise like the full moon' Ukkasha asked if he could be one of them, and the apostle prayed that he might be one. One of the Ansar got up and asked that he too might be one of them, and he replied, Ukkasha has forestalled you and the prayer is cold.'

I have heard from his family that the apostle said: 'Ours is the best horseman among the Arabs,' and when we asked who, he said that it was Ukkasha. When Dirar b. al-Azwar al-Asadi said, 'That is a man of ours,' the apostle answered, 'He is not yours but ours through alliance' (377).

Yazid b. Ruman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Aisha told me that the latter said: 'When the apostle ordered that the dead should be thrown into a pit they were all thrown in except Umayya b. Khalaf whose body had swelled within his armour so that it filled it and when they went to move him his body disintegrated; so they left it where it was and heaped earth and stones upon it. As they threw them into the pit the apostle stood and said: "O people of the pit, have you found that what God threatened is true? For I have found that what my Lord promised me is true." His companions asked: "Are you speaking to dead people?" He replied that they knew that what their Lord had promised them was true.' Aisha said: 'People say that he said "They hear what I say to them," but what he said was "They know".' (al-Suhayli points out that Aisha was not there at the time, and therefore those who were there are likely to have a better recollection of what the apostle said than she. This tradition is evidently a sly attack on Musa b. Uqba's tradition from Abdullah b. Umar.)

Humayd al-Tawil told me that Anas b. Malik said: 'The apostle's companions heard him saying in the middle of the night "O people of the pit: O Utba, O Shayba, O Umayya, O Abu Jahl," enumerating all who had been thrown into the pit, "Have you found that what God promised you is true? I have found that what my Lord promised me is true." The Muslims said, "Are you calling to dead bodies?" He answered: "You cannot hear what I say better than they, but they cannot answer me."'

A learned person told me that the apostle said that day, 'O people of the pit, you were an evil kinsfolk to your prophet. You called me a liar when others believed me; you cast me out when others took me in; you fought against me when others fought on my side.' Then he added 'Have you found that what your Lord promised you is true?'

Hassan b. Thabit said:

I recognise the dwellings of Zaynab on the sandhill
Looking like the writing of revelation on dirty old paper.

Winds blow over them and every dark cloud
Pours down its heavy rain;
Its traces obscured and deserted
Were once the abodes of dearly loved friends.
Abandon this constant remembrance of them,
Quench the heat of the sorrowing breast.
Tell the truth about that in which there is no shame,
Not the tale of a liar,
Of what God did on the day of Badr,
Giving us victory over the polytheists.
The day when their multitude was like Hira'
Whose foundations appear at sunset
We met them with a company

Like lions of the jungle young and old
In defence of Mohammed in the heat of war
Helping him against the enemy.
In their hands were sharp swords
And well-tried shafts with thick knots.
The sons of Aus the leaders, helped by
The sons of al-Najjar in the strong religion.
Abu Jahl we left lying prostrate
And Utba we left on the ground.
Shayba too with others

Of noble name and descent.
The apostle of God called to them
When we cast them into the pit together.
'Have you found that I spoke the truth?
And the command of God takes hold of the heart?'
They spoke not. Had they spoken they would have said,
'Thou wast right and thy judgement was sound.'

When the apostle gave the order for them to be thrown into the pit Utba was dragged to it. I have been told that the apostle looked at the face of his son Abu Hudhayfa, and lo he was sad and his colour had changed. He said, I fear that you feel deeply the fate of your father' or words to that effect. 'No,' he said, I have no misgivings about my father and his death, but I used to know my father as a wise, cultured, and virtuous man and so I hoped that he would be guided to Islam. When I saw what had befallen him and that he had died in unbelief after my hopes for him it saddened me.' The apostle blessed him and spoke kindly to him.

I have been told that the Koran came down about certain men who were killed at Badr: 'Those whom the angels took who were wronging themselves they asked, What were you (doing)? They said: We were oppressed in the earth. They said: Was not God's earth wide enough that you could have migrated therein? As for them their habitation will be hell—an evil resort.' They were: al-Harith b. Zamaa; Abu Qays b. al-Fakih; Abu Qays b. al-Walid; Ali b. Umayya; and al-As b. Munabbih. These had been Muslims while the apostle was in Mecca. When he migrated to Medina their fathers and families in Mecca shut them up and seduced them and they let themselves be seduced. Then they joined their people in the expedition to Badr and were all killed.

Then the apostle ordered that everything that had been collected in the camp should be brought together, and the Muslims quarrelled about it. Those who had collected it claimed it, and those who had fought and pursued the enemy claimed that had it not been for them there would have been no booty and that had they not engaged the enemy they would not have been able to get anything; while those who were guarding the apostle lest the enemy should attack him claimed that they had an equal right, for they had wanted to fight the enemy, and they had wanted to seize the booty when there was none to defend it, but they were afraid that the enemy might return to the charge and so they kept their position round the apostle.

Abdul-Rahman b. al-Harith and others of our friends from Sulayman b. Musa from Makhul from Abu Umama al-Bahili (378) said: I asked Ubada b. al-Samit about the chapter of al-Anfal and he said that it came down concerning those who took part in the battle of Badr when they quarrelled about the booty and showed their evil nature. God took it out of their hands and gave it to the apostle, and he divided it equally among the Muslims.'

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that Malik b. Rabia one of B. Saida from Abu Usayd al-Saidi said: I got a sword belonging to B. Aidh the Makhzumites which was called al-Marzuban, and when the apostle ordered everyone to turn in what they had taken I came and threw it into the heap of spoils. Now the apostle never held back anything he was asked for and al-Arqam b. Abul-Arqam knew this and asked him for it and the apostle gave it him.'

Then the apostle sent Abdullah b. Rawaha with the good news of the victory to the people of Upper Medina, and Zayd b. Haritha to the people of Lower Medina. Usama b. Zayd said: 'The news came to us as we had heaped earth on Ruqayya the apostle's daughter who was married to Uthman b. Affan, (the apostle having left me behind with Uthman to look after her), that Zayd b. Haritha had come. So I went to him as he was standing in the place of prayer surrounded by the people, and he was saying: "Utba and Shayba and Abu Jahl and ZamaA and Abul-Bakhtari and Umayya and Nubayh and Munabbih have been slain." I said, "Is this true, my father?" and he said, "Yes, by God it is, my son."

Then the apostle began his return journey to Medina with the unbelieving prisoners, among whom were Uqba b. Abu Muayt and al-Nadr b. al-Harith. The apostle carried with him the booty that had been taken from the polytheists and put Abdullah b. Kab in charge, of it. A rajaz poet of the Muslims (379) said:

Start your camels, O Basbas!
There's no halting-place in Dhu Talh*
(* Or, possibly, acacia trees; no place for them to halt.)
Nor in the desert of Ghumayr a pen.
The people's camels cannot be locked up.
So to set them on the way is wiser
God having given victory and Akhnas having fled.

Then the apostle went forward until when he came out of the pass of al-Safra he halted on the sandhill between the pass and al-Naziya called Sayar at a tree there and divided the booty which God had granted to the Muslims equally. (Tabari adds: 'He drank from the water there called al-Arwiq'.) Then he marched until he reached Rauha when the Muslims met him congratulating him and the Muslims on the victory God had given him. Salama b. Salama—so Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Yazid b. Ruman told me—said, 'What are you congratulating us about? By God, we only met some bald old women like the sacrificial camels who are hobbled, and we slaughtered them!' The apostle smiled and said, 'But, nephew, those were the chiefs' (380). When the apostle was in al-Safra, al-Nadr was killed by Ali, as a learned Meccan told me. When he was in Irqul-Zabya Uqba was killed (381). He had been captured by Abdullah b. Salima, one of the B. al-Ajlan.

When the apostle ordered him to be killed Uqba said, 'But who will look after my children, O Mohammed?' 'Hell', he said, and Asim b. Thabit b. Abul-Aqlah al-Ansari killed him according to what Abu Ubayda b. Mohammed b. Ammar b. Yasir told me (382).

Abu Hind, freedman of Farwa b. Amr al-Bayadi, met the apostle there with a jar full of butter and dates (383). He had stayed behind from Badr but was present at all the other battles and afterwards became the apostle's cupper. The apostle said, 'Abu Hind is one of the Ansar; intermarry with him,' and they did so.

The apostle arrived in Medina a day before the prisoners. Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that Yahya b. Abdullah b. Abdul-Rahman b. Asad b. Zurara told him that the prisoners were brought in when Sauda d. Zamaa, the wife of the prophet, was with the family of Afra when they were bewailing Auf and Muawwidh Afra's sons, this being before the veil was imposed on them. Sauda said: 'As I was with them, suddenly it was said: "Here are the prisoners" and I returned to my house where the apostle was. And there was Abu Yazid Suhayl b. Amr in a corner of the room with his hands tied to his neck. I could hardly contain myself when I saw Abu Yazid in this state and I said, "O Abu Yazid, you surrendered too readily. You ought to have died a noble death!" Suddenly the prophet's voice startled me: "Sauda, would you stir up trouble against God and his apostle?" I said, "By God, I could hardly contain myself when I saw Abu Yazid in this state and that is why I said what I did.'" Nubayh b. Wahb brother of B.

Abdul-Dar told me that the apostle divided the prisoners amongst his companions and said, 'Treat them well.' Now Abu Aziz b. Umayr b. Hashim, brother of Musab b. Umayr by the same mother and father, was among the prisoners and he said, 'My brother Musab passed by me as one of the Ansar was binding me and he said: "Bind him fast, for his mother is a wealthy woman; perhaps she will redeem him from you." I was with a number of the Ansar when they brought me from Badr, and when they ate their morning and evening meals they gave me the bread and ate the dates themselves in accordance with the orders that the apostle had given about us. If anyone had a morsel of bread he gave it to me. I felt ashamed and returned it to one of them but he returned it to me untouched' (384).

The first to come to Mecca with news of the disaster was al-Haysuman b. Abdullah al-Khuzai, and when they asked for news he enumerated all the Quraysh chiefs who had been killed. Safwan who was sitting in the hijr said, 'This fellow is out of his mind. Ask him about me.' So they said: 'What happened to Safwan b. Umayya?' He answered, 'There he is sitting in the hijr, and by God I saw his father and his brother when they were killed.'

Husayn b. Abdullah b. Ubaydallah b. Abbas from Ikrima, freedman of Ibn Abbas, told me that Abu Rafi, freedman of the apostle, said, I used to be a slave of Abbas. Islam had entered among us, the people of the house; "Abbas had become a Muslim" (These words are not found in Tabari's quotation from Ibn Ishaq, and so had Ummul-Fadi, and so had I. But Abbas was afraid of his people and disliked to go against them, so he hid his faith; he had a great deal of money scattered among the people. Abu Lahab had stayed behind from the Badr expedition sending in his stead al-As b. Hisham; for that is what they did—any man who stayed behind sent another in his place. And when news came of the Quraysh disaster at Badr God humiliated Abu Lahab and put him to shame while we found ourselves in a position of power and respect. Now I was a weak man and I used to make arrows, sharpening them in the tent of Zamzam, and lo as I was sitting there with Ummul-Fadi sharpening arrows delighted with the news that had come, up came Abu Lahab dragging his feet in ill temper and sat down at the end of the tent with his back to mine. As he was sitting there people said, "Here is Abu Sufyan b. al-Harith b. Abdul-Muttalib (385) just arrived." Abu Lahab said, "Come here, for you have news." So he came and sat with him while the people stood round, and when he asked his nephew for the news he said, "As soon as we met the party we turned our backs and they were killing and capturing us just as they pleased; and by God I do not blame the people for that. We met men in white on piebald horses between heaven and earth, and by God they spared nothing and none could withstand them." So I lifted the rope of the tent and said: "Those were the angels." Abu Lahab struck me violently in the face. I leapt at him, but he knocked me down and knelt on me beating me again and again, for I was a weak man. Ummul-Fadi went and got one of the supports of the tent and split his head with a blow which left a nasty wound, saying, "You think you can despise him now his master is away!" He got up and turned tail humiliated. He only lived for another week, for God smote him with pustules, from which he died.'

(Tabari 1340.10.: His two sons left him unburied for two or three nights so that the house stank [for the Quraysh dread pustules and the like as men dread plague] until finally a man said to them: It is disgraceful! Are you not ashamed that your father should stink in his house while you do not cover him from the sight of men? They replied that they were afraid of those ulcers. He offered to go with them. They did not wash the body but threw water over it from a distance without touching it. Then they took it up and buried it on the high ground above Mecca by a wall and threw stones over it until it was covered.

Ibn Hamid said that Salama b. al-Fadi said that Mohammed b. Ishaq said that al-Abbas b. Abdullah b. Mabad from one of his family on the authority of Abdullah b. Abbas said: 'On the night of Badr when the prisoners were safely guarded, the apostle could not sleep during the first part of the night. When his companions asked him the reason he said: "I heard the writhing of al-Abbas in his prison." So they got up and liberated him whereupon the apostle slept soundly.'

On the same authority I heard that Mohammed b. Ishaq said: "'al-Hasan b. Umara told me from al-Hakam b. Utaba from Miqsam from Ibn Abbas: The man who captured al-Abbas was Abul-Yasar Kab b. Amr brother of the B. Salima. Abul-Yasar was a compact little man while al-Abbas was bulky. When the apostle asked the former how he had managed to capture him, he said that a man such as he had never seen before or afterwards had helped him, and when he described him, the apostle said, "A noble angel helped you against him."') (Suhayil, ii. 79: In the riwdya of Yunus Ibn Ishaq recorded that the apostle saw her (Ummul-Fadi) when she was a baby crawling before him and said, 'If she grows up and I am still alive I will marry her.' But he died before she grew up and Sufyan b. al-Aswad b. Abdul-Asad al-Makhzumi married her and she bore him Rizq and Lubaba. . . .

They did not bury Abu Lahab, but he was put against a wall and stones were thrown upon him from behind the wall until he was covered. It is said that when Aisha passed the place she used to veil her face.)

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father Abbad told me that (the) Quraysh bewailed their dead. Then they said, 'Do not do this, for the news will reach Mohammed and his companions and they will rejoice over your misfortune; and do not send messengers about your captives but hold back so that Mohammed and his companions may not demand excessive ransoms.' Al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib had lost three of his sons: Zamaa, Aqil, and al-Harith b. Zamaa, and he wanted to bewail them. Meanwhile he heard a weeping woman, and as he was blind he told a servant to go and see whether lamentation had been permitted, for if (the) Quraysh were weeping over their dead he might weep for Zama Abu Hakima, for he was consumed by a burning sorrow. The servant returned to say that it was a woman weeping over a camel she had lost. Thereupon he said:

Does she weep because she has lost a camel?
And does this keep her awake all night?
Weep not over a young camel
But over Badr where hopes were dashed to the ground.
Over Badr the finest of the sons of Husays
And Makhzum and the clan of Abul-Walid.
Weep if you must weep over Aqil,
Weep for Harith the lion of lions,
Weep unweariedly for them all,
For Abu Hakima had no peer.
Now they are dead, men bear rule
Who but for Badr would be of little account (386).

Among the prisoners was Abu Wadaa b. Dubayra al-Sahmi. The apostle remarked that in Mecca he had a son who was a shrewd and rich merchant and that he would soon come to redeem his father. When (the) Quraysh counselled delay in redeeming the prisoners so that the ransom should not be extortionate al-Muttalib b. Abu Wadaa—the man the apostle meant—said, 'You are right. Do not be in a hurry.' And he slipped away at night and came to Medina and recovered his father for 4,000 dirhams and took him away.

Then (the) Quraysh sent to redeem the prisoners and Mikraz b. Hafis b. al-Akhyaf came about Suhayl b. Amr who had been captured by Malik b. al-Dukhshum, brother of the B. Salim b. Auf, who said:

I captured Suhayl and I would not exchange him
For a prisoner from any other people.
Khindif knows that its hero is Suhayl
When injustice is complained of.
I struck with my keen sword until it bent.
I forced myself to fight this hare-lipped man.

Suhayl was a man whose lower lip was split (387).
Mohammed b. Amr b. Ata, brother of B. Amir b. Luayy, told me that Umar said to the apostle, 'Let me pull out Suhayl's two front teeth; his tongue will stick out and he will never be able to speak against you again.' He answered, I will not mutilate him, otherwise God would mutilate me though I am a prophet.'

I have heard that in this tradition the apostle said to Umar, 'Perhaps he will make a stand for which you will not blame him' (v.i. 1021 for Suhayl's speech after the death of the prophet.) (388).

When Mikraz had spoken about him and finally agreed on terms with them they demanded the money, and he asked that they would hold him as security and let Suhayl go so that he could send his ransom. They did so and imprisoned Mikraz in his stead. Mikraz said:

I redeemed with costly* she-camels a captive hero.
(The payment is for a true Arab not for clients).
I pledged my person, though money would be easier for me.

But I feared being put to shame.
I said, 'Suhayl is the best of us, so take him back
To our sons so that we may attain our desires' (389).
(* Reading thiman. The variant thamanin is less likely because dhaud generally means from three to ten camels.)

(Tabari 1344.: Ibn Hamid from Salama from Ibn Ishaq from al-Kalbi from Abu Salih from Ibn Abbas told me that the apostle said to al-Abbas when he was brought to Medina, 'Redeem yourself, O Abbas, and your two nephews Aqil b. Abu Talib and Naufal b. al-Harith and your ally Utba b. Amr b. Jahdam brother of the B. al-Harith b. Fihir, for you are a rich man.' He replied, I was a Muslim but the people compelled me (to fight). He answered, 'God knows best about your Islam. If what you say is true God will reward you for it. But to all outward appearance you have been against us, so pay us your ransom.' Now the apostle had taken twenty okes of gold from him and he said, 'O apostle of God, credit me with them in my ransom.' He replied, 'That has nothing to do with it. God took that from you and gave it to us.' He said, I have no money.' 'Then where is the money which you left with Ummul-Fadl d. al-Harith when you left Mecca? You two were alone when you said to her, "If I am killed so much is for al-Fadl, Abdullah and Qutham and Ubaydullah." "By him who sent you with the truth," he exclaimed, 'none but she and I knew of this and now I know that you are God's apostle.' So he redeemed himself and the three men named above.) (All writers on the Sira have drawn attention to the passages referring to the capture of Abbas which Ibn Hisham omitted. See now the pre-Abbasid tradition of Musa b. Uqba, No. 6.)

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that Abu Sufyan's son Amr whom he had by a daughter of Uqba b. Abu Muayt (390) was a prisoner in the apostle's hands from Badr (391); and when Abu Sufyan was asked to ransom his son Amr he said, Am I to suffer the double loss of my blood and my money? They have killed Hanzala and am I to ransom Amr? Leave him with them. They can keep him as long as they like!

While he was thus held prisoner in Medina with the apostle Sad b. al-Numan b. Akkal, brother of B. Amr b. Auf, one of the B. Muawiya, went forth on pilgrimage accompanied by a young wife of his. He was an old man and a Muslim who had sheep in al-Naqi (A place near Medina.). He left that place on pilgrimage without fear of any untoward events, never thinking that he would be detained in Mecca, as he came as a pilgrim, for he knew that (the) Quraysh did not usually interfere with pilgrims, but treated them well.

But Abu Sufyan fell upon him in Mecca and imprisoned him in retaliation for his son Amr. Then Abu Sufyan said:

O family of Ibn Akkal, answer his plea
May you lose each other! Do not surrender the chief in his prime.
The Banu Amr will be base and contemptible
If they do not release their captive from his fetters.

Hassan b. Thabit answered him:

If Sad had been free the day he was in Mecca
He would have killed many of you ere he was captured.
With a sharp sword or a bow of naba wood
Whose string twangs when the arrow is shot.

The B. Amr b. Auf went to the apostle and told him the news and asked him to give them Amr b. Abu Sufyan so that they could let him go in exchange for their man and the apostle did so. So they sent him to Abu Sufyan and he released Sad.

Among the prisoners was Abul-As b. al-Rabi, son-in-law of the apostle, married to his daughter Zaynab (392). Abul-As was one of the important men of Mecca in wealth, respect, and merchandise. His mother was Hala d. Khuwaylid, and Khadija was his aunt. Khadija had asked the apostle to find him a wife. Now the apostle never opposed her —this was before revelation came to him— and so he married him to his daughter. Khadija used to regard him as her son. When God honoured His apostle with prophecy Khadija and her daughters believed in him and testified that he had brought the truth and followed his religion, though Abul-As persisted in his polytheism. Now the apostle had married Ruqayya or Umm Kulthum to Utba b. Abu Lahab, and when he openly preached to (the) Quraysh the command of God and showed them hostility they reminded one another that they had relieved Mohammed of his care for his daughters and decided to return them so that he should have the responsibility of looking after them himself. They went to Abul-As and told him to divorce his wife and they would give him any woman he liked. He refused, saying that he did not want any other woman from Quraysh; and I have heard that the apostle used to speak warmly of his action as a son-in-law.

Then they went to Utba b. Abu Lahab with the same request and he said that if they would give him the daughter of Aban b. Said b. al-As or the daughter of Said b. al-As he would divorce his wife, and when they did so he divorced her, not having consummated the marriage. Thus God took her from him to her honour and his shame, and Uthman afterwards married her.

Now the apostle had no power of binding and loosing in Mecca, his circumstances being circumscribed. Islam had made a division between Zaynab and her husband Abul-As, but they lived together, Muslim and unbeliever, until the apostle migrated. Abul-As joined the expedition to Badr and was captured among the prisoners and remained at Medina with the apostle.

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father Abbad told me that Aisha said: 'When the Meccans sent to ransom their prisoners, Zaynab sent the money for Abul-As; with it she sent a necklace which Khadija had given her on her marriage to Abul-As. When the apostle saw it his feelings overcame him and he said: "If you would like to let her have her captive husband back and return her money to her, do so." The people at once agreed and they let him go and sent her money back.'

ZAYNAB SETS OUT FOR MEDINA

Now the apostle had imposed a condition on Abul-As, or the latter had undertaken it voluntarily—the facts were never clearly established—that he should let Zaynab come to him. At any rate, after Abul-As had reached Mecca the apostle sent Zayd b. Haritha and one of the Ansar with instructions to stop in the valley of Yajaj (About 8 miles / 13 km from Mecca.) until Zaynab passed, and then to accompany her back to him. About a month or so after Badr they went off to take up their position. Meanwhile Abul-As came to Mecca and told Zaynab to rejoin her father, and she went out to make her preparations.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that he had been told that Zaynab said that while she was making her preparations she was met by Hind d. Utba who inquired whether she was going off to rejoin Mohammed. When she said that she did not wish to go, Hind offered to give her anything she needed for the journey as well as money. She need not be shy of her, for women stood closer together than men. However, though she thought she was sincere she was afraid of her and denied that she had any intention of going. But she went on with her preparations.

These completed, her brother-in-law Kinana b. al-Rabi brought her a camel and taking his bow he led her away in a howdah in broad daylight. After discussing the matter Quraysh went off in pursuit and overtook them in Dhu Tuwa. The first man to come up with them was Habbar b. al-Aswad b. al-Muttalib b. Asad b. Abdul-Uzza al-Fihri. He threatened her with his lance as she sat in the howdah. It is alleged that the woman was pregnant and when she was frightened she had an abortion. Her brother-in-law Kinana knelt and emptied his quiver [in front of him] and said, 'By God, if one of you comes near me I will put an arrow through him.' So the men fell back. Then Abu Sufyan with some Quraysh leaders came up and asked him to unbend his bow so that they could discuss the matter. Then he came up to him and said, 'You have not done the right thing. You have taken the woman out publicly over the heads of the people when you know of our misfortune and disaster which Mohammed has brought on us. The people will think, if you take away his daughter publicly over the heads of everyone, that that is a sign of our humiliation after the disaster that has happened and an exhibition of utter weakness. 'Od's life we don't want to keep her from her father and that is not our way of seeking revenge. But take the woman back, and when the chatter has died down and people say that we have brought her back you can take her away secretly to rejoin her father.' This is exactly what happened and one night he took her off and delivered her to Zayd b. Haritha and his companion, and they took her to the apostle.

Abdullah b. Rawaha or Abu Khaythama, brother of B. Salim b. Auf, said of this affair of Zaynab's (393):

Tidings reached me of their wicked treatment of Zaynab,

So criminal that men could not imagine it.
Mohammed was not put to shame when she was sent forth

Because of the result of the bloody war between us.
From his alliance with Pamdam1 and his war with us

Abu Sufyan got but disappointment and remorse.
We bound his son Amr and his sworn friend together
In well-wrought jangling irons.
I swear we shall never lack soldiers,
Army leaders with many a champion.

Driving before us infidel Quraysh until we subdue them

With a halter above their noses (and) with a branding iron.

We will drive them to the ends of Najd and Nakhla.

If they drop to the lowland we will pursue them with horse and foot

So that our road will never deviate.

We will bring upon them the fate of Ad and Jurhum.

A people that disobeyed Mohammed will regret it.

And what a time for showing repentance!

Tell Abu Sufyan if you meet him

If you are not sincere in worship, and embrace Islam

Then shame will come on you speedily in this life

And in hell you will wear a garment of molten pitch for ever! (394)

Abu Sufyan's 'sworn friend' was Amir b. al-Hadrami who was among the prisoners. Al-Hadrami was an ally of Harb b. Umayya (395).

When those who had gone out to Zaynab returned Hind d. Utba met them and said:

In peace are you wild asses—rough and coarse

And in war like women in their courses?

Kinana b. al-Rabi when he handed Zaynab over to the two men said:

I am astonished at Habbar and the paltry ones of his people

Who wish me to break my word with Mohammed's daughter.

I care not for their numbers as long as I live

And as long as my hand can grasp my trusty blade.

Yazid b. Abu Habib from Bukayr b. Abdullah b. al-Ashajj from Sulayman (Solomon) b. Yasar from Abu Ishaq (Isaac) al-Dausi from Abu Hurayra, told me that the latter said: 'The apostle sent me among a number of raiders with orders that if we got hold of Habbar b. al-Aswad or the other man who first got to Zaynab with him (396) we were to burn them with fire. On the following day he sent word to us "I told you to burn these two men if you got hold of them; then I reflected that none has the right to punish by fire save God, so if you capture them kill them."

ABUL-AS B. AL-RABI BECOMES A MUSLIM

When Islam thus came between them Abul-As lived in Mecca while Zaynab lived in Medina with the apostle until, shortly before the conquest (of Mecca), Abul-As went to Syria trading with his own money and that of Quraysh which they entrusted to him, for he was a trustworthy man. Having completed his business he was on his way home when one of the apostle's raiding parties fell in with him and took all he had, though he himself escaped them. When the raiders went off with their plunder Abul-As went into Zaynab's house under cover of night and asked her to give him protection. She at once did so. He came to ask for his property. When the apostle went out to morning prayer—so Yazid b. Ruman told me—and said Allah akbar followed by all present, Zaynab cried from the place where the women sat 'O you men, I have given protection to Abul-As b. al-Rabi (Zaynab called out in a moment of complete silence at the beginning of prayer).' His prayers over, the apostle turned round to face the men and asked them if they had heard what he had heard, and when they said that they had he swore that he knew nothing about the matter until Zaynab made her declaration, adding, 'the meanest Muslim can give protection on their behalf. He went off to see his daughter and told her to honour her guest but not to allow him to approach her for she was not lawful to him.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that the apostle sent to the raiding party which had taken Abul-As's goods saying: 'This man is related to us as you know and you have taken property of his. If you think well to restore it to him we should like that; but if you will not it is booty which God has given you and you have the better right to it.' They replied that they would willingly give it back and they were so scrupulous that men brought back old skins and little leather bottles and even a little piece of wood until everything was returned and nothing withheld. Then Abul-As went to Mecca and paid everyone what was due, including those who had given him money to lay out on their behalf, and asked them if anyone of them had any further claim on him. 'No,' they said, 'God reward you; we have found you both trustworthy and generous.' 'Then,' said he, 'I bear witness that there is no God but the God and that Mohammed is his servant and his apostle. I would have become a Muslim when I was with him but that I feared that you would think that I only wanted to rob you of your property; and now that God has restored it to you and I am clear of it I submit myself to God.' Thus saying he went off to rejoin the apostle.

Dawud b. al-Husayn from Ikrima from b. Abbas told me that the apostle restored Zaynab to him according to the first marriage "after six years had passed" (These words are not in Wüstenfeld's text.) without any new procedure (397).

Among the prisoners who, I was told, were given their freedom without having to pay ransom were: Abul-As whom the prophet freed after Zaynab his daughter had sent his ransom; al-Muttalib b. Hantab b. al-Harith b. Ubayda b. Umar b. Makhzum who belonged [by capture] to some of B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj (He was left in their hands until they let him go, and he went to his people.) (398); Sayfi b. Abu Rifa'a b. Abid b. Abdullah b. Umar b. Makhzum. (He was left in the hands of his captors and when no one came to ransom him they let him go on condition that he should send his ransom, but he broke his word to them. Hassan b. Thabit said in reference to that:

Sayfi is not the man to fulfil his pledge

The back of a fox tired at some waterhole or other* (* Diwan, L. The line is not clear to me.);

and Abu Azza Amr b. Abdullah b. Uthman b. Uhayb b. Hudhafa b.

Jumah. He was a poor man whose family consisted of daughters, and he said to the apostle: 'You know that I have no money, and am in real need with a large family, so let me go without ransom.' The apostle did so on condition that he should not fight against him again. Praising him and mentioning his kindness among his people Abu Azza said:

Who will tell the apostle Mohammed from me

You are true and the divine King is to be praised?

You call men to truth and right guidance,

God himself witnesses to you.

You are a man given a place among us

To which there are steps hard and easy.

Those who fight you die miserably,

Those who make peace live happily.

When I am reminded of Badr and its people

Sorrow and a sense of loss come over me (399).*

(* Guillaume: I prefer the reading fuqudu to quudu.

This is perhaps the most blatant forgery of all the 'poems' of the Sira. The heathen author's record was so bad that the prophet ordered his execution and yet he is made to utter fulsome praise of him and devotion to Islam.)

UMAYR B. WAHB BECOMES A MUSLIM

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr from Urwa b. al-Zubayr told me that Umayr was sitting with Safwan b. Umayya in the hijr shortly after Badr.

Now Umayr was one of the leaders of Quraysh who used to molest the apostle and his companions and cause them distress while he was in Mecca, and his son Wahb was among the prisoners taken at Badr (400).

He mentioned those who were thrown into the well and Safwan said, 'By God, there is no good in life now they are dead.' 'You are right,' said Umayr, 'were it not for a debt outstanding against me which I cannot pay and a family I cannot afford to leave unprovided for, I would ride to Mohammed and kill him, for I have good cause against the lot of them, my son being a prisoner in their hands.' Safwan took him up and said: 'I will discharge your debt and take care of your family with my own so long as they live. All that I have shall be theirs.' Umayr and he agreed to keep the matter secret.

Then Umayr called for his sword and sharpened it and smeared it with poison and went off to Medina. While Umar was talking with some of the Muslims about Badr and mentioning how God had honoured them in giving them victory over their enemies he suddenly saw Umayr stopping at the door of the mosque girt with his sword, and said, 'This dog the enemy of God is Umayr b. Wahb. By God he's come for some evil purpose. It was he who made mischief among us and calculated our numbers for the enemy at Badr.' Then Umar went into the apostle and said, 'O prophet of God, this enemy of God Umayr b. Wahb has come girt with his sword.' He told him to let him come in and Umar advanced and seizing his bandoleer he gripped him round the neck with it. He told the Ansar who were with him to come in and sit with the apostle and to watch the rascal carefully, for he was not to be trusted. When the apostle saw Umayr and Umar grasping the bandoleer round his neck he told Umar to let go and Umayr to advance. He came up and said 'Good morning', for that was the greeting of paganism. The apostle said, 'God has honoured us with a better greeting than thine, Umayr. It is Salam, the greeting of the inhabitants of Paradise.' 'By God, Mohammed, you have taken to it only recently.' 'What brought you?' I have come about this prisoner you have that you may treat him well.' 'Then why have you a sword round your neck?' 'God damn the swords. Have they done us any good?' 'Tell me the truth. Why have you come? I came only for the reason I have told you.' 'Nay, but you and Safwan b. Umayya sat together in the hijr and talked about the Quraysh who were thrown into the well. Then you said "But for debts and family reasons I would go and kill Mohammed." And Safwan assumed responsibility for both if you would kill me for him, but God intervened.' I testify that you are the apostle of God. We used to call you a liar when you brought us tidings from heaven and we denied the revelation you brought. But this is a matter to which only I and Safwan were privy, and none can have told you of it but God. Praise be to God who has guided me to Islam and led me thus.' Then he testified to the truth and the apostle said, 'Instruct your brother in his religion, read the Koran to him, and free his prisoner for him,' and they did so.

Then he said, 'I used to be active in extinguishing the light of God and in persecuting those who followed God's religion. I should like you to give me permission to go to Mecca to summon them to God and His apostle and to Islam that perhaps God may guide them; and if not I will persecute them in their religion as I used to persecute your companions.' The apostle agreed and he went to Mecca. When Umayr had left, Safwan was saying, 'You will soon have some good news which will make you forget what happened at Badr.' Safwan kept questioning riders until one came who told him of Umayr's Islam, and he swore that he would never speak to him again nor do him a service. When Umayr came to Mecca he stayed there summoning people to Islam and treating those who opposed him violently so that through him many became Muslims.

I was told that it was either Umayr or al-Harith b. Hisham who saw the devil when he turned on his heels on the day of Badr and said, 'Where are you going, O Suraqa?' And the enemy of God lay on the ground and disappeared (In another tradition quoted by Suhayli ii.85 it is the devil who knocks down al-Harith.). So God sent down concerning him, And when Satan made their works seem good to them and said None can conquer you today for I am your protector (Koran 8.50.) and he mentions how the devil deceived them and took the form of Suraqa b. Malik b. Jushum when they remembered the quarrel they had with B. Bakr. God said, And when the two armies saw each other and the enemy of God saw the armies of angels by which God strengthened His apostle and the believers against their enemies 'he turned on his heels and said, "I am quit of you, for I see what you do not see." The enemy of God spoke the truth for he did see what they could not see and said, "I fear God for God is severe in punishment."' I was told that they used to see him in every camp whenever he appeared in the form of Suraqa not suspecting him until on the day of Badr when the two armies met he turned on his heels and betrayed them after he had led them on (401).

Hassan b. Thabit said:

My people it was who sheltered their prophet
And believed in him when all the world were unbelievers,
Except a chosen few who were forerunners
To the righteous, helpers with the Helpers.
Rejoicing in God's portion
Saying when he came to them, noble of race, chosen,
Welcome in safety and comfort,
Goodly the prophet the portion and the guest.
They gave him a home in which a guest of theirs
Need have no fear—an (ideal) home.
They shared their wealth when the refugees came
While the share of the stubborn opponent is hell.
To Badr we went—they to their death.
Had they known what they should have known they would not have gone;
The devil deluded and then betrayed them.
Thus does the evil one deceive his friends.
He said I am your protector and brought them to an evil pass
Wherein is shame and disgrace.
Then when we fought them they deserted their leaders,
Some fleeing to high ground others to the plain (402).

THE COMING DOWN OF THE SCRA ANFAL (Sura 8)

When Badr was over, God sent down the whole Sura Anfal about it. With regard to their quarrelling about the spoils there came down: 'They will ask you about the spoils, say, the spoils belong to God and the apostle, so fear God and be at peace with one another, and obey God and His apostle if you are believers.'

Ubadah b. al-Samit, so I have heard, when he was asked about this sura said: It came down about us, the people of Badr, when we quarrelled about the booty on that day, and God took it out of our hands when we showed an evil disposition and gave it to the apostle, who divided it equally among us. In that there was the fear of God, and obedience to Him and to His apostle, and peace among us.'

Then He mentions the army, and their journey with the apostle when they knew that (the) Quraysh had come out against them, and they had only gone out making for the caravan because they wanted booty, and He said, As thy Lord brought thee out of thy house in truth when a part of the believers were unwilling, they disputed with thee about the truth after it had become plain, as though they were being driven to their death while they looked on.' i.e. Unwilling to meet the army and disliking to confront (the) Quraysh when they were told of them.

And when God promised you that one of the parties should be yours, and you wanted to have the one that was not armed.' i.e. Booty and not war.

And God wanted to establish the truth by His words, and to cut off the uttermost part of the unbelievers.' i.e. By the disaster which He brought upon the chiefs and leaders of (the) Quraysh on the day of Badr.

'When you asked your Lord for help.' i.e. Their prayers when they looked at the multitude of their enemies and their own small numbers.

And He answered you.' i.e. The prayer of His apostle and your prayers.

I will reinforce you with a thousand angels, one behind another. When He made you slumber as a reassurance from Him.' i.e. I sent down reassurance upon you when you slumbered unafraid.

And He sent down water from heaven upon you.' i.e. The rain that came upon them that night and prevented the polytheists from getting to the water first, and left the way clear to the Muslims.

'That He might cleanse you by it, and take from you the impurity of Satan, and strengthen your hearts, and confirm your steps.' i.e. To take from you the doubt of Satan when he made them afraid of the enemy, and the hardening of the ground for them so that they got to their halting-place before the enemy arrived.

Then God said, 'Then thy Lord revealed to the angels, I am with you so strengthen those that believe.' i.e. help those that believe.

I will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve, so strike off their heads and cut off all their fingers, because they opposed God and His apostle and he who opposes God and His apostle (will find) God severe in punishment.'

Then He said, 'O you who believe, when you meet those who disbelieve on the march, do not turn your backs. He who turns his back except in manoeuvring or intending to join another section, incurs the wrath of God, and his destination is Hell, a miserable end.' i.e. Inciting them against their enemy so that they should not withdraw from them when they met them, God having promised what He had promised.

Then God said concerning the apostle's throwing pebbles at them, 'When you threw, it was not you that threw, but God.' i.e. Your throwing would have had no effect unless God had helped you therein and cast terror into their hearts when He put them to flight.

And to test the believers with a good test.' i.e. To let them know of His favour towards them in giving them victory over their enemies in spite of their small number that they might know thereby His truth, and be thankful for His favour.

Then He said, If you sought a judgement, a judgement came to you.' i.e. With reference to what Abu Jahl said, 'O God, he who is the worst in severing relations and bringing us things that are unacceptable destroy him this morning.' Istiftah means to pray for what is just.

God said, If you cease,' that is addressed to Quraysh, It is better for you, and if you return (to the attack)

We will return.' i.e. With a similar blow to that which We gave you on the day of Badr.

And your army will avail you nothing however numerous, and (know) that God is with the believers.' i.e. That your number and multitude will not avail you at all while I am with the believers, helping them against those that oppose them.

Then God said, 'O you that believe, obey God and His apostle, turn not away from him while you are listening.' i.e. Do not contradict his orders when you hear him speak and while you assert that you are on his side.

And be not like those who said, "We hear" when they did not hear.' i.e. Like the hypocrites who pretend to be obedient and are secretly disobedient to him.

'The worst of beasts with God are the deaf and the dumb who do not understand.' i.e. The hypocrites whom I have forbidden you to imitate.

Dumb in reference to good, deaf to truth, not understanding and not knowing the vengeance and consequence which will come upon them.

'Had God known that there was good among them, He would have made them listen.' i.e. In performing for them the words which they spoke with their tongues, but their hearts contradicted them, and if they had come forth with you, 'they would have turned their backs, going aside.' i.e. Would not have been faithful to you in the purpose for which they had come out.

'O you who believe, respond to God and the apostle when he summons you to that which will quicken you.' i.e. to the war in which God exalted you after humiliation, and made you strong after weakness, and protected you from your enemies after you had been overcome by them.

And remember when you were few, despised in the land, fearing that men would pluck you away, and He gave you refuge and strengthened you by His help and nourished you with good things that you might be thankful.

O you who believe, betray not God and His apostle and betray not your trust knowingly.' i.e. Do not show Him what is right, which pleases Him, and then oppose Him secretly in something else, for that is destroying your trust and treachery to yourselves.

'O you who believe, fear God and He will make for you a furqan*, and wipe away your evil acts and pardon you. od is exceeding bountiful.' i.e. A distinction between true and false by which God shows your truth and extinguishes the falsehood of those who oppose you. (*Ibn Ishaq's explanation of the meaning of 'furqan' is adopted by Tabari on 2.50 and it admirably suits the sense of the verb in Arabic; but Baydawi on 21.49 and Zamakhshari on 8.29 [this verse] collect a number of meanings. If the word were purely Arabic, it would be difficult to see why there was any doubt about it. The facts are that in Aramaic 'furqan' means 'deliverance', and in Christian Aramaic it is even the common word for 'salvation'. In the Koran it often means, or seems to mean, some sort of book, 2.50; 3.2; and 21.49, etc., but in 8.42 'The day of the furqan, the day when the two hosts met', 'deliverance' seems to be the most probable meaning, and the same would seem to apply to this verse. For an illuminating discussion of the evidence and theories formed thereon see Jeffery, Foreign Vocabulary, 225-9.)

Then He reminds the apostle of His favour towards him when the people plotted against him 'to kill him, or to wound him, or to drive him out; and they plotted and God plotted, and God is the best of plotters.' i.e. I deceived them with My firm guile so that I delivered you from them.

Then He mentions the folly of (the) Quraysh in asking for a judgement against themselves when they said, 'O God, if this is the truth from Thee,' i.e. what Mohammed has brought, 'then rain upon us stones from heaven.' i.e. As you rained them upon the people of Lot.

'Or bring us a painful punishment.' i.e. Some of that by which You punished the peoples before us.

They used to say, God will not punish us when we ask for His pardon, and He will not punish a people whose prophet is with them until He has sent him away from them. That is what they said when the apostle was among them, and God said to His apostle, mentioning their ignorance and folly and the judgement they asked against themselves when He reproached them with their evil deeds. 'God will not punish them while you are with them, and God will not punish them while they ask for forgiveness.' i.e. When they said, 'We ask for forgiveness and Mohammed is among us.'

Then He said, 'What (plea) have they that God should not punish them?' though you are among them and though they ask for forgiveness as they say.

'While they bar the way to the sacred mosque.' i.e. Against those who believe in God and His servant, i.e. You and those who follow you.

And they are not its guardians, its guardians are only the God-fearers, who observe its sanctity and perform prayer by it. i.e. You and those who believe in you.

'But most of them do not know and their prayer at the temple,' i.e. By which they assert that evil is kept from them, is nothing but whistling and clapping of hands' (405).

480 And that is what God does not approve of and does not like and what they were not ordered to do.

'So taste the punishment for what you are disbelieving.' i.e. When He brought death upon them at the battle of Badr.

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father Abbad from Aisha, who said that only a little time elapsed between the coming down of 'O thou that art enrapt' (Koran 73.1 and 11-14.) and the word or God about it, 'Leave Me to deal with the liars living at ease, and let them alone for a little. We have fetters and fire and food which chokes, and a painful punishment,' until God smote Quraysh on the day of Badr (406).

Then God said,

'Those who disbelieve, spending their wealth to keep men from the way of God will expend it, then they will suffer loss, then they will be overcome, and those who disbelieve will be gathered to Hell.' He means those who went to Abu Sufyan and to everyone of the Quraysh who had money in that merchandise, and asked them to help them with it in the war against the apostle, and they did so.

Then He said, 'Say to those who disbelieve, if they cease, they will be pardoned for what is passed, and if they return, to fight you, 'the example of the ringleaders has been made (Normally awwalin would mean 'the men of old').' i.e. those who were killed at Badr.

Then He said, 'Fight them so that there is no more persecution (fitna. This word contains the ideas of painful trial, rebellion, and seduction.), and religion, all of it, shall belong to God.' i.e. So that no believer is persecuted from his religion, and monotheism may be pure, God having no partner and no rivals.

If they cease, then God sees what they do, and if they turn away, from thy commandment to their unbelief, 'then know that God is your friend', who glorified you and helped you against them on the day of Badr in spite of their great numbers and your small force.

A fine friend, and a fine helper.'

Then He taught them how to divide the spoil and His judgement about it when He made it lawful to them and said: And know that what you take as booty a fifth belongs to God and the apostle and next of kin and orphans and the poor and the wayfarer, if you believe in God and what We sent down to Our servant on the Day of Furqan, the day the two armies met; and God is able to do all things,' i.e. the day I divided between the true and the false by My power the day the two armies met—you and they 'when you were on the nearer side' of the wadi And they on the further side' of the wadi towards Mecca And the caravan was below you,' i.e. the caravan of Abu Sufyan which you had gone out to capture and they had gone out to protect without any appointment between you. And if you had arranged to meet you would have failed to meet,' i.e. had you arranged to meet and then you had heard of their multitude compared with your force you would not have met them; 'but that God might accomplish a thing that had to be done,' i.e. that He might accomplish what He willed in His power, namely to exalt Islam and its followers and to abase the unbelievers without your fighting hard. He did what He willed in His goodness. Then He said: 'that he who died should die with a clear proof and he who lived should live by a clear proof. God is a Hearer, a Knower,' i.e. that he who disbelieved should disbelieve after the proof in the sign and example which he had seen and he who believed should believe by the same warrant.

Then He mentioned His kindness and His plotting for him: 'When God showed thee in thy sleep that they were few, and if He had shown them to thee as many you would have failed and quarrelled over the affair; but God saved you. He knows what is within the breasts.' What God showed him was one of His favours by which He encouraged them against their enemy, and kept from them what would have frightened them because of their weakness, because He knew what was in them (407). And when you met them He made you see them as few making you seem small in their eyes that God might accomplish a thing that had to be done,' i.e. to unite them for war to take vengeance on whom He willed and to show favour to those Whom He willed so to bless, who were of the number of His friends.

Then He admonished and instructed and taught them how they ought to conduct their wars and said: 'O believers, when you meet an army' whom you fight in the way of God 'Stand, firm and remember God often' to Whom you devoted yourselves when you gave your allegiance to Him 'so that you may prosper. And obey God and His apostle and wrangle not lest you fail,' i.e. do not quarrel so that your affairs become disordered And your spirit depart,' i.e. your bravery go, And be steadfast. God is with the steadfast,' i.e. I am with you when you do that. And be not like those who went forth from their houses boastfully to be seen of men,' i.e. do not be like Abu Jahl and his companions who said, 'We will not go back until we have been to Badr and slaughtered camels there and drunk wine and the singing girls have made music for us and the Arabs will hear of it,' i.e. let not your affair be outward show and the subject of gossip, nor concerned with men, and purify your intention towards God and your efforts for the victory of your religion and the help of your prophet. Simply do that and do not aim at anything else. Then He said: And when Satan made their deeds seem good to them and said, "No man can conquer you today for I am your protector" (408).

Then God mentions the unbelievers and what they will meet when they die, and describes them, and tells His prophet about them until He says: If you come upon them in war, deal with them so forcibly as to terrify those who follow them, haply they may take warning,' i.e. make a severe example of them to those that come after, that haply they may understand. And prepare what strength you can against them, and cavalry by which, you may strike terror into the enemy of God and your enemy' as far as His words, And whatever you spend in the way of God will be repaid to you: you will not be wronged,' i.e. you will not lose your reward with God in the next life and a rapid recompense in this world. Then He said, And if they incline to peace incline thou to it,' i.e. if they ask you for peace on the basis of Islam then make peace on that basis, And rely on God,' verily God will suffice thee, 'He is the Hearer, the Knower' (409). And if they would deceive thee, God is sufficient for thee,' He being behind thee, 'He it is who strengthens thee with His help' after weakness And by the believers. And He made them of one mind' by the guidance with which God sent thee to them. 'Hadst thou spent all the world's wealth thou hadst not made them of one mind but God made them of one mind' by His religion to which He gathered them. 'He is mighty, wise.'

Then He said: 'O prophet, God is sufficient for thee and the believers who follow thee. O prophet, exhort the believers to fight. If there are twenty steadfast ones among you they will overcome two hundred, and if there are a hundred of you they will overcome a thousand unbelievers for they are a senseless people,' i.e. they do not fight with a good intention nor for truth nor have they knowledge of what is good and what is evil.

Abdullah b. Abu Najih from Ata b. Abu Ribah from Abdullah b. Abbas told me that when this verse came down it came as a shock to the Muslims who took it hard that twenty should have to fight two hundred, and a hundred fight a thousand. So God relieved them and cancelled the verse with another saying: 'Now has God relieved you and He knows that there is weakness amongst you, so if there are a hundred steadfast they shall overcome two hundred, and if there are a thousand of you they shall overcome two thousand by God's permission, for God is with the steadfast.' (Abdullah) said, 'When they numbered half of the enemy it was wrong for them to run from them; but if they were less than half they were not bound to fight and it was permissible for them to withdraw.' Then God reproached him about the prisoners and the taking of booty, no other prophet before him having taken booty from his enemy. Mohammed Abu Jafar b. Ali b. al-Husayn told me that the apostle said: I was helped by fear; the earth was made a place to pray, and clean; I was given all-embracing words; booty was made lawful to me as to no prophet before me; and I was given the power to intercede; five privileges accorded to no prophet before me.'

God said, It is not for any prophet,' i.e. before thee, 'to take prisoners' from his enemies Until he has made slaughter in the earth,' i.e. slaughtered his enemies until he drives them from the land (Commentators explain that itkhhdn here means 'reduce to straits', but in view of what Ibn Ishaq goes on to say this is improbable, and in view of what Tabari [1.157] reports from him via Salama impossible: when the words It is not for any prophet, etc.' came down the apostle said, If punishment had come down from heaven, none would escape it but Sa'd b. Muadh because he said, I would rather be slaughtered in battle than be spared to live among men.) 'You desire the lure of this world,' i.e. its goods, the ransom of the captives. 'But God desires the next world,' i.e. their killing them to manifest the religion which He wishes to manifest and by which the next world may be attained. 'Had there not previously been a book from God there would have come upon you for what you took,' i.e. prisoners and booty, An awful punishment,' i.e. had it not previously gone forth from Me that I would punish only after a prohibition—and He had not prohibited them—I would have punished you for what you did. Then He made it lawful to him and to them as a mercy from Him and a gift from the Compassionate, the Merciful. He said, 'So enjoy what you have captured as lawful and good, and fear God. God is Forgiving, Merciful.' Then He said: 'O prophet, Say to those captives in your hands, If God knows any good in your hearts He will give you something better than that which has been taken from you and God will pardon you. God is Forgiving, Merciful.'

He incited the Muslims to unity and made the Refugees and the Helpers friends in religion and the unbelievers friends one of another. Then He said: If you do not do so, there will be confusion in the land and a great corruption,' i.e. unless believer becomes friend of believer to the exclusion of the unbeliever even though he is of his kin. 'There will be confusion in the land,' i.e. doubt about the true and the false and the rise of corruption in the land if the believer takes the side of the unbeliever against the believer.

Then He assigned inheritances to next of kin of those who became Muslims after the friendship between Refugees and Helpers and said: And those who believed afterwards and migrated and strove along with you they are of you ; and those who are akin are nearer to one another in God's book,' i.e. in inheritance 'God knoweth all things'.

The total number reported to me was 43 men* (536).

(* Here, one would expect that the number of the Hashimite prisoners would be given, but it is not. A.Dh. says: 'He does not mention al-Abbas along with these two prisoners because he had become a Muslim, and used to conceal his religion because he was afraid of his tribesmen.' However, since Ibn Ishaq at the end of the list says that the total number was 43, whereas only 42 are named, it is obvious that he must have included Abbas among the prisoners. Ibn Hisham's note is that one prisoner, whose name is not mentioned, is missing from the list.)

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

SOME POETRY ABOUT THE BATTLE OF BADR

Of the poetry about the battle of Badr which the two parties bandied between them in reference to what happened therein are the lines of Hamza b. Abdul-Muttalib (537):

Surely one of time's wonders (Lit. Did you see a thing that was one of time's wonders? That a people, etc.)

(Though roads to death are plain to see)
Is that a people should destroy themselves and perish
By encouraging one another to disobedience and disbelief.

The night they all set out for Badr
And became death's pawns in its well.
We had sought but their caravan, naught else,
But they came to us and we met unexpectedly.
When we met there was no way out
Save with a thrust from dun-coloured straight-fashioned shafts

And a blow with swords which severed their heads,
Swords that glittered as they smote.
We left the erring Utba lying dead
And Shayba among the slain thrown in the well;
Amr lay dead among their protectors
And the keening women rent their garments for him,
The noble women of LuAyy b. Ghalib
Who surpass the best of Fihir.

Those were folk who were killed in their error
And they left a banner not prepared for victory—
A banner of error whose people Iblis led.
He betrayed them (the evil one is prone to treachery).
When he saw things clearly he said to them,
I am quit of you. I can no longer endure,
I see what you do not see, I fear God's punishment
For He is invincible.'

He led them to death so that they (Cf. Sura 8.50. The preceding lines 'seem to be the work of the man who wrote the poem attributed to Hassan. Cf. W. 475, line 2.)

While he knew what they could not know.
On the day of the well they mustered a thousand,
We three hundred like excited white stallions.
With us were God's armies when He reinforced us with them

In a place that will ever be renowned.
Under our banner Gabriel attacked with them
In the fray where they met their death.

Al-Harith b. Hisham b. al-Mughira answered them
thus:

Help, O my people, in my longing and loss
My sorrow and burning heart!
Tears flow copiously from my eyes
Like pearls falling from the cord of the woman who strings them,

Weeping for the sweet-natured hero
Death's pawn at the well of Badr.
Bless you, Amr kinsman and companion of most generous nature.

If certain men chanced to meet you when your luck
was out,

Well, time is bound to bring its changes.
In past times which are gone
You brought upon them a humiliation which is hard to bear.

Unless I die I shall not leave you unavenged.
I will spare neither brother nor wife's kin.
I will slay as many dear to them
As they have slain of mine.

Have strangers whom they have collected deceived
them

While we are the pure stock of Fihir?
Help, O Luayy, protect your sanctuary and your gods;

Give them not up to the evil man! (The text has fakhr.
This must be one of the words which Ibn Hisham says that he altered. The change of a dot would give fahr, which is adopted here.)

Your fathers handed them down and you inherited their foundations (Or 'columns').

The temple with its roof and curtain.
Why did the reprobate want to destroy you?
(Reading dhamim or laim for halim in the text.)

Forgive him not, O tribe of Ghalib, Fight your adversary with all your might and help
one another.

Bear one another's afflictions with endurance.
You may well avenge your brother,
Nothing matters if you fail to take revenge on Amr's slayers.

With waving swords flashing in your hands like lightning
Sending heads flying as they glitter.
As it were the tracks of ants on their blades
When they are unsheathed against the evil-eyed enemy (538).

Ali b. Abu Talib said:
Have you not seen how God favoured His apostle
With the favour of a strong, powerful, and gracious
one;

How He brought humiliation on the unbelievers
Who were put to shame in captivity and death,
While the apostle of God's victory was glorious
He being sent by God in righteousness.
He brought the Furqan sent down from God,
Its signs (Or Its messages' [or verses].) are plain to men of sense.

Some firmly believed in that and were convinced
And (thanks to God) became one people; (shaml, or 'lived in harmony'. See Lyali, The Poems of Amr son of Qamiah, Cambridge, 1919, p.14.)

Others disbelieved, their minds went astray
And the Lord of the throne brought repeated calamities upon them;

At Badr He gave them into the power of His apostle
And an angry army who did valiantly.
They smote them with their trusty swords,
Furbished well, and polished.

How many a lusty youngster,
Many a hardy warrior did they leave prone.
Their keening women spent a sleepless night,
Their tears now strong, now weak.

They keen for erring Utba and his son,
And Shayba and Abu Jahl
And Dhul-Rijl (i.e. Al-Aswad whose leg Hamza hewed off, v.s.) and Ibn Judan also,

With burning throats in mourning garb displaying bereavement.

Dead in Badr's well lay many,
Brave in war, generous in times of dearth;
Error called them and some responded
(For error has ways easy to adopt).
Now they are in Hell,
Too occupied to rage furiously against us.

Al-Harith b. Hisham b. al-Mughira answered him
thus:

I wonder at folk whose fool sings
Of folly captious and vain,
Singing about the slain at Badr
When young and old vied in glorious endeavour,
The brave swordsman of LuAyy, Ibn Ghalib, Thrusting in battle, feasting the hungry in times of dearth;

They died nobly, they did not sell their family
For strangers alien in stock and homeland,
Like you who have made Ghassan your special friends
Instead of us—a sorry deed,

An impious, odious crime, and a severing of the ties
of blood;

Men of judgement and understanding perceive your wrongdoing.

True, they are men who have passed away,
But the best death is on the battlefield.
Rejoice not that you have killed them,
For their death will bring you repeated disaster.
Now they are dead you will always be divided,
Not one people as you desire,
By the loss of Ibn Judan, the praiseworthy,
And Utba, and him who is called Abu Jahl among
you.

Shayba and Al-Walid were among them,
Umayya, the refuge of the poor, and Dhul-Rijl.
(Apparently al-Aswad the Makhzumite whose leg was cut off as he tried to drink from the well at Badr is meant. See Wüstenfeld 442.)

Weep for these and not for others,
The keening women will bewail their loss and
bereavement,

Say to the people of Mecca, Assemble yourselves
And go to palmy Medina's forts,
Defend yourselves and fight, O people of Kab,
With your polished and burnished swords
Or pass the night in fear and trembling
By day meaner than the sandal that is trodden underfoot.

But know, O men that by Al-Lat, I am sure
That you will not rest without taking vengeance.
All of you, don your mail, take the spear,
The helmet, sharp sword and arrows.

Dirar b. al-Khattab b. Mirdas brother of B.
Muharib b. Fihir said:

I wonder at the boasting of Aus when death is coming to them tomorrow
(Since time contains its warnings)
And at the boasting of the Banu I-Najjar because certain men died there,

For all of them were steadfast men.
If some of our men were left dead
We shall leave others dead on the field. (i.e. of the enemy. C. and W. differ in this line.)

Our flying steeds will carry us among you,
Till we slake our vengeance, O Banu I-Aus,
We shall return to the charge in the midst of the Banu I-Najjar,

Our horses snorting under the weight of the spearmen clad in mail.

Your dead we shall leave with vultures circling round

To look for help but a vain desire.
Yathrib's women will mourn them,
Their nights long and sleepless
Because our swords will cut them down,
Dripping with the blood of their victims.

Though you won on the day of Badr
Your good fortune was plainly due to Ahmad
And the chosen band, his friends,
Who protected him in battle when death was at hand, Abu Bakr and Hamza could be numbered among them

And Ali among those you could mention,
Abu Hafis and Uthman were of them,
Sa'd too, if anyone was present,
Those men—not the begettings of Aus and Najjar—
Should be the object of your boasting,
But their father was from Luayy Ibn Ghalib,
Kab and Amir when noble families are reckoned.
They are the men who repelled the cavalry on every front,

The noble and glorious on the day of battle.
Kab b. Malik brother of the B. Salima said:
I wonder at God's deed, since He Does what He wills, none can defeat Him.
He decreed that we should meet at Badr
An evil band (and evil ever leads to death).
They had summoned their neighbours on all sides

Until they formed a great host.
At us alone they came with ill intent,
Kab and Amir and all of them.
With us was God's apostle with Aus round him
Like a strong impregnable fortress
The tribes of Banii Najjar beneath his banner
Advancing in light armour while the dust rose high.
When we met them and every steadfast warrior
Ventured his life with his comrades
5a i We testified to the unity of God
And that His apostle brought the truth.
When our light swords were unsheathed
'Twas as though fires flashed at their movement.
With them we smote them and they scattered
And the impious met death,
Abu Jahl lay dead on his face
And Utba our swords left in the dust. (Reading afiru with some authorities for athiru, though these letters sometimes interchange.)

Shayba and Al-Taymi they left on the battlefield,
Everyone of them denied Him who sitteth on the throne.

They became fuel for Hell,
For every unbeliever must go there.
It will consume them, while the stoker
Increases its heat with pieces of iron and stone.
(Koran 18.95)

God's apostle had called them to him
But they turned away, saying, 'You are nothing but a sorcerer.'
Because God willed to destroy them,
And none can avert what He decrees.

Abdullah b. al-Zibara al-Sahmi (an ally of the B.
Abdul-Dar)*, bewailing
the slain at Badr, said (539):

(* In deference to the text these words have been retained; but (1st) they occur after Ibn Hisham's interpolation in which he ascribes the poem to al-Asha
b. Zurara, an ally of B. Abdu Naufal, and (2nd) Abdullah, though he belonged to Sahn who were in the ahlaf alliance with B. Abdul-Dir, could hardly be called a halif. Therefore it looks as if the words refer to al-Ashi. Whether Ibn Hisham inserted them because he knew that Ibn Ishaq differed from him, or whether someone else did for the same reason, it is impossible to say.)

What noble warriors, handsome men, lie round
Badr's battlefield.

They left behind them Nubayh and Munabbih and
The two sons of Rabia, best fighters against odds,
And the generous Harith, whose face shone
Like the full moon illuminating night;
And al-As b. Munabbih, the strong,
Like a long lance without a flaw.
His origin and his ancestors
And the glory of his father's and his mother's kin raise him high.

If one must weep and show great grief
Let it be over the glorious chief Ibn Hisham, God, lord of creatures, save Abul-Walid and his family,
And grant them special favour.

Hassan b. Thabit al-Ansari answered him:
Weep, may your eyes weep blood,
Their rapid flow ever renewed.
Why weep for those who ran to evil ways?
Why have you not mentioned the virtues of our people
And our glorious, purposeful, tolerant, courageous
one,
The prophet, soul of virtue and generosity,
The truest man that ever swore an oath?
One who resembles him and does his teaching Was the most praised there not without effect. (The line is clumsy and the syntax questionable.)

Hassan also Said:

A maiden obsesses thy mind in sleep
Giving the sleeper a drink with cool lips
Like musk mingled with pure water
Or old wine red as the blood of sacrifices.
Wide in the rump, her buttocks ripples of fat,
Vivacious, not hasty in swearing an oath.
Her well-covered hips as she sits
Form a hollow in her back like a marble mortar,
So la2y she can hardly go to bed,
Of beautiful body and lovely figure.
By day I never fail to think of her,
By night my dreams inflame my desire for her.
I swear I will not forget to think of her
Until my bones lie in the grave.
O woman who foolishly blames me,
I refuse to accept blame on account of my love;
She came to me at dawn after I woke
When life's troubles were at hand.
She told me that man is sad all his life
Because he lacks plenty of camels;
If you lied in what you said
May you escape the consequences as Al-Harith b.
Hisham did.

He left his friends fearing to fight in their defence,
And escaped by giving his horse free rein.
It left the swift steeds behind in the desert;
As the weighted rope drops down the well.
His mare galloped away at full speed while
His friends remained in their evil plight
[His brothers and his family were in the battle
In which God gave the Muslims victory—
For God accomplishes His work—war ground them to powder,
Its fire blazed (with them as fuel).
But for God and the animal's speed (our horses) had left him

A prey to wild beasts trodden under their hoofs.]
(These three verses are obviously a later interpolation.
The syntax requires that the partitive mm should follow its antecedent 'his friends'. Moreover, the ostentatious piety of these verses is foreign to Hassan.)
Some of them firmly bound prisoners (though they were)

Hawks protecting (their young) when they met the spears;
Some prostrate never to answer to the call
Till the highest mountains cease to be,
In shame and plain disgrace when they saw
The sword blades driving every resolute chief before them.

Swords in the hands of noble valiant chiefs,
Whose noble ancestry is vindicated without searching inquiry.
Swords that strike fire from steel
Like lightning 'neath the storm clouds.
Al-Harith answered him and said:
The people know well (Or 'God knows best')
I did not leave the fight until my steed was foaming
with blood

I knew that if I fought alone I should be killed; my death would not injure the enemy
So I withdrew and left my friends meaning to avenge them another day.

This is what Al-Harith said in excuse for running away from the battle of Badr (540).

Hassan also said (Diwan lxxvi.):
Quraysh knew on the day of Badr,
The day of captivity and violent slaughter,
That when the lances crossed we were the victors
In the battle of Abul-Walid.
We killed Rabla's two sons the day they came Clad in double mail against us.
Hakim fled on the day that the Banu I-Najjar
Advanced upon them like lions.
All the men of Fihir turned tail,
The miserable Harith abandoned them from afar.

You met shame and death
Quick, decisive, under the neck vein.
All the force turned tail together.
They paid no heed to ancestral honour.

Hassan also said (Diwan cli.):
O Harith, you took a base decision in war
And the day when ancestral fame is shown,
When you rode a swift-footed noble mare,
Rapid-paced and long in flank,
Leaving your people behind to be slain,
Thinking only of escape when you should have stood fast.

Could you not have shown concern for your mother's son
Who lay transfixed by spears, his body stripped?
God hastened to destroy his host
In shameful disgrace and painful punishment! (541).

Hassan also said (Diwan xxxvi.) (542):
A bold intrepid man—no coward—
Led those clad in light chain armour.
I mean the apostle of God the Creator
Who favoured him with piety and goodness above all;
You had said you would protect your caravan
And that Badr's waters could not be reached* by us.
(* Reading maurud for mardud. Dhimar includes anything that must be protected.)

There we had come down, not heeding your words so that
We drank to the full without stint,
Holding fast to an unseverable rope,
The well plaited rope of God that stretches far.
We have the apostle and we have the truth which we follow
To the death; we have help unlimited
Faithful to his promise, intrepid, a brilliant star,
A full moon that casts light on every noble man (543).

Hassan also said (Diwan ccvii.):
The Banu Asad were disappointed and their raiders returned
On the day of the Well in misery and disgrace.
Abul-As soon lay dead on the ground:
Hurling from the back of his galloping steed:
He met his end with his weapons, good fighter as he was

When he lay still in death.
The man Zama we left with his throat severed,
His life blood flowing away,
His forehead cushioned in the dust,
His nostrils defiled with filth;
Ibn Qays escaped with a remnant of his tribe
Covered with wounds, at the point of death.

Hassan also said (Diwan xliv.):
Can anyone say if the Meccans know
How we slew the unbelievers in their evil hour?
We killed their leaders in the battle
And they returned a shattered force;
We killed Abu Jahl and Utba before him,
And Shayba fell forward with his hands outstretched.
(The true reading is yakbu. Wüstenfeld's yabku is an obvious misprint. The widely different reading in H.'s Diwan is markedly inferior.)

We killed Suwayd and Utba after him.
Tuma also in the dust of combat.
Many a noble, generous man we slew
Of lofty line, illustrious among his people.
We left them as meat for hyenas
Later to burn in Hell fire. (A reminiscence of Koran 88.4.)
I'faith Malik's horsemen and their followers were no protection
When they met us at Badr (544).

Hassan also said (Diwan lxxx.):
Hakim's speed saved him on the day of Badr

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

Like the speed of a colt from al-Awaj's mares (A horse as famous in pagan sagas as Black Bess in English legend.),

When he saw Badr's valley walls
Swarming with the black-mailed squadrons of Khazraj

Who do not retire when they meet the enemy,
Who march boldly in the middle of the beaten track.
How many a valiant chief they have,
Heroes where the coward turns at bay,
Chiefs giving lavishly with open hand,
Crowned ones bearing the burden of blood-wits,
Ornaments in conclave, persistent in battle,
Smiting the bold with their all-piercing swords (545).

Hassan also said:
Thanks to God we fear not an army
How many they be with their assembled troops.
Whenever they brought a multitude against us
The gracious Lord sufficed us against their swords;
At Badr we raised our spears aloft,
Death did not dismay us.
You could not see a body of men
More dangerous to those they attack when war is stirred up, (The metaphor is that of the untimely address of the he-camel to the mare.)

But we put our trust [in God] and said:
'Our swords are our fame and our defence.'
With them we met them and were victorious
Though but a band against their thousands.
Hassan also said, satirising B. Jumah and those of them who were slain:

Banu Jumah rushed headlong to disaster (Here there is a pun on the name Jumah.) because of their unlucky star

(The mean man inevitably meets humiliation).
They were conquered and slain at Badr,
They deserted in all directions,
They rejected the scripture and called Mohammed liar.

But God makes the religion of every apostle victorious;

God curse Abu Khuzayma and his son,
The two Khalids and Said b. Aqil.
Ubayda b. al-Harith said about the battle of Badr, and the cutting off of his foot when it was smitten in the fight, when he and Hamza and Ali fought their enemies (546):

A battle will tell the Meccans about us:
It will make distant men give heed,
When Utba died and Shayba after him
And Utba's eldest son had no cause to be pleased with it. (Utba's firstborn al-Walid was also slain at Badr.)

You may cut off my leg, yet I am a Muslim,
I hope in exchange for a life near to Allah
With Houris fashioned like the most beautiful statues

With the highest heaven for those who mount there.
I have bought it with a life of which I have tasted the best (Reading taarraftu.)

And which I have tried until I lost even my next-of-kin.

The Merciful honoured me with His favour
With the garment of Islam to cover my faults.
I did not shrink from fighting them
The day that men called on their peers to fight them,
When they asked the prophet he sought only us three
So that we came out to the herald;
We met them like lions, brandishing our spears,
We fought the rebellious for God's sake;
We three did not move from our position
Till their fate came upon them (547).

When Ubayda died of the wound in his leg at the battle of Badr, Kab b.

Malik, the Ansari, wrote this elegy on him:
O eye, be generous, not niggardly,

With thy true tears; spare them not
For a man whose death appalled us,
Noble in deed and in descent,
Bold in attack with sharpened sword,
Of noble repute and goodly descent. (Or reading makshari, 'of sweet breath'.)

Ubayda has passed away, we cannot hope
For good or evil from him,
On the eve of battle he used to protect our rearguard with his sword.

Ka'b also said:
Have Ghassan heard in their distant haunt
(The best informant is one with knowledge thereof),
That Maadd shot their arrows at us,
The whole tribe of them were hostile,
Because we worship God, hoping in none other,
Hoping for heaven's gardens since their prophet has come to us (Lit. Guarantor.).

A prophet with a glorious inheritance among his people,
And truthful ancestors whose origin made them pure;
Both sides advanced, and we met them like lions Whose victims have nothing to hope for;
We smote them in the battle
Till Luayy's leader fell upon his face;
They fled, and we cut them down with our sharp swords,

Their allies and their tribesmen alike.
Kab also said:
By your father's life, ye sons of Luayy,
Despite your deceit and pride,
Your horsemen did not protect you at Badr,
They could not stand fast when they met us;
We came there with God's light
Clearing away the cover of darkness from us.

God's apostle led us, by God's order,
An order He had fixed by decree;
Your horsemen could not conquer at Badr
And returned to you in evil case;
Do not hurry, Abu Sufyan, and watch
For the fine steeds coming up from Kada, (A place near Mecca. Cf. Wüstenfeld 829, line 8.)
By God's help the holy spirit is among them (i.e. Gabriel.)

And Michael, what a goodly company!
Talib b. Abu Talib, praising the apostle and lamenting the men of Quraysh who were thrown into the pit at Badr, said:
My eye wept copiously
Over Kab, though it sees them not.
Ka'b deserted one another in the wars, and Fate destroyed them, they having greatly sinned.

(The language is reminiscent of Koran 45-20.)
And Amir this morning are weeping for the misfortunes (that befell them).

Shall I ever see them closer (to each other)?
They are my brothers, their mother no harlot,
And never their guest suffered wrong;
O our brothers Abdu Shams and Naufal, may I be your ransom,

Put not war between us. After the love and friendship we had Become not (the subject of) stories in which all of you have something to complain of.

Do you not know what happened in the war of Dahis
And when Abu Yaksum's army filled the ravine?
Had not God the Sole Existent saved you
You could not have protected your people.
We among Quraysh have done no great wrong
But merely protected the best man that ever trod the earth;

A standby in misfortunes, generous,
Noble in reputation, no niggard, no wrongdoer.
His door is thronged by those seeking his bounty,
A sea of generosity, vast, unailing.
By God, my soul will ever be sad,
Restless, until you smite Khazraj well and truly.

Dirar b. al-Khattab al-Fihri lamenting Abu Jahl said:

Alas for my eye that cannot sleep
Watching the stars in the darkness of the night!
It is as though a mote were in it,
But there is naught but flowing tears.
Tell Quraysh that the best of their company,
The noblest man that ever walked,
At Badr lies imprisoned in the well;
The noble one, not base-born and no niggard.
I swear that my eyes shall never weep for any man
Now Abul-Hakam our chief is slain.

I weep for him whose death brought sorrow to Luayy b. Ghalib,
To whom death came at Badr where he remains.
You could see fragments of spears in his horse's chest,
Scraps of his flesh plainly intermingled with them.

No lion lurking in the valley of Bisha,
Where through jungled vales the waters flow,
Was bolder than he when lances clashed,
When the cry went forth among the valiant 'Dismount' (Or, perhaps, 'To battle')
Grieve not overmuch, Mughira's kin, be resolute
(Though he who so grieves is not to be blamed).
Be strong, for death is your glory,
And thereafter at life's end there is no regret.
I said that victory will be yours
And high renown—no man of sense will doubt it (548).

Al-Harith b. Hisham, bewailing his brother Abu Jahl, said:

Alas my soul for Amr!
But can grief avail one whit? (A happy suggestion of the editors of C. is to read fatil, a Koranic figure for complete misfortune. This is much to be preferred to the obvious qatil of the Manuscripts.)

Someone told me that Amr
Was the first of his people to go into the old abandoned pit.

I have always thought it right (that you should be the first),
Since your judgement in the past was sound.
I was happy while you were alive;
Now I am left in a miserable state.
At night when I cannot see him I feel
A prey to incision and full of care.
When daylight comes once more
My eye is weary of remembering Amr (549).

Abu Bakr b. al-Aswad b. Shuub al-Laythi, whose name was Shaddad said:
Ummu Bakr gave me the greeting of peace,
But what peace can I have now my people are no more?

In the pit, the pit of Badr,
What singing girls and noble boon companions!

In the pit, the pit of Badr
What platters piled high with choicest camel-meat!
In the well, the well of Badr,
How many camels straying freely were yours!
In the well, the well of Badr,
How many flags (Or, possibly, 'great intentions') and sumptuous gifts!

What friends of the noble Abu Ali,
Brother of the generous cup and boon companions!
If you were to see Abu Aqil
And the men of the pass of Naam
You would mourn over them like the mother of a new-born camel
Yearning over her darling.

The apostle tells us that we shall live,
But how can bodies and wraiths meet again?* (550) (* Sada. The old Arabs believed that when a man had been killed and his slayer was still at large a bird like an owl came forth from his head crying, 'Give me to drink' sc. the slayer's blood. The word sada afterwards came to be applied to the head or brain, and to the corpse itself, which seems to be the meaning here. Hama also means the head of a man or the bird emerging therefrom which could be conceived as a wraith. For the liqa of our text Bukhari iii. 45. 13 has Laqa 'persist', while Shahrastini, Milal, 433, has the reading quoted by Ibn Hisham. A poem, that is recognisably another version, will be found in the Risalatul-Ghufrar (J.R.A.S. 1902, p. 818). For the last verse Abul-Ala heard: 'Does Ibn Kabsha promise us that we shall live?' This must be early because such a designation of the prophet would hardly have been coined in later times. Commentators explain that the prophet was called Ibn Kabsha [for Ibn Abu Kabsha] after a man of that name who during the pagan era abandoned the religion of his fathers.)

Umayya b. Abul-Salt, lamenting those who died at Badr, said: 531

Would'st thou not weep over the nobles,
Sons of nobles, praised by all,
As the doves mourn upon the leafy boughs,
Upon the bending branches,
Weeping in soft dejected notes
When they return at nightfall.
Like them are the weeping women,
The keepers who lift up their voices.
He who weeps them weeps in real sorrow,
He who praises them tells the truth.
What chiefs and leaders
At Badr and al-Aqanqal,
At Madafiul-Barqayn and Al-Hannan,
At the end of al-Awashih,
Grey-beards and youths, Bold leaders,
Raiders impetuous!
See you not what I see
When it is plain to all beholders,
That the vale of Mecca has altered,
Become a valley deserted (L.H.: This is a remark suggesting that the people left the entire Mecca Valley [probably due to the Justinian Plague], a hint that here the original Mecca in today's Jordan was meant, better known under its Roman name 'Petra'.)

By every chief, son of a chief, (bitriq (patricius) by this time little more than an honorary title in the Eastern Roman Empire. The word must have been well known to the Arabs because it occurs frequently in early literature. My colleague, Professor Lewis, reminds me that Harith b. Jabala was appointed 'phylarch' and 'patricius' by Emperor Justinian in 529 AD.)

Fair-skinned, illustrious,
Constantly at the gate of kings,
Crossing the desert, victorious,
Strong-necked, stout of body,
Men of eminence, successful in enterprise,
Who say and do and order what is right,
Who feed their guests on fat meat
Served on bread white as a lamb's stomach;
Who offer dishes and yet more dishes
As large as water pools.
The hungry finds them not empty
Nor wide without depth,
To guest after guest they send them
With broad open hand,
Givers of hundreds from hundreds of mileh camels
To hundreds of their guests,
Driving the camel herds to the herds,
Returning from Baladih.
Their nobles have a distinction
Outweighing the nobility of others
As the weights send down the scale
As the balancer holds it.
A party deserted them, while they protected
Their women from disgrace,
Men who smote the front ranks of the enemy
With broad-bladed Indian swords;
Their voices pained me as they Called for water crying aloud;
How fine were the sons of Ali all of them! (The reference to the death of Husayn at Karbela and the call to the Alids to rise and revenge themselves is unmistakable.)

If they do not raid such a lair
As would send back every barking dog to its lair,
With horses trained to long rides,
With proudly raised heads, kept near the tents,
As young men on fine horses
Against fierce menacing lions;
Each man advances to his enemy
Walking as though to shake hands,

About a thousand or two thousand
Mailed men and spearmen (551). (Abu Dharr has an interesting note here of a tradition going back to Abu Hurayra which reads thus: 'The apostle gave us permission to recite the poetry of the pagan era except the ode of Umayya b. Abu al-Salt about Badr [i.e. this ode] and the ode of al-Asha which begins "ahdi biha" (lines 10-18 in No. 18 of the Diudn ed. Geyer which has many variants). The apostle forbade the recitation of this ode because it lamented the death of the unbelievers and attacked the reputation of the prophet's companions. It was only for that reason that Ibn Hisham omitted two verses from Umayya's ode. Similarly al-Asha's verse praised Amr b. Tufayl and satirized Alqama b. Ulatha. Amr died an unbeliever. Alqama became a Muslim, and when the king [emperor] of the Romans asked him about the apostle he spoke well of him, and the prophet held that in his favour and remembered him. Some scholars say that the prohibition to recite these two odes in the early days of Islam was because of the feeling between Muslims and unbelievers, but when Islam was generally accepted and hatred and enmity ceased, there was no harm in citing them.)

Umayya also said, lamenting Zamaa b. al-Aswad and the B. Aswad who were slain:

O eye, weep with overflowing tears for Abul-Harith
And hold not thy tears for ZamaA.
Weep for Aqil b. Aswad, the bold lion,
On the day of battle and the dust of war.
Those Banu Aswad were brothers like the Gemini,
No treachery and no deceit was in them,
They are the noblest family of Kab,
The very summit of excellence.
They produced sons as many as the hairs of the head
And established them in impregnable positions.
(ManaA is explained by the Taj, vol. v, p. 516. In the plural manadt is 'bastions and strongholds'. As manaA is a mountain in Hudhayl territory and mana is high ground in labal Tayyi", the general meaning seems clear.)
When misfortune visited their kinsmen
Their hearts ached for them.
They gave their food when rain failed,
When all was dry and no cloud could be seen (552).

Abu Usama Muawiya b. Zuhayr b. Qays b. al-Harith
b. Dubaya b. Mazin b. Adiy b. Jusham b. Muawiya, an ally of B. Makhzum (553), passed Hubayra b. Abu Wahb as they were running away on the day of Badr. Hubayra was exhausted and threw away his coat of mail and (Muawiya) picked it up and went off with it. He composed the following lines (554):

When I saw the army panic,
Running away at top speed
And that their leaders lay dead,
Methought the best of them
Were like sacrifices to idols.
Many of them lay there dead,
And we were made to meet our fate at Badr.

We left the way and they overtook us
In waves, like an overwhelming flood;
Some said, 'Who is Ibn Qays?'
I said, Abu Usama, without boasting,

I am the Jushamite, that you may know me,
I will announce my lineage,
Answering challenge by challenge.
If you are of the best born of Quraysh,
I am from Muawiya ibn Bakr.'
Tell Malik, when we were attacked,
For you, O Malik, know of me;
Tell Hubayra of us if you meet him,
For he is wise and influential,
That when I was called to Ufayd (Commentators differ as to whether this is the name of a place, or a man, or a body of men, the leaders of an attack.)

I returned to the battle with undaunted heart,
The night the hapless were left unheeded
Old friends and mother's kindred.
So that is your brother, O B. Luayy,
And that is Malik, O Umm Amr (The hyaena.), for
Had I not been there striped hyaenas,
Mothers of cubs would have had him,
Digging at the graves with their claws,
Their faces as black as a cooking-pot;
I swear by Him Who is my Lord
And by the blood-stained pillars of the stoning places

You will see what my true worth is
When men become as fierce as leopards. (Lit. 'when skins are changed to leopards' skins'. See note on 741.3.)

No lion from his lair in Tarj—
Bold, menacing, fathering cubs in the jungle,
Who has made his den taboo against intruders
So that none can approach him even with a force (Reading binafri).

In the sand, bands of men are helpless
He leaps upon all who try to drive him away—
Is swifter than I
When I advance roaring and growling at the enemy
With arrows like sharp lances
Their points like burning coals.
And a round (Or, reading aklaf, black.) shield of bull's hide

And a strongly fashioned bow, and
A glittering sword which Umayr, the polisher,
Whetted for a fortnight.
I let its lanyard trail, and strode proudly forward
With body at full stretch, as a lion walks.
Sa'd the warrior said to me, Here is a gift (A. Dh.

says that A prisoner' is meant here.),
I answered, Perhaps he is bringing treachery,
And I said, O Abu Adiy, do not go near them
If you will obey my orders today
As they did with Farwa when he came to them
And he was led away bound with cords (555).

Abu Usama also said:
Who will send a messenger from me
With news that a shrewd man will confirm?
Do not you know how I kept returning to the fight
at Badr

When the swords flashed around you,
When the army's leaders were left prostrate,
Their heads like slices of melon?
A gloomy fate, to the people's hurt,
Came upon you in the valley of Badr;
My resolution saved them from disaster
And God's help and a well-conceived plan.
I returned alone from al-Abwa
When you were surrounded by the enemy,
Helpless, if anyone attacked you,
Wounded and bleeding by the side of Kurash (A mountain in the territory of Hudhayl; Yaq. iv. 247; Bakri, 473.).

Whenever a comrade in distress called
For my aid in an evil day,
A brother or ally in such case,
Much as I love my life I answered his call.
I returned to the fray, dispelling gloom,
And shot when faces showed hostility.
Many an adversary have I left on the ground

To rise painfully like a broken twig (Wüstenfeld reads qatîf 'from which the fruit has been plucked').

When battle was joined I dealt him a blow
That drew blood—his arteries murmured aloud:
That is what I did on the day of Badr.
Before that I was resourceful and steadfast,
Your brother as you know in war and famine
Whose evils are ever with us,
Your champion undaunted by darkest night or superior numbers.

Out into the bitter black night I plunged*
When the freezing wind forces dogs to shelter (556).
(* Sarra means [1st] multitude, [2nd] intense cold. As Suh. says, the latter must be the meaning because of the mention of the cold wind in the second hemistich.)

Hind d. Utba b. Rabia bewailing her father on the day of Badr said:

O eyes, be generous with thy tears
For the best of Khindif's sons
Who never returned (home).
His clan fell upon him one morning,
The sons of Hashim and the sons of al-Muttalib
They made him taste the edge of their swords,
They attacked him again when he was helpless,
They dragged him stripped and spoiled
With the dust upon his face;
To us he was a strong mountain,
Grass-clad, pleasing to the eye;
As for al-Bara I do not mention him,
May he get the good he counted on.

She also said:
Fate is against us and has wronged us,
But we can do naught to resist it.
After the slain of Lu'ayy b. Ghalib,
Can a man care about his death or the death of his friend?

Many a day did he rob himself of wealth
By lavishing gifts morning and evening.
Give Abu Sufyan a message from me:
If I meet him one day I will reprove him.
'Twas a war that will kindle another war,
For every man has a friend to avenge (557).

She also said:
What an eye which saw a death like the death of my men!

How many a man and woman tomorrow
Will join with the keening women;
How many did they leave behind on the day of the pit,

The morning of that tumultuous cry!
All generous men in years of drought
When the stars withheld their rain (The ancient Arabs thought that the stars brought rain.).

I was afraid of what I saw
And now my fear is realised.
I was afraid of what I saw
And today I am beside myself.
How many a woman will say tomorrow
Alas Umm Muawiya! (558)

Hind also said:
O eye, weep for Utba, the strong-necked chief,
Who gave his food in famine,
Our defence on the day of victory,
I am grieved for him, broken-hearted, demented (Suh. here presses for the meaning 'clad in mourning', mustaliba, but as all the adjectives are psychological such a sense seems out of place here.).

Let us fall on Yathrib with an overwhelming attack
With horses kept hard by,
Every long-bodied charger.
Safiya d. Musafir b. Abu Amr b. Umayya b. Abdu Shams b. Abdu

Manaf, bewailing the slain in the pit of Badr, said:
Alas for my eye painful and bleared
The night far spent, the rising sun still hid!

I was told that the noble chieftains
Fate had seized for ever,
That the riders fled with the army and
Mothers neglected their children that morning.
Arise, Safiya, forget not their relationship,
And if you weep, it is not for those who are distant.
They were the supports (I follow C. in reading suqub.) of the tent.
When they broke, the roof of the tent was left unsupported (559).

Safiya also said:
Alas my eye, weeping has exhausted its tears
Like the two buckets of the waterman
Walking among the trees of the orchard.
No lion of the jungle with claws and teeth,
Father of cubs, leaping on his prey,
Exceeding fierce and angry,
Is equal to my love when he died
Facing people whose faces were changed in anger,
In his hand a sharp sword of the finest steel.
When you thrust with a spear you made great wounds
From which came hot foaming blood (560).

Hind d. Uthatha b. Abbab b. al-Muttalib lamenting Ubayda b. al-Harith b. al-Muttalib said:
Al-Safra (A place between Mecca and Medina.) holds glory and authority,

Deep-rooted culture, ample intelligence.
Weep for Ubayda, a mountain of strength to the strange guests,
And the widow who suckles a dishevelled baby;
To the people in every winter
When the skies are red from famine;
To the orphans when the wind was violent.
He heated the pot which foamed with milk as it seethed;

When the fire burned low and its flame died
He would revive it with thick brushwood.
Mourn him for the night traveller or the one wanting food,
The wanderer lost whom he put at his ease (561).
Outayla d. al-Harith, sister of al-Nadr b. al-Harith, weeping him said:

O Rider, I think you will reach Uthayl (A place near Medina between Badr and Wadi Safri.).
At dawn of the fifth night if you are lucky.
Greet a dead man there for me.
Swift camels always carry news from me to thee.
(Tell of) flowing tears running profusely or ending in a sob.

Can al-Nadr hear me when I call him,
How can a dead man hear who cannot speak?
O Mohammed, finest child of noble mother,
Whose sire a noble sire was,
'Twould not have harmed you had you spared him.
(A warrior oft spares though full of rage and anger.)
Or you could have taken a ransom,
The dearest price that could be paid (Nöldeke's Delectus, p. 67, has a different text here.).

Al-Nadr was the nearest relative you captured
With the best claim to be released.
The swords of his father's sons came down on him.
Good God, what bonds of kinship there were shattered!

Exhausted he was led to a cold-blooded death,
A prisoner in bonds, walking like a hobbled beast (Some Manuscripts, followed by Sun. and W., make Ibn Hisham responsible for its inclusion in the Sira.) (562).

The apostle left Badr at the end of the month of Ramadan or in Shawwal.

THE RAID ON (THE) B. SULAYM IN AL-KUDR
The apostle stayed only seven nights in Medina before he himself made a raid against (the) B. Sulaym (563). He got as far as their watering place called al-Kudr and stayed there three nights, returning to Medina without any fighting. He stayed there for the rest of Shawwai and Dhul-Qada, and during that time he accepted the ransom of most of the Quraysh prisoners. Abu Mohammed Abdul-Malik b. Hisham from Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai from Mohammed b. Ishaq al-Muttalibi said: Then Abu Sufyan b. Harb made the raid of Sawiq in Dhul-Hijja. The polytheists were in charge of the pilgrimage that year. Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr and Yazid b. Ruman and one whose veracity I do not suspect from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik who was one of the most learned Helpers told me that when Abu Sufyan returned to Mecca and the Quraysh fugitives returned from Badr. he swore that he would not practise ablution (A euphemism for abstaining from sexual intercourse.) until he had raided Mohammed. Accordingly he sallied forth with two hundred riders from Quraysh to fulfil his vow. He took the Nejd road and stopped by the upper part of a watercourse which led to a mountain called Thayb about one post distance from Medina. Then he sallied forth by night and came to the B. al-Nadir under cover of darkness. He came to Huyayy b. Akhtab and knocked upon his door, but as he was afraid of him he refused to open the door, so he went to Sallam b. Mishkam, who was their chief at that time, and keeper of the public purse. He asked permission to come in and Sallam entertained him with food and drink, and gave him secret information about the Muslims. He rejoined his companions at the end of the night and sent some of them to Medina. They came to an outlying district called Al-Urayd and there they burnt some young palmtrees and finding one of the Helpers and an ally of his working the fields there, they killed them and returned. People got warning of them and so the apostle went out in pursuit (564). He got as far as Qarqaratul-Kudr (About eight posts distance from Medina.) and then returned because Abu Sufyan and his companions had eluded him. They saw some of the provisions which the raiders had thrown away in the fields to lighten their baggage so as to get away quickly. When the apostle brought the Muslims back they asked, 'Do you hope that this will count (with God) in our favour as a raid?' and he replied, '4 Yes' (565).

When he went away Abu Sufyan said of Sallam's treatment of him:

I chose one man out of Medina as an ally,
I had no cause to regret it, though I did not stay long.
Sallam ibn Mishkam gave me good wine,
He refreshed me in full measure despite my haste.
When the raiders turned back I said
(Unwilling to burden him),
'Look forward to raiding and booty.
Consider, for the people are the pure stock of Lu'ayy,
Not a mixed rabble of Jurhum'.
It was no more than (spending) part of the night by a traveller
Who came hungry though not needy and destitute.

[Abu Sufyan had composed some verses to incite (the) Quraysh when he got ready to march from Mecca to Medina:

Return to the attack on Yathrib and the lot of them,
For what they have collected is booty for you.
Though the battle of the cistern went in their favour
The future will restore your fortunes.
I swear that I will not come near women
Nor shall I use the water of purification
Until you destroy the tribes of Aus and Khazraj.
My heart is burning for revenge (Tabari omits the poem in the Sira and in its place has the lines above.).

Kab b. Malik answered him:
The Muslims (Lit. 'the mother of those who pray'; cf. Koran 37.43.) are sorry for Ibn Harb's army,
So futile in the harra

When those who were sick of their provision cast away the burden (The true text is in the Corrigenda. I take al-tayra to be the plural of taira. See Lane, 1904b-1905a.)

Climbing up to the top of the mountain.

The place where their camels knelt can be

Only with the hole of foxes (The sense is not very clear. The glossary to Tabari 235 tentatively suggests that the enemy dare not pitch camp there.)

Bare of gold* and wealth and of

The warriors of the vale and their spears.]

(* I follow de Jong's conjecture and read al-nadr for al-nasr.)

THE RAID OF DHU AMARR

When the apostle returned from the raid of al-Sawliq he stayed in Medina for the rest of Dhul-Hijja, or nearly all of it. Then he raided Najd, making for Ghatafan. This is the raid of Dhu Amarr (566). He stayed in Najd during the month of Safar, or nearly all of it, and then returned to Medina without any fighting. There he remained for the month of Rabiul-Awwal, or a day or two less.

THE RAID OF AL-FURU OF BAHRAIN

Then he made a raid on Quraysh as far as Bahran, a mine in the Hijaz in the neighbourhood of Al-Furu (A village near Medina). He stayed there for the next two months and then returned to Medina without fighting (567).

THE AFFAIR OF THE B. QAYNUQA

Meanwhile there was the affair of the B. Qaynuqa. The apostle assembled them in their market and addressed them as follows: 'O Jews, beware lest God bring upon you the vengeance that He brought upon Quraysh and become Muslims. You know that I am a prophet who has been sent—you will find that in your scriptures and God's covenant with you.' They replied, 'O Mohammed, you seem to think that we are your people. Do not deceive yourself because you encountered a people with no knowledge of war and got the better of them; for by God if we fight you, you will find that we are real men!'

A freedman of the family of Zayd b. Thabit from Said b. Jubayr or from Ikrima from Ibn Abbas told me that the latter said the following verses came down about them:

'Say to those who disbelieve: you will be vanquished and gathered to Hell, an evil resting place. You have already had a sign in the two forces which met', i.e. the apostle's companions at Badr and the Quraysh. 'One force fought in the way of God: the other, disbelievers, thought they saw double their own force with their very eyes. God strengthens with His help whom He will. Verily in that is an example for the discerning (Koran 3.10).'

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada said that the B. Qaynuqa were the first of the Jews to break their agreement with the apostle and to go to war, between Badr and Uhud (568), and the apostle besieged them until they surrendered unconditionally. Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul went to him when God had put them in his power and said, 'O Mohammed, deal kindly with my clients' (now they were allies of Khazraj), but the apostle put him off.

He repeated the words, and the apostle turned away from him, whereupon he thrust his hand into the collar of the apostle's robe (569); the apostle was so angry that his face became almost black. He said, 'Confound you, let me go.' He answered, 'No, by God, I will not let you go until you deal kindly with my clients. Four hundred men without mail and three hundred mailed protected me from all mine enemies; would you cut them down in one morning? By God, I am a man who fears that circumstances may change.' The apostle said, 'You can have them (570).'

My father Ishaq b. Yasar told me from Ubada b. al-Walid b. Ubada b. al-Samit who said: when the B. Qaynuqa fought the apostle Abdullah b. Ubayy espoused their cause and defended them, and Ubada b.

al-Samit, who was one of the B. Auf, who had the same alliance with them as had Abdullah, went to the apostle and renounced all responsibility for them in favour of God and the apostle, saying, 'O apostle of God, I take God and His apostle and the believers as my friends, and I renounce my agreement and friendship with these unbelievers.' Concerning him and Abdullah b. Ubayy, this passage from the chapter of the Table came down (Koran 5.56 f.):

'O you who believe, take not Jews and Christians as friends. They are friends one of another. Who of you takes them as friends is one of them. God will not guide the unjust people. You can see those in whose heart there is sickness', i.e. Abdullah b. Ubayy when he said, 'I fear a change of circumstances.' Acting hastily in regard to them they say we fear that change of circumstances may overtake us. Peradventure God will bring victory or an act from Him so that they will be sorry for their secret thoughts, and those who believe will say, Are these those who swore by God their most binding oath? [that they were with you], as far as God's words, 'Verily God and His apostle are your friends, and those who believe, who perform prayer, give alms and bow in homage,' mentioning Ubada taking God and His apostle and the believers as friends, and renouncing his agreement and friendship with the B. Qaynuqa', 'Those who take God and His apostle and the believers as friends, they are God's party, they are the victorious.'

THE RAID OF ZAYD B. HARITHA TO AL-QARADA

The story of the foray of Zayd who captured the caravan of Quraysh, in which was Abu Sufyan b. Harb, when the apostle sent him to al-Qarada, a watering-place in Najd, is as follows:

Quraysh were afraid to follow their usual route to Syria after what had happened at Badr, so they went by the Iraq route. Some of their merchants went out, among whom was Abu Sufyan, carrying a great deal of silver which formed the larger part of their merchandise. They hired a man from the B. Bakr b. Wail called Furat b. Hayyan to conduct them by that route (571). The apostle duly sent Zayd, and he met them by that watering-place and captured the caravan and its contents, but the men got away. He brought the spoil to the apostle.

Hassan b. Thabit after Uhud concerning the last raid of Badr taunted Quraysh for taking the Iraq road thus:

You can say good-bye to the streams of Damascus, for in between

Are swords like the mouths of pregnant camels who feed on arak trees

In the hands of men who migrated to their Lord

And His true helpers and the angels.

If they go to the lowland of the sandy valley

Say to them, There is no road here (Cf. Wüstenfeld 667.)(572).

THE KILLING OF KAB B. AL-ASHRAF

After the Quraysh defeat at Badr the apostle had sent Zayd b. Haritha to the lower quarter and Abdullah b. Rawaha to the upper quarter to tell the Muslims of Medina of God's victory and of the polytheists who had been killed. Abdullah b. al-Mughith b. Abu Burda al-Zafari and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm and Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Salih b. Abu Umama b. Sahl each gave me a part of the following story- Kab b. al-Ashraf who was one of the Tayyi of the subsection B. Nabhan whose mother was from the B. al-Nadir, when he heard the news said 'Is this true? Did Mohammed actually kill these whom these two men mention? (i.e. Zayd and Abdullah b. Rawaha). These are the nobles of the Arabs and kingly men; by God, if Mohammed has slain these people 'twere (it were) better to be dead than alive (Lit. the inside of the Earth is better than the outside).'

When the enemy of God became certain that the news was true he left the town and went to Mecca to stay with al-Muttahb b. Abu Wadaa b. Dubayra al-Sahmi who was married to Atika d. Abul-Is b. Lmayya b. Abdu Shams b. Abdu Manaf. She took him in and entertained him hospitably. He began to inveigh against the apostle and to recite verses in which he bewailed the Quraysh who were thrown into the pit after having been slain at Badr. He said:

Badr's mill ground out the blood of its people.

At events like Badr you should weep and cry.

The best of the people were slain round their cisterns, Do not think it strange that the princes were left lying.

How many noble handsome men,

The refuge of the homeless were slain,

Liberal when the stars gave no rain,

Who bore others' burdens, ruling and taking their due fourth.

Some people whose anger pleases me say

Kab b. al-Ashraf is utterly dejected'.

They are right. O that the earth when they were killed

Had split asunder and engulfed its people,

That he who spread the report had been thrust through

Or lived cowering blind and deaf.

I was told that all the Banul-Mughira were humiliated

And brought low by the death of Abul-Hakim

And the two sons of Rabia with him,

And Munabbih and the others did not attain (such honour) as those who were slain (Or 'Tubba did not' [so A. Dh. Waq. has hal for ma and al-tubbau for w-tubbau.)

I was told that al-Harith ibn Hisham

Is doing well and gathering troops

To visit Yathrib with armies,

For only the noble, handsome man protects the loftiest* reputation (573)-

(* Or the reading must be ula, because yahmi governs an accsative)

Hassan b. Thabit answered him thus:

Does Kab weep for him again and again

And live in humiliation hearing nothing? (The question is ironical: let him weep if he wants to. The text of this poem is dubious.)

In the vale of Badr I saw some of them, the slain,

Eyes pouring with tears for them.

Weep [Atika], for you have made a mean slave weep

Like a pup following a little bitch.

God has given satisfaction to our leader

And put to shame and prostrated those who fought him.

Those whose hearts were torn with fear

Escaped and fled away (574).

A Muslim woman of B. Murayd, a clan of Ball who were allied attach ments of B. Umayya b. Zayd, called al-Jaadira answered Kab (575):

This slave shows great concern

Weeping over the slain untiringly.

May the eye that weeps over the slain at Badr weep on

And may Luayy b. Ghalib weep double as much!

Would that those weltering in their blood

Could be seen by those who live between Mecca's mountains!

They would know for certain and would see

How they were dragged along by hair and beard (Or, reading mahazzahum, 'the sword cuts above their beards and eyebrows').'

Kab b. al-Ashraf answered her:

Drive off that fool of yours that you may be safe

From talk that has no sense!

Do you taunt me because I shed tears

For people who loved me sincerely?

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

As long as I live I shall weep and remember
The merits of people whose glory is in Mecca's houses.
By my life Murayd used to be far from hostile
But now they are become as jackals.
They ought to have their noses cut off
For insulting the two clans of Luayy b. Ghalib.
I give my share in Murayd to Jadar
In truth, by God's house, between Mecca's mountains.

1369 (Tabari: Then Kab returned to Medina and composed amatory verses about Ummul-Fadl d. al-Harith, saying:
Are you off without stopping in the valley
And leaving Ummul-Fadl in Mecca?
Out would come what she bought from the pedlar of bottles,
Henna and hair dye.
What lies 'twixt (betwixt = between) ankle and elbow is in motion*

When she tries to stand and does not.
[* Presumably her buttocks are meant; they would be between her ankle and her elbow as she reclined. Large and heavy buttocks were marks of female beauty among the old Arabs.]

Like Uram Hakim when she was with us
The link between us firm and not to be cut.
She is one of B. Amir who bewitches the heart,
And if she wished she could cure my sickness.
The glory of women and of a people is their father,
A people held in honour true to their oath.
Never did I see the sun rise at night till I saw her Display herself to us in the darkness of the night!)

Then he composed amatory verses of an insulting nature about the Muslim women. The apostle said—according to what Abdullah b. al-Mughith b. Abu Burda told me—'Who will rid me of Ibnul-Ashraf?' Mohammed b. Maslama, brother of the B. Abdul-Ashhal, said, 'I will deal with him for you, O apostle of God, I will kill him.' He said, 'Do so if you can.' So Mohammed b. Maslama returned and waited for three days without food or drink, apart from what was absolutely necessary. When the apostle was told of this he summoned him and asked him why he had given up eating and drinking. He replied that he had given him an undertaking and he did not know whether he could fulfil it. The apostle said, 'M that is incumbent upon you is that you should try.' He said, 'O apostle of God, we shall have to tell lies.' He answered, 'Say what you like, for you are free in the matter.' Thereupon he and Silkan b. Salama b. Waqsh who was Abu Naila one of the B. Abdul-Ashhal, foster-brother of Kab, and Abbad b. Bishr b. Waqsh, and al-Harith b. Aus b. Muadh of the B. Abdul-Ashhal and Abu Abs b. Jabr of the B. Haritha conspired together and sent Silkan to the enemy of God, Kab b. Ashraf, before they came to him. He talked to him some time and they recited poetry one to the other, for Silkan was fond of poetry. Then he said, 'O Ibn Ashraf, I have come to you about a matter which I want to tell you of and wish you to keep secret.' 'Very well,' he replied. He went on, 'The coming of this man is a great trial to us. It has provoked the hostility of the Arabs, and they are all in league against us. The roads have become impassable so that our families are in want and privation, and we and our families are in great distress.' Kab answered, 'By God, I kept telling you, O Ibn Salama, that the things I warned you of would happen.' Silkan said to him, 'I want you to sell us food and we will give you a pledge of security and you deal generously in the matter.' He replied, 'Will you give me your sons as a pledge?' He said, 'You want to insult us. I have friends who share my opinion and I want to bring them to you so that you may sell to them and act generously, and we will give you enough weapons for a good pledge.' Silkan's object was that he should not take alarm at the sight of weapons when they brought them. Kab answered, 'Weapons are a good pledge.' Thereupon Silkan returned to his companions, told them what had happened, and ordered them to take their arms. Then they went away and assembled with him and met the apostle (576).

Thaur b. Zayd from Ikrima from Ibn Abbas told me the apostle walked with them as far as Baqil-Gharqad. Then he sent them off, saying, 'Go in God's name; O God help them.' So saying, he returned to his house. Now it was a moonlight night and they journeyed on until they came to his castle, and Abu Naila called out to him. He had only recently married, and he jumped up in the bedsheet, and his wife took hold of the end of it and said, 'You are at war, and those who are at war do not go out at this hour.' He replied, 'It is Abu Naila. Had he found me sleeping he would not have woken me.' She answered, 'By God, I can feel evil in his voice.' Kab answered, 'Even if the call were for a stab a brave man must answer it.' So he went down and talked to them for some time, while they conversed with him. Then Abu Naila said, 'Would you like to walk with us to Shib al-Ajaz, so that we can talk for the rest of the night?' If you like,' he answered, so they went off walking together; and after a time Abu Naila ran his hand through his hair. Then he smelt his hand, and said, 'I have never smelt a scent finer than this.' They walked on farther and he did the same so that Kab suspected no evil. Then after a space he did it for the third time, and cried, 'Smite (slay) the enemy of God!' So they smote him, and their swords clashed over him with no effect. Mohammed b. Maslama said, 'I remembered my dagger when I saw that our swords were useless, and I seized it. Meanwhile the enemy of God had made such a noise that every fort around us was showing a light. I thrust it into the lower part of his body, then I bore down upon it until I reached his genitals, and the enemy of God fell to the ground. Al-Harith had been hurt, being wounded either in his head or in his foot, one of our swords having struck him. We went away, passing by the B. Umayya b. Zayd and then the B. Qurayza and then Buath until we went up the Harra of al-Urayd (Harra is a district of black volcanic stone and Urayd is one of the valleys of Medina). Our friend al-Harith had lagged behind, weakened by loss of blood, so we waited for him for some time until he came up, following our tracks. We carried him and brought him to the apostle at the end of the night. We saluted him as he stood praying, and he came out to us, and we told him that we had killed God's enemy. He spat upon our comrade's wounds, and both he and we returned to our families. Our attack upon God's enemy cast terror among the Jews, and there was no Jew in Medina who did not fear for his life.' (A photograph of the ruins of Kab's castle is given in The Islamic Review, Sept. 1953. p. 12. There Dr. M. Hamidullah writes: 'Towards the south [of Medina] in the eastern lava plain near Wadi Mudhanib, there is a small hillock. On the walls of the palace of Kab Ibn al-Ashraf still stand, about a yard or a yard and a quarter in height, built of stone. Inside the palace there is a well in front of the palace, on the base of the hillock, there are rims of a big cistern of water, built of lime and divided into several sections, each connected with the other by means of clay pipes.')

Kab b. Malik said:
Of them Kab was left prostrate here
(After his fall al-Nadir here was brought low).
Sword in hand we cut him down
By Mohammed's order when he sent secretly by night
Kab's brother to go to Kab.
He beguiled him and brought him down with guile
Mahmud was trustworthy, bold (577).
Hassan b. Thabit, mentioning the killing of Kab and of Sallam b.

Abul-Huqayq, said:
What a fine band you met, O Ibnul-Huqayq,
And you too, Ibnul-Ashraf,
Travelling by night with their light swords
Bold as lions in their jungle lair

Until they came to you in your quarter
And made you taste death with their deadly swords,
Seeking victory for the religion of their prophet
Counting their lives and wealth as nothing (578).

THE AFFAIR OF MUHAYYISA AND HUWAYYISA

The apostle said, 'Kill any Jew that falls into your power.' Thereupon Muhayyisa b. Mas'ud leapt upon Ibn Sunayna (579), a Jewish merchant with whom they had social and business relations, and killed him. Huwayyisa was not a Muslim at the time though he was the elder brother. When Muhayyisa killed him Huwayyisa began to beat him, saying, 'You enemy of God, did you kill him when much of the fat on your belly comes from his wealth?' Muhayyisa answered, 'Had the one who ordered me to kill him ordered me to kill you I would have cut your head off.' He said that this was the beginning of Huwayyisa's acceptance of Islam. The other replied, 'By God, if Mohammed had ordered you to kill me would you have killed me?' He said, 'Yes, by God, had he ordered me to cut off your head I would have done so.' He exclaimed, 'By God, a religion which can bring you to this is marvellous!' and he became a Muslim.

I was told this story by a client of B. Haritha from the daughter of Muhayyisa from Muhayyisa himself.

Muhayyisa composed the following lines on the subject:

My mother's son blames me because if I were ordered to kill him
I would smite (chop off) his nape with a sharp sword,
A blade white as salt from polishing.
My downward stroke never misses its mark.
It would not please me to kill you voluntarily
Though we owned all Arabia from north to south (580).

After his arrival from Bahran the apostle stopped for the months of the latter Jumada, Rajab, Shaban, and Ramadan (in Medina). Quraysh made the raid of Uhud in Shawwal, 625 AD (3 AH).

THE BATTLE OF UHUD

I have pieced together the following story about the battle of Uhud, from what I was told by Mohammed b. Muslim al-Zuhri and Mohammed b. Yahya b. Hibban and Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Al-Husayn b. Abdul-Rahman b. Amr b. Sad b. Muadh and other learned traditionists. One or the other, or all of them, is responsible for the following narrative. When the unbelieving Quraysh met disaster at Badr and the survivors returned to Mecca and Abu Sufyan b. Harb had returned with his caravan, Abdullah b. Abu Rabia and Ikrima b. Abu Jahl and Safwan b. Umayya walked with the men whose fathers, sons, and brothers had been killed at Badr, and they spoke to Abu Sufyan and those who had merchandise in that caravan, saying, 'Men of Quraysh, Mohammed has wronged you and killed your best men, so help us with this money to fight him, so that we may hope to get our revenge for those we have lost,' and they did so. A learned person told me that it was concerning them that God sent down (Koran 8.37.): 'Those who disbelieve spend their money to keep others from the way of God, and they will spend it, then they will suffer the loss of it, then they will be overcome, and those who disbelieve will be gathered to Hell.' So Quraysh gathered together to fight the apostle when Abu Sufyan did this, and the owners of the caravan, with their black troops, and such of the tribes of Kinana as would obey them, and the people of the low country. Now Abu Azza al-Jumahl had been spared by the apostle at Badr because he was a poor man with a large family (v.s. Wüstenfeld p. 471.) He had been taken prisoner, and said, 'I am a poor man with a large family and great need, as you know, so spare me,' and the apostle let him go. Safwan said to him, 'Now, Abu Azza, you are a poet so help us with your tongue and go forth with us.' He replied, 'Mohammed spared me and I do not want to go against him.' He said, 'No, but help us with your presence, and God is my witness that if I return I will make you rich; and if you are killed I will treat your daughters as my own. What befalls mine, whether good or ill, shall befall yours.' So Abu Azza went through the low country calling the B. Kinana and saying:

Listen, sons of Abdu Manat, the steadfast,
You are stout warriors like your father,
Do not promise me your help a year hence,
Do not betray me, for betrayal is not right (The sung is in the tail where islam is used in the sense of 'betrayal').

Musafi b. Abdu Manat b. Wahb b. Hudhafa b. Jumah went out to the B. Malik b. Kinana stirring them up and calling them to fight the apostle, saying:

O Malik, Malik, foremost in honour,
I ask in the name of kindred and confederate,
Those who are next-of-kin and those who arc not,
In the name of the alliance in the midst of the holy city,
At the wall of the venerable Kaaba.

Jubayr b. Mutim summoned an Abyssinian slave of his called Wahshi, who could throw a javelin as the Abyssinians do and seldom missed the mark. He said, 'Go forth with the army, and if you kill Hamza, Mohammed's uncle, in revenge for my uncle, Tuayma b. Adiy, you shall be free.' So Quraysh marched forth with the flower of their army, and their black troops, and their adherents from the B. Kinana, and the people of the lowland, and women in howdahs went with them to stir up their anger and prevent their running away. Abu Sufyan, who was in command, went out with Hind d. Utba, and Ikrima b. Abu Jahl went with Umm Hakim d. al-Harith b. Hisham b. al-Mughira; and al-Harith b. Hisham b. al-Mughira went with Fatima d. al-Walid b. al-Mughira; and Safwan went with Barza d. Masud b. Amr b. Umayr the Thaqafite who was the mother of Abdullah b. Safwan b. Umayya (581). Amr b. al-As went with Rayta d. Munabbih b. al-Hajjaj who was Umm Abdullah b. Amr. Talha b. Abu Talha who was Abdullah b. Abdul-Uzza b. Uthman b. Abdul-Dar went with Sulafa d. Sad b. Shuhayd al-Ansariya who was mother of the sons of Talha, Musafi, al-Julas and Kilab; they were killed with their father that day. Khunas d. Malik b. al-Mudarrif, one of the women of the B. Malik b. Hisham went with her son Abu Aziz b. Umayr. She was the mother of Musab b. Umayr. Amra d. Alqama, one of the women of the B. al-Harith b. Abdu Manat b. Kinana went out. Whenever Hind passed Wahshi or he passed by her, she would say, 'Come on, you father of blackness, satisfy your vengeance and ours.' Wahshi had the title of Abu Dasma. They went forward until they halted at Aynayn on a hill in the valley of al-Sabkha of Qanat by the side of the wadi opposite Medina. (See M. Hamidullah in R.E.I. 1939, 1-13.)

When the apostle heard about them, and the Muslims had encamped, he said to them, 'By God, I have seen (in a dream) something that augurs well. I saw cows, and I saw a dent in the blade of my sword, and I saw that I had thrust my hand into a strong coat of mail and I interpreted that to mean Medina (582). If you think it well to stop in Medina and leave them where they have encamped, for if they halt they will have halted in a bad position and if they try to enter the city, we can fight them therein, (that is a good plan).' (Tabari 1387 adds: Quraysh encamped at Ubud on Wednesday and remained there till Friday. When the apostle had finished the Friday prayers he went in the morning to the valley of Uhud and they met on the Saturday half-way through Shawwal.). Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul agreed with the apostle in this, and thought that they should not go out to fight them, and the apostle himself disliked the idea of leaving the city. Some men whom God honoured with martyrdom at Uhud and others who were not present at Badr said, 'O apostle of God, lead us forth to our enemies, lest they think that we are too cowardly and too weak to fight them.' Abdullah said, 'O apostle of God, stay in Medina, do not go out to them. We have never gone out to fight an enemy but we have met disaster, and none has come in against us without being defeated, so leave them where they are. If they stay, they stay in an evil predicament, and if they come in, the men will fight them and the women and children will throw stones on them from the walls, and if they retreat they will retreat low-spirited as they came.' Those who wanted to fight the Quraysh kept urging the apostle until he went into his house and put on his armour. That was on the Friday when he had finished prayers. On that day one of the Ansar, Malik b. Amr one of the B. al-Najjar died, and the apostle prayed over him, and then went out to fight. Meanwhile the people had repented of their design, saying they thought they had persuaded the apostle against his will, which they had no right to do, so that when he went out to them they admitted that and said that if he wished to remain inside the city they would not oppose him. The apostle said, 'It is not fitting that a prophet who has put on his armour should lay it aside until he has fought,' so he marched out with a thousand of his companions (583), until when they reached al-Shaut between Medina and Uhud, Abdullah b. Ubayy withdrew with a third of the men, saying, 'He has obeyed them and disobeyed me. We do not know why we should lose our lives here, O men.' So he returned with the waverers and doubters who followed him, and Abdullah b. Amr b. Haram, brother of the B. Salama, followed them, saying, 'O people, I adjure you by God not to abandon your people and your prophet when the enemy is at hand.' They replied, 'If we knew that you would fight we would not abandon you, but we do not think that there will be a battle.' So when they withstood him and persisted in withdrawing, he said, 'May God curse you, you enemies of God, for God will make His prophet independent of you.' Someone, not Ziyad (Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai), from Mohammed b. Ishaq from al-Zuhri, said that on that day the Ansar said, 'O apostle, should we not ask help from our allies, the Jews?' He said, 'We have no need of them.' Ziyad said Mohammed b. Ishaq told me that the apostle went his way until he passed through the harra of the B. Haritha and a horse swished its tail and it caught the pommel of a sword so that it came out of its sheath (584). The apostle, who liked auguries, though he did not observe the flight of birds, said to the owner of the sword, 'Sheath your sword, for I can see that swords will be drawn today.'

Then the apostle asked his companions whether anyone could take them near the Quravsh by a road which would not pass by them. Abu Khaythama, brother of B. Haritha b. al-Harith, undertook to do so, and he took him through the harra of B. Haritha and their property until he came out in the territory of Mirba' b. Qayzi who was a blind man, a disaffected person. When he perceived the approach of the apostle and his men he got up and threw dust in their faces saying, 'You may be the apostle of God, but I won't let you through my garden!' I was told that he took a handful of dust and said, 'By God, Mohammed, if I could be sure that I should not hit someone else I would throw it in your face.' The people rushed on him to kill him, and the apostle said, 'Do not kill him, for this blind man is blind of heart, blind of sight.' Sad b. Zayd, brother of B. Abdul-Ashhal, rushed at him before the apostle had forbidden this and hit him on the head with his bow so that he split it open.

The apostle went on until he came down the gorge of Uhud on the high ground of the wadi towards the mountain. He put his camels and army towards Uhud and said, 'Let none of you fight until we give the word.' Now (the) Quraysh had let their camels and horses loose to pasture in some crops which were in al-Samgha, a part of Qanat belonging to the Muslims. When the apostle had forbidden them to fight one of the Ansar said, 'Are the crops of the B. Qayla to be grazed on without our striking a blow?' The apostle drew up his troops for battle, about 700 men. He put over the archers Abdullah b. Jubayr brother of B. Amr b. Auf who was distinguished that day by his white garments. There were 50 archers, and he said, 'Keep the cavalry away from us with your arrows and let them not come on us from the rear whether the battle goes in our favour or against us; and keep your place so that we cannot be got at from your direction.' The apostle then put on two coats of mail and delivered the standard to Musab b. Umayr, brother of B. Abdul-Dar (585).

The Quraysh mustered their troops about 3,000 men with 200 horses which they had led along with them. Their cavalry on the left flank was commanded by Khalid b. al-Walid; and on the right by Ikrima b. Abu Jahl.

[M. The apostle wore two coats of mail on the day of Uhud, and he took up a sword and brandished it saying] 'Who will take this sword with its right?' (i.e. use it as it ought and deserves to be used.) Some men got up to take it but he withheld it from them until Abu Dujana Simak b. Kharasha, brother of B. Saida, got up to take it.

[M. Umar got up to take it, saying, 'I will take it with its right,' but the prophet turned away from him and brandished it a second time using the same words. Then al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam got up and he too was rejected, and the two of them were much mortified. Then Abu Dujana, etc.] He asked, 'What is its right, O Apostle of God?' He answered, 'That you should smite the enemy with it until it bends.' When he said that he would take it with its right he gave it him. Now Abu Dujana was a brave but conceited man in battle and whenever he put on this red turban of his, people knew that he was about to fight. When he took the sword from the apostle's hand [he began to walk to the fight saying:

I am the man who took the sword
When Use it right' was the prophet's word.
For the sake of God, of all the Lord
Who doth to all their food afford.]

And he began to strut up and down between the lines.

Jafar b. Abdullah b. Aslam, client of Umar b. al-Khattab, told me on the authority of one of the Ansar of B. Salama that the apostle said when he saw Abu Dujana strutting, 'This is a gait which Allah hates except on an occasion like this.'

[Tabari 1398: Now Abu Sufyan had sent a messenger saying, 'You men of Aus and

Khazraj, leave me to deal with my cousin and we will depart from you, for we have no need to fight you'; but they gave him a rude answer.]

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that Abu Amir Abdu Amr b. Sayfi b. Malik b. al-Numan, one of the B. lubaya who had separated from the apostle and gone off to Mecca along with fifty young men of al-Aus [Tabari: among whom was Uthman b. Hunayf] though some people say there were only fifteen of them, was promising Quraysh that if he met his people no two men of them would exchange blows with him; and when the battle was joined the first one to meet them was Abu Amir with the black troops and the slaves of the Meccans, and he cried out, 'O men of Aus, I am Abu Amir.' They replied, 'Then God destroy your sight, you impious rascal.' (In the pagan period he was called 'the monk'; the apostle called him 'the impious'.) When he heard their reply he said, 'Evil has befallen my people since I left them.' Then he fought with all his might, pelting them with stones.

Abu Sufyan had said to the standardbearers of the B. Abdul-Dar, inciting them to battle, 'O Banu Abdul-Dar, you had charge of our flag on the day of Badr—you saw what happened. Men are dependent on the fortunes of their flags, so either you must guard our standard efficiently or you must leave it to us and we will save you the trouble (of defending) it.' They pondered over the matter and threatened him, saying, 'Are we to surrender our flag to you? You will see tomorrow how we shall act when battle is joined' and that was just what Abu Sufyan wanted. When each side drew near to the other Hind b. Utba rose up with the women that were with her and took tambourines which they beat behind the men to incite them while Hind was saying:

On ye sons of Abdul-Dar,
On protectors of our rear,
Smite with every sharpened spear!

She also said:

If you advance we hug you,
Spread soft rugs beneath you;
If you retreat we leave you,
Leave and no more love you (Almost the same words were used by a woman of B. Ijl at the battle of Dhu Qar. Cf. Naqa'id, 641.) (586).

The people went on fighting until the battle grew hot, and Abu Dujana fought until he had advanced far into the enemy's ranks (587).

Whenever he met one of the enemy he killed him. Now among the pagans there was a man who dispatched every man of ours he wounded. These two men began to draw near one to the other, and I prayed God that He would make them meet. They did meet and exchanged blows, and the polytheist struck at Abu Dujana, who ward off the blow with his shield; his sword sank into the shield so that he could not withdraw it, and Abu Dujana struck him and killed him. Then I saw him as his sword hovered over the head of Hind d. Utba. Then he turned it aside from her. Al-Zubayr said, And I said, "God and His apostle know best." Abu Dujana said, I saw a person inciting the enemy, shouting violently, and I made for him, and when I lifted my sword against him, he shrieked, and lo, it was a woman; I respected the apostle's sword too much to use it on a woman.'

Hamza fought until he killed Arta b. Abdu Shurahbil b. Hashim b. Abdu Manaf b. Abdul-Dar who was one of those who were carrying the standard. Then Siba b. Abdul-Uzza al-Ghubshani, who was known as Abu Niyar, passed by him, and Hamza said, 'Come here, you son of a female circumciser.' Now his mother was Umm Anmar, freedwoman of Shariq b. Amr b. Wahb al-Thaqafi (588), a female circumciser in Mecca. When they closed Hamza smote him and killed him.

Wahshi the slave of Jubayr b. Mutim, said, 'By God, I was looking at Hamza while he was killing men with his sword, sparing no one, like a huge camel (Lit. 'dust coloured'. Camels of this colour were unusually large so that the speaker means that Hamza towered over his opponents.), when Siba came up to him before me, and Hamza said, "Come here, you son of a female circumciser," and he struck him a blow so swiftly that it seemed to miss his head. I poised my javelin until I was sure that it would hit the mark, and launched it at him. It pierced the lower part of his body and came out between his legs. He came on towards me, but collapsed and fell. I left him there until he died, when I came and recovered my javelin. Then I went off to the camp, for I had no business with anyone but him.'

Abdullah b. al-Fadl b. Abbas b. Rabia b. al-Harith from Sulayman b. Yasar from Jafar b. Amr b. Umayya al-Pamri told me: I went out with Ubaydullah b. Adiy b. al-Khiyar brother of the B. Naufal b. Abdu Manif in the time of Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan and we made an excursion with the army. When we came back we passed by Hims where Wahshi had taken up his abode. When we arrived there Ubaydullah said to me, "Shall we go and see Wahshi and ask him how he killed Hamza?" "If you like," I said. So we went to inquire about him in Hims. While we were doing so a man said to us, "You will find him in the courtyard of his house. He is a man much addicted to wine; and if you find him sober, you will find an Arab and will get what you want from him in answer to your questions; but if you find him in his usual state, then leave him alone." So we walked off to find him, and there he was in the courtyard of his house upon a carpet, an old man like a bughdth (589). He was quite sober and normal. We saluted him, and he lifted his head to look at Ubaydullah, and said, "Are you the son of Adiy b. al-Khiyar?" and when he said he was, he said, "By God, I have not seen you since I handed you to your Sadite mother who nursed you in Dhu Tuwa (A place in Mecca.). I handed you to her when she was on her camel, and she clasped you round your body with her two hands. You kicked me with your feet when I lifted you up to her. (* Or, perhaps, 'Your feet looked shiny to me'. In what respect this person's feet were not normal is not indicated.) By God, as soon as you stood in front of me I recognised them." We sat down and told him that we had come to hear his account of how he killed Hamza. He said, "I will tell you as I told the apostle when he asked me about it. I was a slave of Jubayr b. Mutim, whose uncle Tuayma b. Adly had been killed at Badr, and when Quraysh set out for Uhud, Jubayr told me that if I killed Hamza, Mohammed's uncle, in revenge for his uncle, I should be free. So I went out with the army, a young Abyssinian, skilful like my countrymen in the use of the javelin—I hardly ever missed anything with it. When the fight began I went out to look carefully for Hamza, until I saw him in the midst of the army, like a great camel, slaying men with his sword, none being able to resist him, and by God, I was getting ready for him, making towards him and hiding myself behind trees or rocks so that he might come near me, when suddenly Siba got to him first, and when Hamza saw him, he said, "Come here, you son of a female circumciser," and struck him a blow so swiftly that it seemed to miss his head. I poised my javelin until I was sure that it would hit the mark and launched it at him. It pierced the lower part of his body and came out between his legs, and he began to stagger towards me. Then he collapsed, and I left him with the javelin until he died; then I came back and recovered my javelin, and returned to the camp and stayed there, for I had no further business, and my only object in killing him was that I might be freed. When I returned to Mecca I was freed and lived there until the apostle conquered Mecca, when I fled to al-Taif, and stayed there for some time. When the envoys of Taif went out to the apostle to surrender, I was in an impasse and thought that I would go to Syria or the Yaman, or any other country, and while I was in this anxiety a man said to me, "Good heavens, what is the matter? He does not kill anyone who enters his religion and pronounces the shahada." On hearing this I went out of the town to the apostle at Medina, and the first thing to surprise him was to see me standing at his head, witnessing to the truth of God and His apostle. When he saw me he said, "Is it Wahshi?" "Yes, O apostle of God," I said. He replied, "Sit down and tell me how you killed Hamza." So I told him as I have told you. When I had finished he said, "Woe to you, hide your face from me and never let me see you again." So I used to avoid the apostle wherever he was so that he should not see me, until God took him.

"When the Muslims went out against Musaylima, the false prophet, lord of the Yamama, I accompanied them, and I took the javelin with which I had killed Hamza, and when the armies met I saw Musaylima standing with a sword in his hand, but I did not recognize him. I made ready for him and so did one of the Ansar from the other side, both of us intending to kill him. I poised my javelin until I was sure that it would hit the mark, and launched it at him, and it pierced him, and the Ansari rushed at him and smote him with his sword, so your Lord knows best which of us killed him. If I killed him, then I have killed the best man after the apostle and I have also killed the worst man."

[When he came to Medina the men said 'O apostle, this is Wahshi' to S. which he replied 'Let him alone for that one man should accept Islam is dearer to me than the killing of a thousand unbelievers.'](The passage in square brackets is taken from Yunus' riwaya. It is cited from Suhayli (ii. 132 in Wüstenfeld ii in loc.)

Abdullah b. al-Fadl from Sulayman b. Yasar from Abdullah b. Umar b. al-Khattab who was present at Yamama said, I heard someone shouting, 'The black slave has killed him' (590).

Musab b. Umayr fought in the defence of the apostle until he was killed. The one who killed him was Ibn Qamia al-Laythi, who thought he was the apostle, so he returned to the Quraysh and said, I have killed Mohammed.' When Musab was killed the apostle gave the standard to Ali, and Ali and the Muslims fought on (591).

Sad b. Abu Waqqas killed Abu Sad b. Abu Talha; Asim b. Thabit b. Abul-Aqlah fought and killed Musafi b. Talha and his brother al-Julas, shooting both of them with an arrow. Each came to his mother, Sulafa, and laid his head in her lap. She said, 'Who has hurt you, my son?' and he replied, I heard a man saying as he shot me, "I am Ibn Abul-Aqlah, take that!" She swore an oath that if God ever let her get the head of Asim she would drink wine from it. It was Asim who had taken God to witness that he would never touch a polytheist or let one touch him.

Uthman b. Abu Talha said that day as he was carrying the standard of the polytheists:

It is the duty of standardbearers
To blood their spears until they are broken to pieces.

Hamza killed him.

Hanzala b. Abu Amir, the washed one, and Abu Sufyan met in combat, and when Hanzala got the better of him, Shaddad b. al-Aswad, who was Ibn Shaub, saw that he had beaten Abu Sufyan, and so he struck him and killed him. The apostle said, 'Your companion, Hanzala, is being washed by the angels.' They asked his family about his condition, and when his wife was asked, she said that he had gone out to battle when he heard the cry while in a state of ritual impurity (592).

The apostle said, 'For this reason the angels washed him.' Shaddad said about his killing Hanzala:

I protect my friend and myself
With a thrust that pierces like the rays of the sun.
Abu Sufyan, mentioning his hardihood on that day and the help that Ibn
Shaub gave him against Hanzala, said:
Had I wished it my swift bay could have saved me,
And I should owe no thanks to Ibn Shaub.
It remained but a stone's throw off
From early morn till set of sun;
I fought them and cried, 'On, Ghalib!'
I beat them from me with firm strength;
Heed not the remonstrance of others,
Grow not weary of tears and sighs,
Weep for thy father and his brothers who have passed away,
Their fate deserves thy tears;
My former sorrow is relieved
Because I killed the best men of Najjar,
And Hashim's noble stallion and Musab
Who was not cowardly in war.
Had I not slaked my vengeance on them,
My heart had been seared and scarred.

They retired their (Meccan) vagabonds dead

(Jaldbib is said to mean 'leather aprons or coverings', as though it were the plural of jilbab. Though Meccans exported leather, that can hardly have been matter for reproach because leather was sent to the Negus as a gift known to be highly prized in Abyssinia. Moreover, why should Abu Sufyan reproach his fellow townsmen for wearing garments which presumably differed in no way from those worn by other Meccans? It is clear that the word is an insult, and the question is why? Hassan's poem (Wüstenfeld 738, Diwan cxi) attacking the muhadjirs begins: "The Jalabib have become powerful and numerous" and L Salul (Wüstenfeld 726) uses the same words to express his anger and dislike of the emigrants. Therefore it seems that the origin of the insult is to be sought in jalab A thing driven or brought from one town to another' and / or jalib An imported slave'; and so some such word as 'vagabonds' is as near as one can get to the meaning. See W. Arafat, The Poems ascribed to Hassan ibn Thabit, 146, where he adopts the rendering 'tramps'.)

Thrust through, bleeding, prostrate (Reading kabibu.).

And those who were beneath them in rank (The meaning would appear to be that the muhadjirs were killed by negroes and brigand mercenaries, though there may be a reference to the killing of Hamsa by Wahshi.) (593).

Ibn Shaub, mentioning the way he helped Abu Sufyan and defended him, said:

Had I not been there and defended you, Ibn Harb, You would have been left speechless for ever at the mountain foot.

Had I not brought my horse back there, Hyaenas or jackals would have devoured your flesh (594).

Al-Harith b. Hisham, answering Abu Sufyan, said: Had you seen what they did at Badr's pool You would have returned with fear in your heart as long as you live; (Or you would have been killed and I should have caused Weeping women to weep for you, And you would not have felt sorrow for the loss of a dear one).

I paid them back in kind for Badr On a spirited galloping prancing horse (595).

Then God sent down His help to the Muslims and fulfilled His promise. They slew the enemy with the sword until they cut them off from their camp and there was an obvious rout.

Yahya b. Abbab b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father from Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from Zubayr said: I found myself looking at the anklets of Hind d. Utba and her companions, tucking up their garments as they fled. There was nothing at all to prevent anyone seizing them when the archers turned aside to the camp when the enemy had been cut off from it (Tabari: making for the spoil). Thus they opened our rear to the cavalry and we were attacked from behind. Someone called out 'Ha, Mohammed has been killed.' We turned back and the enemy turned back on us after we had killed the standardbearers so that none of the enemy could come near it (596).

A traditionist told me that the standard lay on the ground until Amra the Harithite d. Alqama took it up and raised it aloft for Quraysh so that they gathered round it. It had been with Suab, a slave of B. Abu Talha, an Abyssinian (Ethiopian). He was the last of them to take it. He fought until his hands were cut off; then he knelt upon it and held the flag between his breast and throat until he was killed over it, saying the while 'O God, have I done my duty? (Lit. Am I excused?) He could not pronounce the dhal.

Hassan b. Thabit said about that:

You boasted of your flag, the worst (ground for) boasting

Is a flag handed over to Suab.

You have made a slave your boast,

The most miserable creature that walks the earth.

You supposed (and only a fool so thinks,

For it is anything but the truth)

That fighting us the day we met

Was like your selling red leather sacks in Mecca.

It gladdened the eye to see his hands reddened,

Though they were not reddened by dye (597).

Hassan also said about Amra and her raising the standard:

When Adal were driven to us

They were like fawns of Shirk (A.Dh. gives the forms Shurk and Shirk. Yaqut gives Shark as the name of a place in the Hijaz and Shirk as the name of a waterhole on the other side of the mountain of al-Qunan in Asad territory. Adal is a tribe of Khuzayma.)

With strongly marked eyebrows.

We attacked them thrusting, slaying, chastising,

Driving them before us with blows on every side.

Had not the Harithite woman seized their standard

They would have been sold in the markets like chattels.

The Muslims were put to flight and the enemy slew many of them. It was a day of trial and testing in which God honoured several with martyrdom, until the enemy got at the apostle who was hit with a stone so that he fell on his side and one of his teeth was smashed, his face scored, and his lip injured. The man who wounded him was Utba b. Abu Waqqas.

Humayd al-Tawil told me from Anas b. Malik: The prophet's incisor was broken on the day of Uhud and his face was scored. The blood began to run down his face and he began to wipe it away, saying the while, 'How can a people prosper who have stained their prophet's face with blood while he summoned them to their Lord?' So God revealed concerning that: It is not your affair whether He relents towards them or punishes them, for they are wrongdoers' (Koran 3.123) (598).

Hassan b. Thabit said of Utba:

When God recompenses a people for their deeds And the Rahman punishes them (Reading wadarrahum with C.)

May my Lord disgrace you, Utayba b. Malik,

And bring you a deadly punishment before you die.

You stretched out your hand with evil intent against the prophet,

You blooded his mouth. May your hand be cut off!

Did you forget God and the place you will go to

When the final misfortune overtakes you! (599).

According to what al-Husayn b. Abdul-Rahman b. Amr b. Sad b. Muadh told me on the authority of Mahmud b. Amr, when the enemy hemmed him in, the apostle said: 'Who will sell his life for us?' and Ziyad b. al-Sakan with five of the Ansar arose. (Others say it was Umara b. Yazid b. al-Sakan.) They fought in defence of the apostle man after man, all being killed until only Ziyad (or Umara) was left fighting until he was disabled. At that point a number of the Muslims returned and drove the enemy away from him. The apostle ordered them to bring him to him and made his foot a support for his head and he died with his face on the apostle's foot (600).

Abu Dujana made his body a shield for the apostle. Arrows were falling on his back as he leaned over him, until there were many stuck in it. Sad b. Abu Waqqas shot his arrows in defence of the apostle. He said, I have seen him handing me the arrows as he said "Shoot, may my father and my mother be your ransom" until he would even hand me an arrow that had no head, saying "Shoot with that".'

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada said that the apostle went on shooting from his bow until the bottom of it broke. Qatada b. al-Numan took it and kept it. That day his eye was so injured that it lay exposed upon his cheek. Asim told me that the apostle restored it to its place with his hand and it became his best and keenest eye afterwards.

Al-Qasim b. Abdul-Rahman b. Rafi, brother of the B. Adiy b. al-Najjar, told me that Anas b. al-Nadr, uncle of Anas b. Malik, came to Umar b. al-Khattab and Talha b. Ubaydullah with men of the Muhajirun and Ansar who were dejected. He said, 'What makes you sit there?' They said, 'The apostle has been killed.' He answered, 'Then what will you do with life henceforth? Get up and die in the way that the apostle has died.' Then he went towards the enemy and fought until he was slain. Anas b. Malik was named after him.

Humayd al-Tawil told me from Anas, 'We found seventy cuts (Tabari: and thrusts) in Anas b. al-Nadr that day and no one recognised him except his sister, who knew him by the tips of his fingers (601).'

The first man to recognise the apostle after the rout when men were saying 'The apostle has been killed' was Kab b. Malik, according to what al-Zuhri told me. Kab said, I recognised his eyes gleaming from beneath his helmet, and I called out at the top of my voice

"Take heart, you Muslims, this is the apostle of God," but the apostle signed to me to be silent. When the Muslims recognised the apostle they took him up towards the glen (narrow and deep mountain valley).

He was accompanied by Abu Bakr, Umar, Ali, Talha, al-Zubayr, and al-Harith b. al-Simma and others. When the apostle climbed up the glen Ubayy b. Khalaf overtook him, saying, 'Where is Mohammed? Let me not escape if you escape.'

The people said 'Shall one of us go for him? The apostle said, 'Let him alone,' and when he came near he took a lance from al-Harith. (I have been told that some people say that when the apostle took it from him he shook himself free from us so that we flew off from him as stinging flies fly off a camel's back when it shakes itself (602).)

Then, turning to face him, he thrust him in the neck so that he swayed and fell from his horse (603). Now Ubayy, according to what Salih b. Ibrahim b. Abdul-Rahman b. Auf told me, when he used to meet the apostle in Mecca, would say, 'Mohammed, I have got a horse called Aud which I feed every day on many measures of corn. I shall kill you when I am riding it.'

The apostle answered, 'No, I shall kill you, if God wills Now when he returned to Quraysh he had a slight scratch on his neck, which did not even bleed. He said, 'By God! Mohammed has killed me. They answered, 'By God! You have lost heart. You are not hurt. He answered, 'He said to me in Mecca that he would kill me, and, by God, if he had spat on me he would have killed me.'

The enemy of God died in Sarif as they were taking him back to Mecca.

In reference to that Hassan b. Thabit said:

Ubayy showed the disbelief inherited from his father The day the apostle met him in battle.

You came to him carrying a mouldering bone And threatened him, ignorant of his office.

Banul-Najjar killed Umayya from among you When he called on Aqil for help.

Rabia's two sons perished when they obeyed Abu Jahl.

Their mother became childless.

Harith escaped when we were busy taking prisoners.

To capture him was not worth while (Reading asratuhu for usratuhu (so Dr. Arafat). (604).

Hassan b. Thabit also said:

Who will give a message from me to Ubayy? You have been cast into the nethermost hell;

Long have you pursued error,

Sworn vows that you would win.
 Long have you indulged in such hopes,
 But unbelief leads to disappointment.
 A thrust from an angry warrior found you
 One of a noble house, no miscreant.
 Who surpasses all other creatures
 When misfortunes befall.

When the apostle reached the mouth of the glen, Ali came out and filled his shield with water from al-Mihras (According to some commentators this is the name of a well at Uhud. The word itself can mean a stone trough beside a well.) and brought it to the apostle, who refused to drink it because its evil smell repelled him. However, he used the water to wash the blood from his face and as he poured it over his head he said: 'The wrath of God is fierce against him who blooded the face of His prophet.'

Salih b. Kaysan told me from an informant who got it from Sad b. Abu Waqqas that the latter used to say: I was never more eager to kill anyone than I was to kill Utba b. Abu Waqqas; he was, as I know, of evil character and hated among his people. It was enough for me (to hate him) that the apostle should say, "The wrath of God is fierce against him who blooded the face of His prophet".

While the apostle was in the glen with a number of his companions suddenly a troop of Quraysh came up the mountain (605). The apostle said, 'O God, it is not fitting that they should be above us,' so Umar and a number of emigrants (emigration is one of the most important Islamic strategies to get a foothold in other nations. These emigrants immediately try to implement Sharia Law, such as by demanding Halal food and special places and times for the 5 daily prayers, etc., undermining the target society's original structures and traditions first.) fought until they drove them down the mountain.

The apostle made for a rock on the mountain to climb it. He had become heavy by reason of his age, and moreover he had put on two coats of mail, so when he tried to get up he could not do so. Talha b. Ubaydullah squatted beneath him and lifted him up until he settled comfortably upon it.

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father from Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from al-Zubayr said: 'That day I heard the apostle saying "'Talha earned paradise when he did what he did for the apostle (606)."'

The army had fled away from the apostle until some of them went as far as al-Munaqqa near al-Awas (A place near Medina.). Asim b. Umar b. Qatada from Mahmud b. Labid told me that when the apostle went out to Uhud Husayl b. Jabir, who was al-Yaman Abu Hudhayfa b. al-Yaman, and Thabit b. Waqsh were sent up into the forts with the women and children. They were both old men and one said to the other, 'What are you waiting for, confound you? Neither of us will live much longer (Only as long as a donkey's drink.). We are certain to die today or tomorrow, so let us take our swords and join the apostle. Perhaps God will grant us martyrdom with him.' So they took their swords and sallied out until they mingled with the army. No one knew anything about them. Thabit was killed by the polytheists and Husayl by the swords of the Muslims, who killed him without recognising him. Hudhayfa said, 'It is my father.' They said, 'By God, we did not know him,' and they spoke the truth. Hudhayfa said, 'May God forgive you, for He is most compassionate.' The apostle wanted to pay his blood-money, but Hudhayfa gave it as alms to the Muslims and that increased his favour with the apostle.

Asim also told me that a man called Hatib b. Umayya b. Rafi, who had a son called Yazid, was grievously wounded at Uhud and was brought to his people's settlement at the point of death. His kinsmen gathered round and the men and women began to say to him, 'Good news of the garden (of paradise), O son of Hatib.' Now Hatib was an old man who had lived long in the heathen period and his hypocrisy appeared then, for he said, 'What good news do you give him? Of a garden of rue? (The dead were buried with 'herb of grace', rue, at their feet at this time. See Waqidi, B.M. MS. A. 20737, fol. 63a.) By God, you have robbed this man of his life by your deception (and brought great sorrow on me.' Tabari).

Asim told me: 'There was a man among us, a stranger of unknown origin called Quzman. The apostle used to say when he was mentioned, "He belongs to the people of hell." On the day of Uhud he fought fiercely and killed seven or eight polytheists single-handed, he being a stout warrior. He was disabled by wounds and carried to the quarter of B. Zafar. The Muslims began to say to him, "You have done gallantly, Quzman, be of good cheer!" "Why should I," he said, "I only fought for the honour of my people; but for thaj I should not have fought." And when the pain of his wounds became unbearable he took an arrow from his quiver, (T. cut the veins of his wrist, and bled to death. When the apostle was told of this he said "I testify that I am truly God's apostle").' [For the words in brackets Ibn Ishaq has merely And killed himself with it.]

Among those killed at Uhud was (Tabari: the Jew) Mukhayriq who was one of the B. Thalaba b. al-Fityun. On that day he addressed the Jews saying: 'You know that it is your duty to help Mohammed,' and when they replied that it was the Sabbath day, he said, 'You will have no Sabbath,' and taking his sword and accoutrements, he said that if he was slain his property was to go to Mohammed, who could deal with it as he liked. Then he joined the apostle and fought with him until he was killed. I have heard that the apostle said, 'Mukhayriq is the best of the Jews.'

Al-Harith b. Suwayd b. Samit was a hypocrite. He went out with the Muslims to Uhud, and when the armies met he attacked al-Mujadhdhar b. Dhiyad al-Balawl and Qays b. Zayd, one of the B. Dubaya, and killed them. Then he joined the Quraysh in Mecca. Now the apostle, as they say, had ordered Umar to kill him if he got the better of him, but he escaped him and was in Mecca. Then he sent to his brother al-Julas desiring forgiveness so that he might return to his people, and God sent down concerning him, as I have heard on the authority of Ibn Abbas: 'How can God guide a people who have disbelieved after their belief, and after that they have testified that the apostle is true and proofs have been given to them. God will not guide an evil people' (Koran 3.80.) to the end of the passage (607).

Muadh b. Afra had killed Suwayd b. al-Samit treacherously in some other battle. He shot him with an arrow and killed him before the day of Buath. (This is a repetition of what Ibn Ishaq said here before: Muadh killed Suwayd b. al-Simit before Islam. Here he has said that Suwayd's son killed al-Mujadhdhar and Qays treacherously at Uhud as he said before. In both sentences, Ibn Hisham agrees that Suwayd's son killed al-Mujadhdhar and denies that he killed Qays, giving as a proof the fact that Ibn Ishaq does not mention him among those slain at Uhud. He further asserts that al-Mujadhdhar had killed Suwayd before Islam. The emphatic way in which Ibn Ishaq states that Muadh killed him [object before subject] would seem to indicate that Ibn Ishaq knew of the rival story twice repeated by Ibn Hisham but stuck to his guns.)

Al-Husayn b. Abdul-Rahman b. Amr b. Sad b. Muadh from Abu Sufyan client of Ibn Abu Ahmad from Abu Hurayra said that he used to say: 'Tell me about a man who entered paradise never having prayed in his life,' and when the people did not know, they asked him who it was and he said, Usayrim of the B. Abdul-Ashhal, Amr b. Thabit b. Waqsh.' Al-Husayn asked Mahmud b. Asad what were the facts of Usayrim, and he replied that in spite of his people he had refused to accept Islam, but on the day that the apostle marched out to Uhud he accepted it. He took his sword, plunged into the heart of the battle, and fought until he was overcome by wounds. While the B. Abdul-Ashhal were looking for their dead in the battle suddenly they came upon him and marvelled that he should be there when they had left him showing his dislike for Islam. They asked him what had brought him, whether it was concern for his people or goodwill towards Islam. He replied that it was the latter. I believed in God and His apostle and became a Muslim. Then I took my sword and fought with the apostle until I met the fate you see.' Soon afterwards he died in their hands. When they mentioned him to the apostle he said, 'Verily, he belongs to the people of paradise.'

My father Ishaq from shaykhs of the B. Salama told me that Amr b. al-Jamuh was a man who was very lame. He had four lion-like sons who were present at the apostle's battles. On the day of Uhud they wanted to detain him, saying that God had excused him. He came to the apostle and told him that his sons wanted to keep him back and prevent his joining the army, 'Yet by God, I hope to tread the heavenly garden despite my lameness.' The apostle said, 'God has excused you, and Jihad is not incumbent on you;' and to his sons he said, 'You need not prevent him; perhaps God will favour him with martyrdom,' so he went along with him and was killed at Uhud.

According to what Salih b. Kaysan told me, Hind d. Utba and the women with her stopped to mutilate the apostle's dead companions. They cut off their ears and noses and Hind made them into anklets and collars and gave her anklets and collars and pendants to Wahshi, the slave of Jubayr b. Mutim. She cut out Hamza's liver and chewed it, but she was not able to swallow it and threw it away. (This seems to be a survival of prehistoric animism. By devouring an enemy's liver it was hoped to absorb his strength.) Then she mounted a high rock and shrieked at the top of her voice:

We have paid you back for Badr
 And a war that follows a war is always violent.
 I could not bear the loss of Utba
 Nor my brother and his uncle and my first-born.
 I have slaked my vengeance and fulfilled my vow.
 You, O Wahshi, have assuaged the burning in my breast.
 I shall thank Wahshi as long as I live
 Until my bones rot in the grave.

Hind d. Uthatha b. Abbad b. al-MuUalib answered her:

You were disgraced at Badr and after Badr,
 O daughter of a despicable man, great only in disbelief.

God brought on you in the early dawn
 Tall and white-skinned men from Hashim,
 Everyone slashing with his sharp sword:
 Hamza my lion and Ali my falcon.
 When Shayba and your father planned to attack me
 They reddened their breasts with blood.
 Your evil vow was the worst of vows (608).

Hind d. Utba also said:
 I slaked my vengeance on Hamza at Uhud.
 I split his belly to get at his liver.
 This took from me what I had felt
 Of burning sorrow and exceeding pain.
 War will hit you exceeding hard
 Coming upon you as lions advance.

Salih b. Kaysan told me that he was told that Umar said to Hassan, 'O Ibn al-FurayA (609), I wish you had heard what Hind said and seen her arrogance as she stood upon a rock uttering her taunts against us, reminding us of what she had done to Hamza.' Hassan replied, 'I was looking at the lance as it fell, while I was on the top of Fan"—meaning his fort—And I realized that it was not one of the weapons of the Arabs. It seemed to me as though it was directed at Hamza, but I was not sure. But recite me some of her verse: I will rid you of her.' So Umar quoted some of what she said and Hassan said:

The vile woman was insolent: her habits were vile; Seeing that disbelief accompanied her insolence (610).

Al-Hulays b. Zabban, brother of the B. al-Harith b. Abdu Manat, who was then chief of the black troops, passed by Abu Sufyan as he was striking the side of Hamza's mouth with the point of his spear saying, 'Taste that, you rebel.' Hulays exclaimed, 'O B. Kinana, is this the chief of Quraysh acting thus with his dead cousin as you see?' He said, 'Confound you. Keep the matter quiet, for it was a slip.'

When Abu Sufyan wanted to leave he went to the top of the mountain and shouted loudly saying, 'You have done a fine work; victory in war goes by turns. Today in exchange for the day (of Badr). Show your superiority, Hubal,' i.e. vindicate your religion. The apostle told Umar to get up and answer him and say, 'God is most high and most glorious. We are not equal. Our dead are in paradise; your dead in hell.' At this answer Abu Sufyan said to Umar, 'Come here to me.' The apostle told him to go and see what he was up to. When he came Abu Sufyan said, 'I adjure thee by God, Umar, have we killed Mohammed?' 'By God, you have not, he is listening to what you are saying now,' he replied. He said, 'I regard you as more truthful and reliable than Ibn QamiA,' referring to the latter's claim that he had killed Mohammed (611).

Then Abu Sufyan called out, 'There are some mutilated bodies among your dead. By God, it gives me no satisfaction, and no anger. I neither prohibited nor ordered mutilation.' When Abu Sufyan and his companions went away he called out, 'Your meeting-place is Badr next year.' The apostle told one of his companions to say, 'Ycs, it is an appointment between us.'

Then the apostle sent Ali to follow the army and see what they were doing and what their intentions were. If they were leading their horses and riding their camels they would be making for Mecca; but if they were riding the horses and driving the camels they would be making for Medina. 'By God,' said he, 'If they make for Medina I will go to them there. Then I will fight them.' Ali said that he followed their tracks and saw what they were doing. They were leading their horses, riding their camels and going towards Mecca. (Tabari 1419: The apostle had said 'Whatever they do, keep silent about it until you come to me.' When I saw they had set out for Mecca I came back shouting. I could not hide the fact as the apostle had ordered me because of my joy at seeing them going to Mecca and thus avoiding Medina.)

The people searched for their dead, and the apostle said, according to what Mohammed b. Abdul-Rahman b. Abu Sasaa al-Mazini, brother of the B. al-Najjar told me, 'Who will find out for me what has happened to Sad b. al-Rabi? Is he alive or among the dead?' One of the Ansar volunteered and found him lying wounded among the slain, at the point of death. He told him that the apostle had ordered him to see if he was alive or among the dead. He said, 'I am among the dead. Convey my greetings to the apostle and say: "Sad says to you 'May God reward you by us better than he has rewarded any prophet by his people,'" and give your people a greeting from me and say "You have no excuse with God if anything has happened to your prophet while you can flutter an eyelid",' and straightway he died. He said: 'I came to the apostle and delivered his message' (612).

I have been told that the apostle went out seeking Hamza and found him at the bottom of the valley with his belly ripped up and his liver missing, and his nose and ears cut off". Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr told me that when he saw this the apostle said: 'Were it not that Safiya would be miserable and it might become a custom after me (This badith, if it is trustworthy, indicates that the prophet was aware that his every act would form a precedent for future generations. However, it is possible that the last few words in the Arabic text have been added.), I would leave him as he is, so that his body might find its way into the bellies of beasts and the crops of birds. If God gives me victory over Quraysh in the future I will mutilate 30 of their men.' When the Muslims saw the apostle's grief and anger against those who had thus treated his uncle, they said, 'By God, if God gives us victory over them in the future we will mutilate them as no Arab has ever mutilated anyone' (613).

Burayda b. Sufyan b. Farwa al-Aslami from Mohammed b. Kab al-Qurazi, and a man I have no reason to suspect from Ibn Abbas told me that God sent down concerning the words of the apostle and his companions 'If you punish, then punish as you have been punished. If you endure patiently that is better for the patient. Endure thou patiently. Thy endurance is only in God. Grieve not for them, and be not in distress at what they plot (Koran 16.127).' So the apostle pardoned them and was patient and forbade mutilation. Humayd al-Tawil from al-Hasan from Samura b. Jundub told me: 'The apostle never stopped in a place and left it without enjoining on us almsgiving and forbidding mutilation.'

One whom I do not suspect from Miqdam, a client of Abdullah b. al-Harith from Ibn Abbas, told me that the apostle ordered that Hamza should be wrapped in a mantle; then he prayed over him and said Allah Akbar seven times. Then the dead were brought and placed beside Hamza and he prayed over them all until he had prayed seventy-two prayers.

According to what I have been told Safiya d. Abdul-Muttalib came forward to look at him. He was her full-brother and the apostle said to her son, al-Zubayr b. al-Awwam, 'Go to meet her and take her back so that she does not see what has happened to her brother.' He said to her, 'Mother, the apostle orders you to go back.' She said, 'Why? I have heard that my brother has been mutilated and that for God's sake [Tabari: is a small thing]. He has fully reconciled us to what has happened. I will be calm and patient if God will.' When Zubayr returned to the prophet and reported this to him he told him to leave her alone; so she came and looked at Hamza and prayed over him and said, 'We belong to God and to God do we return,' and she asked God's forgiveness for him. Then the apostle ordered that he should be buried. The family of Abdullah b. Jahsh, who was the son of Umayma d. Abdul-Muttalib, Hamza being his maternal uncle, and he having been mutilated in the same way as Hamza except that his liver had not been taken out, asserted that the apostle buried him in the same grave with Hamza; but I heard that story only from his family.

Now some Muslims had carried their dead to Medina and buried them there. The apostle forbade this and told them to bury them where they lay. Mohammed b. Muslim al-Zuhri from Abdullah b. Thalaba b. Suayr al-Udhri, an ally of the B. Zuhra, told me that the apostle said when he looked down on the slain at thud: 'I testify concerning these that there is none wounded for God's sake but God will raise him on the resurrection day with his wounds bleeding, the colour that of blood, the smell like musk; look for the one who has collected (learned)' most of the Koran and put him in front of his companions in the grave.' They were burying two and three in one grave.

My uncle Musa b. Yasar told me that he heard Abu Hurayra say: 'Abul Qasim (i.e.: Mohammed.) said, 'There is none wounded for God's sake but God will raise him on the resurrection day with his wounds bleeding, the colour that of blood, the smell like musk.'

My father Ishaq b. Yasar told me on the authority of shaykhs of the B. Salama that when the apostle ordered the dead to be buried he said, 'Look out for Amr b. al-Jamuh and Abdullah b. Amr b. Haram; they were close friends in this world, so put them in one grave.' (Tabari: When Muawiya dug the canal and they were exhumed they were as free from rigor mortis as though buried but yesterday.) Then the apostle went back on his way to Medina and there met him Hamna d. Jahsh, so I have been told. As she met the army she was told of the death of her brother Abdullah and she exclaimed, 'We belong to God and to God we return,' and asked forgiveness for him. Then she was told of the death of her maternal uncle Hamza, and uttered the same words. Then she was told of the death of her husband Musab b. Umayr and she shrieked and wailed. The apostle said: 'The woman's husband holds a special place with her, as you can see from her self-control at the death of her brother and uncle and her shrieking over her husband.'

The apostle passed by one of the settlements of the Ansar of the B. Abdul-Ashhal and Zafar and he heard the sound of weeping and wailing over the dead. The apostle's eyes filled with tears and he wept and said, 'But there are no weeping women for Hamza.' When Sad b. Muadh and Usayd b. Hudayr came back to the quarter, they ordered their women to gird themselves and go and weep for the apostle's uncle.

Hakim b. Hakim b. Abbad b. Hunayf from a man of the B. Abdul-Ashhal told me: 'When the apostle heard their weeping over Hamza at the door of his mosque he said "Go home; may God have mercy on you; you have been a real help by your presence"' (614).

Abdul-Wahid b. Abu Aun from Ismail b. Mohammed from Sad b. Abu Waqqas told me that the apostle passed by a woman of the B. Dinar whose husband, brother, and father had been killed at Uhud, and when she was told of their death she asked what had happened to the apostle, and when they replied that thanks to God he was safe, she asked that she might see him for herself. When he was pointed out to her she said, 'Every misfortune now that you are safe is negligible' (using the word jalal in the sense of 'small') (615).

When the apostle rejoined his family he handed his sword to his daughter Fatima, saying, 'Wash the blood from this, daughter, for by God it has served me well today.' Ali also handed her his sword and said, 'This one too, wash the blood from it, for by God it has served me well today.' The apostle said, 'If you have fought well, Sahl b. Hunayf and Abu Dujana fought well with you' (616).

The battle was fought on the sabbath in mid-Shawwal; and on the morning of Sunday the 16th of the month the apostle's crier called to the men to go in pursuit of the enemy and announced that none should go out with us unless he had been present at the battle on the preceding day. Jabir b. Abdullah b. Amr b. Haram said, 'O apostle of God, my father left me behind to look after my seven sisters, saying that it was not right for us both to leave the women without a man and that he was not one to give me the precedence in fighting with the apostle. So I stayed behind to look after them.' The apostle gave him permission to go and he went out with him. The apostle merely marched out as a demonstration against the enemy to let them know that he was pursuing them so that they might think he was in strength, and that their losses had not weakened them.

Abdullah b. Kharija b. Zayd b. Thabit from Abul-Saib, a freed slave of Aisha d. Uthman, told me that one of the apostle's companions from the B. Abdul-Ashhal who had been present at Uhud said, 'I and one of my brothers were present at Uhud and we came back wounded. When the apostle's crier announced that we must pursue the enemy, I said to my brother or he said to me, 'Are we going to stay away from an expedition with the apostle? We have no beast to ride and are severely wounded.' However, we marched out with the apostle and since my wound was less severe, when he was enfeebled I put him on the beast for a time and we walked and rode turn and turn about until we came up to where the Muslims had halted.'

The apostle went as far as Hamraul-Asad, about eight miles from Medina (617). He stayed the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and then returned to Medina.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that Mabad b. Abu Mabad al-Khuzai passed by him. The Khuzaa, both their Muslims and polytheists, were confidants of the apostle in Tihama, they having agreed that they would not conceal from him anything that happened there. Now at this time Mabad was a polytheist and he said, 'Mohammed, we are distressed at what has happened to you [Tabari: with your companions] and we wish that God would preserve you among them.' Then he went out while the apostle was in Hamraul-Asad until he met Abu Sufyan and his men in al-Rauha when they had determined to come back to the apostle and his companions. They said, 'We have killed the best of his companions, their leaders and their nobles. Shall we then go back before we have exterminated them? Let us return to the survivors and make an end of them.' When Abu Sufyan saw Ma'bad he said, 'What is the news?' He replied, 'Mohammed has come out with his companions to pursue you with an army whose like I have never seen, burning with anger against you. Those who stayed behind when you fought them have joined him; they are sorry for what they did and are violently enraged against you. Never have I seen anything like it.' He said, 'Confound you, what are you saying?' He answered, 'By God, I do not think that you will move off before you see the forelocks of the cavalry.' He replied, 'But we have determined to attack them to exterminate their survivors.' He answered, 'But I would advise against that. What I saw induced me to utter some verses about them.' When he asked what they were, he recited:

My mount almost fell with fright at the clamour
When the ground flowed with troops of horse
Hastening with noble lion-like warriors [Tabari 1429:] Eager for the fray; firm in the saddle* fully armed.

(* Mil is the plural of amyal 'not fully armed'. It also means Unsteady in the saddle', a meaning supported by Tabari's khurq. However, the first is a cliché among the poets and is a synonym of ma azil, the word that follows it.)

I continued to run, thinking the very earth was moving.

When they came up with the prince who never lacks support

I said, Alas for Ibn Harb when he meets you
When the plain is surging with men.
I warn the people of the sanctuary plainly Ever) prudent and sensible man among them
Of Ahmad's army—no poltroons his riders
And the warning I give is true.

These words turned back Abu Sufyan and his followers.

Some riders from Abdul-Qays passed him and he learned that they were going to Medina for provisions. He said, 'Will you take a message to Mohammed for me? And I will load these camels of yours tomorrow with raisins in Ukaz, when you arrive there.' They agreed, and he said, 'Then when you come to him tell him that we have resolved to come to him and his companions to exterminate them.' The riders passed by the apostle when he was in Hamraul-Asad and told him of what Abu Sufyan had said and he exclaimed, 'God is our sufficiency, the best in whom to trust (618).' Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri told me that when the apostle came to Medina Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul who had a place which he used to occupy every Friday without opposition out of respect for him personally and his people, he being a chief, got up when the apostle sat on the Friday addressing the people and would say, 'O people, this is God's apostle among you. God has honoured and exalted you by him, so help him and strengthen him; listen to his commands and obey them.' Then he used to sit down until when he acted as he did on the day of Uhud and came back with his men, he got up to do as he was wont and the Muslims took hold of his garments and said, 'Sit down, you enemy of God. You are not worthy of that, having behaved as you did.' So he went out stepping over the necks of the men and saying, 'One would think I had said something dreadful in getting up to strengthen his case.' One of the Ansar met him at the door of the mosque and asked him what was the matter. He said, I got up to strengthen his case when some of his companions leapt upon me and dragged me along with violence. One would think that I had said something dreadful.' He answered, 'Go back and let the apostle ask forgiveness for you.' He said, 'By God, I do not want him to.'

The day of Uhud was a day of trial, calamity, and heart-searching on which God tested the believers and put the hypocrites on trial, those who professed faith with their tongue and hid unbelief in their hearts; and a day in which God honoured with martyrdom those whom he killed.

PASSAGES IN THE KORAN WHICH DEAL WITH UHUD

Abu Mohammed Abdul-Malik b. Hisham told us from Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai from Mohammed b. Ishaq al-Muttalibi: There are sixty verses in 'The Family of Imran' (Koran 3.117 f.) which God sent down concerning the day of Uhud in which there is a description of what happened on that day and the blame of those who merited His rebuke.

God said to His prophet: And when you went forth early from your family you assigned to the believers positions for the fighting, God hearing (and) knowing' (619). 'Hearing' what you said; 'knowing' about what you were concealing.

'When two parties of you thought they would fail,' i.e. of deserting; and the two parties were the B. Salima b. Jusham b. al-Khazraj and the B. Haritha b. al-Nabit of al-Aus, they being the two wings.

God said: And God was their friend,' i.e. God protected them from the cowardice they meditated because it was only the result of weakness and feebleness which overcame them, not doubt in their religion, so He thrust that from them in His mercy and pardon so that they were saved from their weakness and feebleness and stuck to their prophet (620).

God said: Upon God let the believers rely,' i.e. the believer who is weak let him rely on Me and ask My help. I will help him in his affair and protect him until I bring him to his appointed time of life and ward off evil from him and strengthen him in his purpose.

'God helped you at Badr when you were contemptible, so fear God that you may be thankful,' i.e. fear Me, for that is gratitude for My kindness.

'God helped you at Badr' when your numbers and strength were inferior 'when thou didst say to the believers: "Is it not enough for you that your Lord reinforced you with three thousand angels sent down? Nay, if you are steadfast and fear God and they come on you suddenly your Lord will reinforce you with five thousand angels clearly marked,"' i.e. if you are steadfast against My enemy and obey My command and they come on you recklessly I will reinforce you with five thousand angels clearly marked (621).

'God did this only as good news for you that your hearts might be at rest therein. Victory comes only from God, the Mighty the Wise,' i.e. I mentioned the armies of My angels only as good news for you and that your hearts might be at rest therein, because I know your weakness and victor) comes only from Me because of My sovereignty and power for the reason that power and authority belong to Me, not to any one of my creatures.

Then He said: 'that He may cut off a part of those who disbelieve or overturn them so that they retire disappointed,' i.e. to cut off a part of the polytheists in a fight in which He will take vengeance on them or drive them back in chagrin, i.e. that those who survive may retreat as frustrated fugitives having achieved nothing that they hoped to attain (622).

Then He said to Mohammed the apostle of God: It is not your affair whether He changes His attitude to them or punishes them, for they are evil doers,' i.e. you have no concern with My judgement of My slaves except in so far as I give you orders concerning them or I change towards them in my mercy, for if I wish I shall do so; or I shall punish them for their sins for that is my prerogative; 'for they are evil-doers,' i.e. they have deserved that for their disobedience to Me. And God is forgiving, merciful,' i.e. He forgives sins and has mercy on His slaves according to (Or In spite of.) what is in them.

Then He said: 'O ye who believe, Take not (Lit. 'devour not') usury, doubling and quadrupling,' i.e. Do not devour in Islam, to which God has now guided you, what you used to devour when you followed another religion; such is not permitted to you in your religion. And fear God, haply you may be prosperous', i.e. So obey God, perhaps you may escape from His punishment of which He has warned you, and attain His reward which He has made you desire. And fear the fire which is prepared for the disbelievers,' i.e. which has been made a dwelling for those who disbelieve in Me.

Then He said: And obey God and the apostle, haply you will attain mercy' reproaching those who disobeyed the apostle in the orders he gave them that day and at other times. Then He said: And vie with one another for forgiveness from your Lord and a garden as wide as the heavens and the earth prepared for those who fear (God),' i.e. a dwelling for those who obey Me and obey My apostle. 'Those who spend (their money) in ease and adversity and who control their wrath and are forgiving to men, for God loves those who do well,' i.e. that is well doing and I love those who act thus. And those who when they act unseemly or wrong themselves, remember God and ask forgiveness for their sins—and who forgives sins but God?—and have not persisted in their actions knowingly,' i.e. if they have acted unseemly or wronged themselves by disobedience, they remember God's prohibition and what He has declared evil, and ask forgiveness, knowing that none can forgive sins but He. And have not persisted in their actions knowingly,' i.e. have not continued to disobey Me like those who associate others with Me in the extravagance of their disbelief while they know that I have prohibited the worship of any but Myself. 'The reward of such is forgiveness from their Lord and gardens beneath which run rivers, in which they will abide for ever—a fine reward for workers,' i.e. the reward of the obedient.

Then He mentioned the catastrophe which befell them and the misfortune which came upon them and the trial (of the faith) that was in them and His choice of martyrs from among them, and He said comforting them and telling them of what they had done and what He was about to do with them: 'Examples have been made before your time, so go through the land and see the nature of the punishment of those who called (apostles) liars,' i.e. vengeance came from me upon those who gave the lie to My apostles and associated others with Me (such as) Ad and Thamud and the people of Lot and the men of Midian and they saw what I did to them and to those in like case with them, for T was forbearing to them purely for the reason that they should not think that My vengeance was cut off from your enemy and mine in the time in which I let them get the better of you to test you thereby to show you your true selves.

Then He said: 'This is a plain statement to men and guidance and admonition to those that fear God,' i.e. this is an explanation to men if they receive guidance ;

And guidance and admonition,' i.e. a light and discipline 'to those who fear,' i.e. to those who obey Me and know My commandment; And do not wax faint or be sad,' i.e. do not become weak and despair at what has befallen you 'you being the superiors,' i.e. you will have the victory If you believe,' i.e. if you had believed in what My prophet brought from Me. If you have received a shock the (Meccan) army received a shock likewise,' i.e. wounds like yours. 'These are days which We alternate among men,' i.e. we change them among men for trial and search; And that God may know those who believe and may choose martyrs from among you, and God loves not wrongdoers,' i.e. to distinguish between believers and hypocrites and to honour some of the faithful with martyrdom. And God loves not wrongdoers,' i.e. the hypocrites who profess obedience with their tongues while their hearts are firm in disobedience; And that God may try those who believe,' i.e. put to the test those who believe, so that He may purify them by the misfortune which came upon them, and their constancy and certainty; And confound the disbelievers,' i.e. bring to naught what the hypocrites say with their tongues that is not in their hearts until He brings to light their disbelief which they are concealing.

Then He said: 'Or do you think that you will enter the garden when God does not yet know those of you who are energetic and steadfast?' i.e. Do you think that you will enter the garden and receive the honour of My reward when I have not tested you with hardship and tried you with misfortune so that I may know your loyalty by faith in Me and steadfastness in what has befallen you through Me? And you used to wish' for martyrdom when you were in the way of truth before you met your enemy. He means those who urged the apostle to take them out against their enemy because they had not been present at the battle of Badr before that and longing for the martyrdom which they had escaped there. He said: And you used to wish for death before you met it.' He says: 'Now you have seen it with your eyes!' i.e. death by swords in the hands of men with nothing between you and them while you looked on. Then He kept them back from you. And Mohammed is nothing but an apostle; apostles have passed away before him. Will it be that if he dies or is killed you will turn back on your heels? He who so turns back will not harm God at all, and God will reward the thankful' in reference to the men saying 'Mohammed has been killed' and their flight thereat and breaking away from their enemy. 'Will it be if he dies or is killed' you will go back from your religion disbelievers as you once were and abandon the fight with your enemy, and God's book, and what His prophet will have left behind of his religion with you and in your possession when he has explained to you what he brought from Me to you that he would die and leave you? And he who so turns back,' i.e. turns back from his religion 'will not harm God at all,' i.e. he will not diminish His glory and kingdom and sovereignty and power. And God will reward the thankful,' i.e. those who obey Him and do what He has commanded.

And no soul can die but by God's permission in a term that is written,' i.e. Mohammed has a fixed time which he will attain and when God gives permission in regard to that it will happen. And he who desires the reward of this world We will give him it; and he who desires the reward of the next world We will give him it and We shall reward the thankful,' i.e. he of you who desires this world having no desire for the next We will give him his allotted portion of sustenance and nothing more and he has no share in the next world ; and he who desires the reward of the next world We will give him what he has been promised together with his reward of sustenance in this world. That is the reward of the thankful, i.e. the pious.

Then He said: And with how many a prophet have myriads been slain and they waxed not faint at what befell them in the way of God and were not weak nor humiliated for God loves the steadfast,' i.e. how many a prophet has death (in battle) befallen and many myriads with him, i.e. a multitude, and they waxed not faint at the loss of their prophet nor showed weakness towards their enemies and were not humiliated when they suffered in the fight for God and their religion. That is steadfastness and God loves the steadfast. All that they said was, Forgive us our sins, O Lord, and our wasted effort in our affair; make our feet firm and give us the victory over a disbelieving people' (623), i.e. say what they said and know that that is for your sins, and ask His forgiveness as they did, and practise your religion as they did, and be no renegades turning back on your heels; and ask Him to make your feet firm as they did; and ask His help as they did against a disbelieving people. For all that they said actually happened and their prophet was killed, yet they did not do what you did. So God gave them the reward of this world by victory over their enemy and a fine reward in the hereafter with what He had promised therein, for God loves those who do well.

'O you who believe, if you obey those who disbelieve they will turn you back on your heels and you will return as losers,' i.e. from your enemy, and will lose this world and the next. 'But God is your protector and He is the best of helpers.' If what you say with your tongues is true in your hearts then hold fast to Him and ask victory only of Him and do not turn back, withdrawing from His religion. 'We will cast terror into the hearts of those who disbelieve,' i.e. that by which I was helping you against them because they associated with Me that for which I gave them no warrant; i.e. do not think that they will have the final victory over you, while you hold fast to Me and follow My commandment, because of the disaster which befell you through sins which you committed whereby you went against My commandment in disobedience and also disobeyed the prophet. 'God fulfilled His promise when you routed them by His leave until you failed and disagreed about the order and were disobedient after He had shown you what you were desiring. Some of you desired this world and some desired the hereafter. Then He made you flee from them that He might try you. Yet He forgave you, for God is full of kindness to the believers,' i.e. I carried out My promise to give you victory over your enemy when you routed them with the sword, i.e. killing them by My permission and My giving you power over them and keeping them from you (624). Until you failed,' i.e. deserted and disagreed about the order; i.e. you disputed about My order, i.e. you abandoned the order of your prophet and what he had told you to do, meaning the archers. After He had shown you what you were desiring,' i.e. victory about which there was no doubt and the flight of the (Meccan) army from their wives and property. 'Some of you desired this world,' i.e. those who desired the spoil in this world and abandoned their orders which carried the reward of the hereafter; And some of you desired the hereafter,' i.e. those who fought for God's sake and did not transgress in going after what they had been forbidden for an accident (A transitory and adventitious advantage.) of this world out of desire for it, hoping for the fine reward that is with God hereafter; i.e. those who fought for religion and did not transgress in going after what they had been forbidden for an accident¹ of this world. 'To try you' for some of your sins. God pardoned the great sin in that He did not destroy you for having disobeyed your prophet. But I restored My kindness to you. And thus God favours the believers.' He punished some sins at once in this world by way of discipline and admonition, but He did not exterminate all for the debt they owed Him because they suffered for disobeying Him, out of mercy to them and as a reward for such faith as they had.

Then He reproached them for running away from their prophet and paying no heed when he called to them: 'When you climbed up and paid no heed to any one while the apostle was calling behind you, He rewarded you with grief for grief, that you might not be sad for what you missed and for what befell you,' i.e. grief after grief by the killing of some of your brethren and your enemy getting the better of you, and what you felt when someone said your prophet had been killed. That was what brought grief for grief to you so that you might not be sad over the victory you had missed after you had seen him with your own eyes, nor over the death of your brethren until I gave you ease of that sorrow. And God is informed of what you do.' God comforted them from the sorrow and grief which they suffered in rebutting the lie of Satan that their prophet had been killed; and when they saw the apostle alive among them what they had missed from the Meccans after the victory over them and their disaster in the loss of their brethren became easy to bear when God had turned death aside from their prophet.

'Then after grief He sent down safety for you, as a sleep. It came upon a party of you while another party were troubled in mind thinking wrongly about God thoughts of heathen days, saying, Have we anything to do with the matter? (Or 'order'.) Say, the whole matter belongs to God. They hide in themselves what they do not reveal to thee. They say, If we had had anything to do with the matter we should not have been killed here. Say: Had you been in your houses, those whose slaying has been written would have gone forth to the places where they were to lie. (This has happened) that God might test what is in your breasts and prove what is in your hearts, for God knows about what is in the breasts.' God sent down sleep in security upon the people who were confident in Him and they slept unafraid ; while the hypocrites whose thoughts troubled them, thinking wrongly about God thoughts of heathen days, were afraid of death because they had no hope in the final result. God mentioned their recriminations and sorrow at what befell them. Then He said to His prophet, 'Say "Had you been in your houses,"' you would not have been in this place in which God has made plain your secret thoughts 'those whose slaying has been written would have gone forth to the places where they were to lie' to some other place where they would have been slain so that He might test what was in their breasts And prove what was in their hearts, for God knows what is in the breasts,' i.e. what is in their breasts which they try to conceal from you is not hidden from Him.

Then He said: 'O you who believe, be not like those who disbelieved and said of their brethren who journeyed through the land or were raiding "Had they been with us, they would not have died or been killed that God may make that sorrow in their hearts. God gives life and causes death and God is a seer of what you do,"' i.e. be not like the hypocrites who forbid their brethren to war for God's sake and to travel through the land in obedience to God and His apostle and say when they die or are killed, 'Had they obeyed us, they would not have died or been killed.' 'That God may make that sorrow in their heart' because of their lack of certainty in their Lord. 'God gives life and causes death,' i.e. their earthly stay is shortened or prolonged by His power as He wishes. Then God said: If you are slain for God's sake or die, pardon from God and mercy are better than what you amass,' i.e. there is no escape from death, so death for God's sake or death in battle is better even if they had known and been certain of what they would amass from the world for which they hold back from fighting in fear of death and battle because of what they have amassed from the splendour of this world, not desiring the hereafter. If you die or are slain,' whichever it may be, 'surely to God will you be gathered,' i.e. to God you must return. Let not the world deceive you and be not deceived by it. Let fighting and the reward which God holds out to you have more weight with you than that.

Then He said: It was by the mercy of God that thou wast lenient to them. Hadst thou been stern and rough, they would have dispersed and been no longer round thee,' i.e. they would have left you. 'So forgive them,' i.e. overlook their offence, And ask pardon for them and consult them about the matter. When thou art resolved put thy trust in God, for God loves those who trust.' He reminded His prophet of his leniency to them, and his patience with them in their weakness and their lack of patience had he treated them harshly for all their opposition when there was laid upon them the duty of obeying their prophet. Then He said: 'So forgive them,' i.e. overlook their offence And ask pardon' for their sins: the people of faith who did wrong. And consult them about the matter' to show them that you listen to them and ask their help, even if you are independent of them, thereby making their religion agreeable to them. And when thou art resolved' on a matter which has come from Me and a matter of religion concerning fighting your enemy when only that will bring you and them advantage, then do as you have been ordered despite the opposition of those who oppose you and in agreement with those who agree with you. And trust in God,' i.e. please Him rather than men. 'God loves them that trust. If God helps you none can overcome you; if He forsakes you, who thereafter can help you?' i.e. so that you do not leave My command for men, and forsake men's orders for Mine. On God, not on men, let believers trust.

Then He said: It is not for any prophet to deceive. Whoso deceives will bring his deceit with him on the day of resurrection. Then every soul will be paid in full what it has earned and they will not be wronged.' It is not for a prophet to conceal from men what he has been ordered to reveal either out of fear or desire to please them. Whoso does that will bring it with him on the day of resurrection; then he will be repaid what he has earned not wronged nor defrauded. Is one who follows the pleasure of God' whether men like it or not 'like one who has incurred God's displeasure?' by pleasing or displeasing men. He says, Is one who obeys Me whose reward is the garden and the goodwill of God like one who has incurred God's anger and deserves His anger, whose home is hell and a miserable end? Are the two examples the same? So know 'There are degrees with God and God is a seer of what they do' of all the degrees of what they do in paradise and hell, i.e. God knows those who obey and those who disobey Him.

Then He said: 'God showed favour to the believers when He sent among them an apostle from among themselves who recited to them His verses and purified them and taught them the book and wisdom, though before they were in ob jus error.' God favoured you, O people of the faith, when He sent among you an apostle of your own, reciting to you His verses concerning what you did, and teaching you good and evil that you might know the good and do it; and the evil and guard yourselves against it, and telling you of His pleasure with you when you obeyed Him; that you might gain much from obeying Him and avoid the wrath proceeding from disobedience that thereby you might escape His vengeance and obtain the reward of His garden. 'Though before you were in obvious error,' i.e. in the blindness of paganism not knowing what was good nor asking pardon for evil—deaf to good, dumb to the right, blind to guidance.

Then He mentioned the catastrophe that befell them: And was it so when a catastrophe befell you though you had smitten (them) with a disaster mice as great you said: How is this? Say: It is from yourselves. God is able to do all things.' Though a catastrophe befell you in the death of your brethren because of your sins, before that you had smitten your enemy with double that on the day of Badr in slaying and taking prisoners; and you have forgotten your disobedience and your opposition to what your prophet commanded you. You have brought that on yourselves. 'God is able to do all things.' God is able to do what He wills with His servants in taking vengeance or pardoning. And what befell you on the day the two armies met was by God's permission and that He might know the believers.' What befell you when you and your enemy met was by My permission. That happened when you acted as you did after My help had come to you and I had fulfilled my promise to you to distinguish between believers and hypocrites and to know those who were hypocrites among you, i.e. to make plain what was in them. And it was said to them, Come, fight for God's sake or defend,' meaning Abdullah b. Ubayy and his companions who went back from the apostle when he went against his polytheistic enemies at Uhud and their words: If we knew that you were going to fight we would go with you and would defend you ; but we do not think that there will be a fight.' So he showed what they were hiding within them.

God said: 'They were nearer to disbelief than to faith that day saying with their mouths what was not in their hearts,' i.e. showing you faith which was not in their hearts 'but God knows best about what they conceal,' i.e. what they hide, 'who said of their brethren' who belonged to their families and people who were killed in your company, 'Had they obeyed us they would not have been killed. Say: Then avert death from yourselves if you are truthful,' i.e. there is no escape from death, but if you are able to keep death away from you then do so. This was because they were hypocritical and left fighting for God's sake, eager to survive in this world and fleeing from death.

Then He said to His prophet to make the believers wish to fight and desire battle: And do not think that those who were killed for God's sake are dead, nay they are alive with their Lord being nourished, glad with the bounty that God has brought them and rejoicing in those who have not yet joined them that they have nothing to fear or grieve over,' i.e. Do not think that those who were killed for God's sake are dead, i.e. I have brought them to life again and they are with Me being nourished in the rest and bounty of the Garden, rejoicing in the bounty that God has brought them for their striving on His account, and happy about those who have not yet joined them, i.e. glad when those of their brethren join them on account of their effort in war that they will share with them in the reward that God has given them, God having removed from them fear and sorrow.

God says: 'Rejoicing in the favour and bounty of God and that God does not waste the wages of the believers' because they have seen the fulfilment of the promise and the great reward.

Ismail b. Umayya told me from Abu'l-Zubayr from Ibn Abbas: The apostle said when your brethren were slain at Uhud, 'God has put their spirits in the crops of green birds which come down to the rivers of the Garden; they eat of its fruits and come home to where there are golden candlesticks in the shadow of the throne; and when they experience the goodly drink and food and their beautiful resting-place they say: Would that our brethren knew what God has done with us that they might not dislike fighting and shrink from war!' And God says I will tell them of you' so He sent down to His apostle these verses And do not think,' etc.

Al-Harith b. al-Fudayl told me from Mahmud b. Labid al-Ansari from Ibn Abbas: The martyrs are at Bariq, a river at the gate of the Garden, in a green tent, their provision from the Garden coming out to them morning and evening.

One whom I do not suspect told me from Abdullah b. Masud that he was asked about these verses 'Do not think', &c, and he said, We asked about them and we were told that when your brethren were slain at Uhud God put their spirits in the crops of green birds which come down to the rivers of the Garden and eat of its fruits and come home to where there are golden candlesticks in the shade of the throne and God takes one look at them and says, 'O My servants, What do you wish that I should give you more?' And they say,

'O our Lord, there is nothing beyond the Garden which Thou hast given us from which we eat when we please.' After the question has been put three times they say the same, adding, 'except that we should like our spirits to return to our bodies and then return to the earth and fight for Thee until we are killed again.'

One of our companions told me from Abdullah b. Mohammed b. Aqil from Jabir b. Abdullah: The apostle said to me, I will give you good news, Jabir. God has restored to life your father who was killed at Uhud.'

Then He asked him what he would like Him to do for him and he said that he would like to return to the world and fight for Him and be killed a second time. Amr b. Ubayd told me from al-Hasan that the apostle swore that there was no believer who had parted from the world and wanted to return to it for a single hour even if he could possess it with all it has except the martyr who would like to return and fight for God and be killed a second time.

Then God said, 'Those who responded to God and His apostle after harm had befallen them,' i.e. wounds. They are the believers who went with the apostle on the morrow of Uhud to Hamraul-Asad in spite of the pain of their wounds, 'for those of them who do well and are pious there is a great reward; those to whom men said: The men (of Mecca) have gathered against you so fear them, and that but increased their faith and they said, Allah is sufficient for us and a fine one in whom to trust.' The men who said that were a number of Abdul-Qays to whom Abu Sufyan spoke. They said: Abu Sufyan and his company are certainly coming back to you.' God says, 'So they returned with God's grace and favour. Harm did not befall them and they followed God's pleasure and God is of great bounty' in that He turned away their enemy so that they did not meet him. It is only the devil,' i.e. those men and what Satan put into their mouths, 'who would make men fear his adherents,' i.e. frighten you by means of his adherents. 'But fear them not and fear Me if you are believers. Let not those who vie in running to disbelief grieve you,' i.e. the hypocrites, 'they can in no wise injure God. God wills not to assign them a portion in the next world where they will have a painful punishment. Those who buy infidelity with faith will in no wise injure God: they will have a painful punishment. Let not those who disbelieve think that the respite We give them is good for them. We give them a respite only that they may increase in trespass. Theirs is an ignominious punishment. It is not God's purpose to leave the believers as you are till He shall separate the evil from the good,' i.e. the hypocrites. And it is not God's purpose to let you know the unseen,' i.e. what He wills to try you with that you may take heed of what comes to you. 'But God chooses whom He will of His messengers,' i.e. He lets him know that 'So believe in God and His messengers and if you believe and are pious,' i.e. return and repent 'then you will have a great reward.'

POETRY ON THE BATTLE OF UHUD

The following wrote verses on the subject: Hubayra b. Abu Wahb b. Amr b. Aidh b. Abd b. Imran b. Makhzum (640):

Why does this painful anxiety afflict me at night?
My love for Hind beset by cares. (So A. Dh., but adiya in 742.17 means 'troops' and it may well be that love and war are mingled in his thoughts.)
Hind keeps blaming and reproaching me
While war has distracted me from her.
Gently now, blame me not; 'tis (it is) my habit
As you know I have never concealed it.
I help the B. Kab as they demand
Struggling with the burdens they impose.
I bore my arms bestride a noble horse
I,ong of pace, smooth in gait, keeping up with the cavalry's gallop, Running like a wild ass in the desert which Pursued by hunters keeps close to the females. (Cf Ahlwardt, Chalaf el-Ahmar's Qaside, Greifswald, 1859; but a comparison with Amr b. Qamia [ed. Lyall, Camb. iqiq, p. 53] suggests that we should read mukaddimun [active] 'biting' to quicken their pace as he protects their rear.)

Sired by Awaj, which rejoices men's hearts
Like a branch on a thick lofty palm.
I got him ready and a sharp choice sword
And a lance with which I meet life's crises.
This and a well-knit coat of mail like a wavy pool
Fastened on me clear of blemishes.
We brought Kinana from the confines of yonder Yemen
Across the land driving them hard.
When Kinana asked where we were taking them
We told them Medina (Al-Nukhayl). A watering-place near Medina.); so they made for it and its people.
We were the true knights that day on Uhud's slope.

Maadd were in terror so we said we would come to their aid.

They feared our strokes and thrusts well aimed and cutting
Which they beheld when their outposts had drawn together.

Then we came like a cloud of hail,
The B. al-Najjar's bird of death bemoaned them.
Their skulls in the battle were like ostrich eggs
Split open (by the chicks) and cast aside;
Or a colocyth ('Citrullus colocythis', a herb-like plant related to the watermelon) on a withered shoot
Loosened by the sweeping winds.
We spend our wealth lavishly without reckoning
And we stab the horsemen in their eyes right and left.

Many a night when the host warms his hands in the belly of a slaughtered camel

And invites only wealthy guests*,
(* The mean man does not throw the meal open to all and sundry, but invites only those who can return his hospitality.)

Many a night of Jumada with freezing rain ( probably hail, jumadiya. S. points out that the old names of the months indicated their position in the solar year and that these names persisted when the months fell in different seasons after the lunar calendar was adopted; thus Ramadan, 'the scorcher', could begin in January and Rabia, 'the Spring', begin in November.)

Have I travelled through the wintry cold.
Because of the frosts the dogs bark but once
And the vipers leave not their holes.
I kindled then a blaze for the needy
Bright as the lightning that illumines the horizon.
Amr and his father before him bequeathed me this example.
He used to do this again and again.
They vied with the courses of the stars.
Their deeds never fell below the highest standard.

Hassan b. Thabit answered him:

You brought Kinana in your folly (to fight) the apostle,
For God's army was (bound to) disgrace them.
You brought them to death's cisterns in broad daylight.
Hell was their meeting-place, killing what they met with.
You collected them, black slaves, men of no descent,
O leaders of infidels whom their insolent ones deceived.
Why did you not learn from those thrown into Badr's pit
Slain by God's horsemen?
Many a prisoner did we free without ransom,
Many a captive's forelock did we, his masters, cut!
(641)

Kab b. Malik also answered Hubayra:

Have Ghassan heard about us though
Wide desert land where travel is uncertain separates them?
Deserts and mountains looking black in the distance
Like pillars of dust dotted here and there.
Strong camels there become feeble,
The yearly rains pass over it to make other lands fertile. (Or 'The yearly rain clouds are empty and pass swiftly on'.)
There the skeletons of exhausted ai mals
Look like merchants' linen dotted with figures.
The wild oxen and gazelles walk in file
And broken ostrich eggs lie strewn abroad.
Our warriors who fight for their religion arc all troops
Skilled in war with helmets* shining.
(* Properly: 'the metal tops of leather helmets'.)

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

Every coat of mail preserved in store is
When donned as a well-filled pool.
But ask any man you meet about Badr;
News you are ignorant of will be profitable.
Had other men been in that land of fear
They would have decamped at night and fled away.
When a rider of ours came he said,
'Prepare to meet the force Ibn Harb has collected.'
In misfortunes that would distress others
We showed greater calmness than all.
Had others been beset by a multitude
They would have given up and lost heart (Or, reading tawazzau, 'dispersed').
We fought them; no tribe could stand against us
But feared and fled in dread.
When they made their home in Ird (A place outside Medina.) our leader said,
'Why do we plant grain if we do not protect it?'
Among us was God's apostle whose command we obey.
When he gives an order we do not examine it.
The spirit (Gabriel) descends on him from his Lord Brought down from the midst of heaven and taken up again.
We consult him on our wishes, and our desire
Is to obey him in all that he wants.
The apostle said when they appeared,
'Cast off the fear of death and desire it,
Be like one who sells his life
To draw near to a King by Whom he will be restored to life.
Take your swords and trust in God
To Whom belongs the disposal of all things.'
We made for them openly as they rode their camels
Bearing swords and unafraid
In a compact force with lances and spears;
When our steeds planted their feet they kept them firm.
Into a sea of foemen we plunged,
Their blacks in the centre some in armour some unprotected.
They were three thousand while we were three hundred elite
Or four hundred at the most.
The battle went to and fro while death ran between us.
We tried to get to the cistern of death before them
and did so.
Bows of lote wood exchanged 'presents' between us
All of them cut from *Yathribi wood
(* A.Dh. explains Yathribi as "bow strings" cut in Medina, but the context implies that arrows were exchanged.)
And Meccan arrows made by Said
Sprinkled with poison at the time they were made
Sometimes hitting men's bodies,
Sometimes glancing off shields with a clang;
And horsemen in the plain looking like locusts
Which the east wind brings, moving briskly in the cold.
When we met them and the battle was fierce
(For there is no defence against God's decree)
We smote them until we left their leaders
Lying in the hollow like fallen trees.
From morn till eve until we recovered our strength
Our zeal was like a fire burning all in its path.
They fled in haste hurrying away
Like a cloud wisp that the wind robs of rain.
We went on, our rearguard coming slowly,
Like strong lions seeking (The reading is doubtful.)
meat in Bisha.
We inflicted loss on you and you on us;
Perhaps we should have won, but what is with God is more spacious.
The battle waged hot between us
And all were made to get their fill of evil.
We are men who see no blame in him who kills
To guard and protect his proteges.
Firm in misfortunes, you will never see

Our eyes weeping over a comrade slain;
Warriors who do what we say
Nor become despondent in war's trials;
Warriors who commit no atrocities in victory
Nor complain of war's scratches.
We are a flame whose heat men ward off,
Those near it withdraw with scorched faces.
You taunt me, Ibn al-Zibara (But the poem is said to be a reply to Hubayra who is not even mentioned!), yet a party went after you
Searching for you at nightfall.
Ask about yourself in the summit of Maadd and elsewhere
Who is the lowest and most shameful of men?
Whom did war leave shorn of glory,
His face humiliated on the day of war?
We attacked you with God's help and succour
Our spearheads directed at you.
Our lances made gaping wounds among you Like the mouths of waterskins where the water gushes forth.
We attacked the standard-bearers, and he who hastens to mention the standard Is the first in giving praise (The text of this verse is difficult and is probably corrupt.).

But they were treacherous, surrendered, and deserted.
Only God's will can prevail and He is the greatest doer (642).

Abdullah b. al-Zibara:

O raven, you have made men hear, then speak.
You can say only what has happened.
(To good and evil there is an end and both befall men.
Gifts are mean among them
And the graves of the rich and the poor are equal.
Every comfortable and pleasant life comes to an end
And the blows of fate play with us all.)
Give Hassan a message from me,
For composing poetry cures inward pain.
How many skulls on the mountain slope did you see,
How many hands and feet cut off,
Fine armour stripped from the brave
Who had perished in the battle?
How many noble chiefs did we slay,
Their descent doubly glorious, intrepid warriors;
Truly courageous, noble, conspicuous,
No weaklings when the spears fell?
Ask al-Mihras who inhabits it,
Between skulls and brains, like partridges?
Would that my elders in Badr had seen
The fear of Khazraj when the spears fell;
When (war) rubbed its breast in Quba (War is compared to a camel.)
And the slaughter waxed hot among the Abdul-Ashhal.
Then they were nimble in flight
Like young ostriches running up a hill.
We killed a double number of their nobles
And adjusted the inequality of Badr.
I do not blame myself, but Had we returned, we should have made a clean sweep of them,
With Indian swords above their heads
Delivering blow after blow.

Hassan b. Thabit answered him:

The battle is over, O Ibn Zibara (The reading of the Diwan, xi, A battle ran away with Ibn Zibar* is better.) (Had he been fair he would have admitted our superiority).
You inflicted loss on us and we on you.
The fortunes of war often change.
We thrust our swords between your shoulders
Where they drank blood again and again.

We made liquid to run from your arses
Like the ordure of camels that have eaten Asal.
When you took to your heels (The language is Koranic.) in the pass
And fled like sheep one behind the other;
When we attacked you boldly
And drove you to the bottom of the mountain With companies like vast objects in the plain (The reading is uncertain. A.Dh. cites 'jinns' as an alternative reading.)

Whoever meets them is terrified.
The pass was too narrow for us when we traversed it
And we filled its heights and depths
With men you cannot equal
Strengthened by Gabriel's help who came down.
We conquered at Badr by piety,
Obeying God and believing the apostles.
We killed all their chiefs
And we killed every long-robed noble.
We left in Quraysh a lasting shame that day of Badr,
An example to be talked of.
While the apostle of God witnessed truly,
While the short fat people among Quraysh
Got together by them were as Camels collected in herbage and left shepherdless
(These two lines are not clear).

We and not men like you, children of your mother's arse,

Meet the fighters* when adversity comes (* It would be tempting to read bas for nas here.) (643).

Kab mourning Hamza and the Muslim dead:
You weep, but do you want one to stir you to tears?
You who are lost in grief when you remember them,
(The poet is apostrophising himself.)

Remembering a people of whom Stories have reached me in this crooked age. (A clear indication of the comparatively late date of this poem.
Cf. also Wüstenfeld 628, line 5.)

Your heart palpitates at the memory of them
In longing and tearful sadness.
Yet their dead are in lovely gardens
Honoured in their exits and entrances.
Because they were steadfast beneath the flag,
The flag of the apostle in Dhul-Adwaj, (A place near Uhud. Yaq. i. 305.)

The morning when the B. Aus and Khazraj
All responded with their swords
And Ahmad's supporters followed the truth,
The light-giving straight way.
They continually smote the warriors
As they passed through the clouds of dust
Till at last the King summoned them
To a garden with thick trees at its entrance.
All of them proved pure in the trial,
Died unflinchingly in God's religion
Like Hamza when he proved his loyalty
With a sharp well-whetted sword.
The slave of the B. Naufal met him
Muttering like a huge black camel
And pierced him with a lance like a flame
That burns in a blazing fire.
And Numan fulfilled his promise
And the good Hanzala turned not from the truth
Until his spirit passed
To a mansion resplendent in gold.
Such are (true men) not those of your company
Who lie in nethermost hell with no escape.

Dirar b. al-Khattab al-Fihri answered him:

Does Ka'b grieve over his followers
And weep over a crooked age
Crying like an old camel who sees his companions
Returning at even while he is kept back?
The water camels pass on and leave him
Grumbling of ill-treatment while he is not even saddled for women.
Say to Kab, 'Let him double his weeping
And let him suffer pain therefrom;

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

For the death of his brothers when the cavalry charged

In clouds of rising dust.
 Would that Arar and his followers
 And Utba had been in our flaming meeting-place
 That they might have slaked their vengeance
 On those of Khazraj who were slain
 And on those of Aus who died on the battlefield,
 All of them slain in Dhul-Adwaj.
 And the killing of Hamza under the flag
 With a pliant death-dealing lance.
 And where Musab fell and lay
 Smitten by a sword's quick stroke
 In Uhud when our swords flashed among them
 Flaming like a roaring fire
 On the morn we met you with swords
 Like lions of the plains who cannot be turned back;
 All our steeds like hawks,
 Blood horses fiery, well-saddled.
 We trod them down there until they fled
 Except the dying or those hemmed in (644).

Abdullah b. al-Zibara:

Surely tears flowed from your eyes (Or the poet may be urging himself to weep.)

When youth had fled and the loved one was far away.
 Far off and gone is she whom you love and
 The camp, now removed, has robbed me of a dear one.

The ardent lover cannot recover what is gone
 However long he weeps.
 But let be: Has Umm Malik news of my people
 Since news spreads far and wide
 Of our bringing horses to the men of Medina, Fine handsome horses, some reared with us, some outborn,
 The night we went forth in great force Led by one, the dread of his enemies, the hope of his friends?

All were clad in coats of mail
 Which looked like a well-filled pool where two valleys meet.

When they saw us they were filled with awe,
 A dreadful plight confronted them;
 They wished that the earth would swallow them,
 Their stoutest hearted warriors were in despair.
 When our swords were drawn they were like
 A flame that leaps through brushwood.
 On their heads we brought them down
 Bringing swift death to the enemy.

They left the slain of Aus with hyaenas hard at them and

Hungry vultures lighting on them.
 The Banu Najjar on every height
 Were bleeding from the wounds on their bodies.

But for the height of the mountain pass they would have left Ahmad dead,

But he climbed too high though the spears were directed at him,

As they left Hamza dead in the attack
 With a lance thrust through his breast.
 Nu'man too lay dead beneath his banner,

The falling vultures busy at his bowels (This unpleasant version is probably the original. For yajufna C. follows the Manuscripts which have yahufna, said to mean 'fall upon', which seems unnatural here. Another variant quoted by C. is yahumna 'hover', while Noldeke, Delectus, 68, read yajuna 'hunger for', which again is unnatural. All these variants can be accounted for by the assumption that editors wanted to tone down the ghastly description of this early Muslim's death.)

The spears of our warriors came on them in Uhud
 (as-swiftly)

As a well devours the ropes of the bucket. (Or, A water-drawer grasps'. Noldeke, Delectus, 70, renders nazu by profundus puteus, but this is wrong because, according to the Taj, Lisan, and Qamus, it means a shallow well. See further E. Braunlich in Islamica, I, 1925, 338. Alternatively nazu could mean an habitual water-drawer. If, with some authorities, nazu be read, then the act of drawing water is intended. The verb ghula means taking away quickly, destroying, devouring, grasping, etc. Thus the point of the simile would seem to be that the spears went in and out of the bodies as fast as a skilled water-drawer could send buckets up and down a well, or that they went in as quickly as a well (or the act of drawing water) takes away the ropes.)

Hassan b. Thabit:
 Do the spring camps make you long for Ummul-Walid,

The waste lands deserted by their people?
 The winds of summer and the rain of Aquarius,
 The torrential cloudbringer, has effaced them;
 Naught remains but the place where the fire was,
 Round it on the ground arc the firestones like doves.
 Mention no more the camp whose people distance separates

Severing the strongest ties, and say
 If there was a battle in Uhud which a fool counts a victory

The real truth will some day be known.'
 All the Banu Aus stood firm that day,
 High renown was theirs.

The Banu Najjar were steadfast in defence,
 None was fainthearted in the fight
 In front of the apostle of God, they did not desert
 him.

They had a helper from their Lord and an intercessor.
 They were faithful when you, (the) Quraysh (Eaters of sakhina.), denied your Lord.

(The loyal and the disloyal slave are never equal)
 With swords in their hands when the battle was hot
 He whom they smote could not but die.

They left Utba and Sad lying in the dust
 As the spears found their mark.

They left Ubayy laid beneath the dust by the apostle's own hand,

His shirt wet with blood
 When the dust they stirred up covered the people.
 These were chiefs from your leading families,
 For every army has chiefs.

By them (i.e. the swords.) we help God when (C. has hatta.) He helps us

Even if things are terrible, O Quraysh.
 Mention not the slain since Hamza is among them,
 Dead for God's sake in true obedience.

Paradise eternal he lives in now (The command of Him who decrees is swift).

While your dead are in hell, their best food Thorns and boiling water to fill their bellies (Koran 88.6) (645)

Amr b. al-As.

We went forth from the barren desert against them Forming as it were a streaked girdle to Radwa in the morning.

(The) B. Najjar foolishly wished to meet us
 By the side of Sal and hopes are sometimes realised.
 What scared them suddenly in the valley was Squadrons of horse coming forth to the battle.

They wanted to plunder our tents,
 But protecting those tents that day were shattering blows.

They were tents that have always been protected,
 If a people made for them they would be spoiled and meet our rage.

The heads of the Khazrajis that morning
 By the side of Sal were like sliced melons,
 And their hands holding Yamani swords were like barwaq (A feeble plant ending in small envelopes like chickpeas: a simile of weakness and uselessness.) (646).

Dirar b. al-Khattab:

By thy grandfather (Or 'By thy fortune'. See Lane.
 386a.), had I not advanced my horse

When the cavalry wheeled between the slope and the low ground

On the side of Uhud's slope, there had not ceased
 The voices of your wraiths calling for vengeance, their cause well known.

And a horseman, his forehead split by a sword,
 His skull in pieces like a shepherd's cloak. (The point of this simile would seem to be that the man's skull split and matted with blood, reminded the poet of a shepherd's cloak which had been made of odd pieces of fur.)

By thy grandfather, I am always girded with a sharp sword white as salt

On the saddle of a mare thrusting forward to the one who calls for help

As long as the cry for aid is raised.

I am not reckoned the son of weaklings and non-combatants

Or miserly cowards on the day of battle,
 But of those who smite the trusty helms when they reach them,

Warriors of proud descent on the day of battle, Proud leaders bearing long swords who advance to death unflinching.

He also said:

When there came from Kab a squadron
 And the Khazrajia with glittering swords
 And they drew their Mashrafiya swords
 And displayed a flag fluttering like the wings of an eagle

I said, This will be a battle worth many a battle,
 It will be talked of as long as leaves fall.

Every day they have been accustomed to gain the victory in battle

And the spoils of those they encountered.
 I forced myself to be steadfast when I felt afraid
 (Reading fabbartu.)

And I was certain that glory could only be got in the forefront.

I forced my steed to plunge into their ranks
 And drenched him with their blood.

My horse and my armour were coloured
 With blood that spurted from their veins and coagulated.

I felt sure I should stay in their dwellings
 For ever and a day.

Do not despair, O Banu Makhzum, for you have men
 Like Al-Mughira, men without blame.

Be steadfast, may my mother and brothers be your ransom,
 Exchanging blows until time be no more.

Amr b. al-As:

When I saw war's flames leaping over the fire stones
 Reaching the squadrons playing men with their heat (Radf could mean 'forelegs' and shahba 'flames'. There is a variant reading fansalat 'squadrons charged one after another'. In any event there is a conscious jinds in the double meaning of 'flame' and 'squadron'.)

I was sure that death was truth and life a delusion.

I set my arms on a strong horse which could outrun others easily,
 Docile when others go astray in the desert
 outrunning the best horse.

When the sweat flowed down his flanks he showed more spirit;

Swift as a young hart of the desert when archers scare him to run full stretch,

Firm of fetlock he leads the cavalry in canter and gallop.

My mother be your ransom that fearful morning
 When they walked like sandgrouse

Hamza killed them with a family who walk in long armour

The day that Gabriel helped him,
That fine helper of an intrepid horseman.

Kab b. Malik:

Visited by care you could not sleep
And feared because joyous youth had been taken from you.

A Damn girl claimed your love,
But your love is Ghauri and your company is Najdi (The poet is addressing himself. There is a play on the underlying meaning of ghaur, low ground, and najd, high ground. The reading fahtvuka would give a sense that could be expressed by 'Your heart is in the lowlands and your head in the highlands', though more exactly the word means 'Your return to sobriety'.)

Do not go too far rashly in the folly of love,
You have always been thought foolish for following its allure.

It is time for you to stop in obedience
Or to awake when an adviser warns you.
I was crushed by the loss of Hamza,
My inward parts trembled.
If Mount Hira had been so distressed
You would have seen its firm rocks shattered.
A noble prince, strong in the lofty stock of Hashim,
Whence come prophecy, generosity, and lordship,
Who slew fat-humped camels when the wind is so cold

That it almost freezes the water,
Who left a brave opponent prostrate on the ground
On the day of battle, with his lance broken.
You could see him sweeping along in steel,
Like a tawny strong-pawed lion,
The prophet's uncle and chosen one
Came to his death—a goodly end.
He met his fate marked out among a people
Who helped the prophet and sought martyrdom.
I imagine that Hind has been told of that
To still the burning choking within her breast
How we met her people on the sandhill
The day in which happiness left her.
And of the well of Badr when Gabriel and
Mohammed

Beneath our banner turned them back
So that I saw their best men with the prophet in two parties,
One killing and one pursuing whom he pleased.
There remained where the camels knelt
Seventy men, Utba and al-Aswad among them,
And Ibnu'l-Mughlra whom we smote above the neck vein

From which foaming blood gushed forth.
A sharp sword in the hands of the believers Reduced the pride of Umayya al-Jumahi (qawwama maylahu, lit. 'straightened his turning aside', i.e.
struck him in the face which in his arrogance he was wont to turn away.)

The fugitive polytheists came to you like runaway
ostriches
With the cavalry in full pursuit.
Different are those whose home is hell everlasting
And those who are eternally in paradise.

He also said:

Rise, O Safiya, be not weak.
Make the women weep over Hamza.
Be not weary in prolonging weeping
Over God's lion in the meleé.
For he was a strength to our orphans
And a lion of battle amid the weapons,
Wishing thereby to please Ahmad
And the glorious Lord of the throne.

He also said:

By thy noble father's life I adjure you.
Ask those who sought our hospitality,
For if you ask them you will not be told a lie,
Those you ask will tell you the truth
That on nights when bones were gathered for food
We gave sustenance to those who visited us: (Crowds [Wüstenfeld has najud 'poor women'.] took refuge in our shelters
From distress in years of famine)
With a gift of what our rich provided
With patience and generosity towards the indigent.
The shears of war left us
Those whose ways we have always tried to vie with.
One who saw the place where the camels go to water
Would think it was black rocky ground.
There the best camels are broken in,
Black, red, and white (White or, less likely, blackish.
This word is one of the addad.)

The rush of men was like Euphrates in flood,
Solid well-armed masses destroying all in their path.
You would think their glitter was the shining of stars,

They dazzle beholders in their commotion.
If you are ignorant of our importance
Then ask those near us who know,
How we behave when war is violent
In slaughter, severity, biting, and mauling.
Do we not tighten the cord round the camel's udder Until she yields her milk and becomes gentle? (In these two lines war is compared to a savage camel that is subdued by the tribe's firmness and resource and ends to their advantage.)

A day in which fighting is continuous,
Terrifying, burning those who kindled its blaze,
Long drawn out exceeding hot fighting.
Fear of it keeps the base-born away.
You would think the heroes engaged in it
Were happily drunk and inebriated,
Their right hands exchanging the cups of death
With their sharp-edged swords.
We were there and we were courageous
Wearing our badges under clouds of dust,
With silent fine blood-stained swords,
Blades of Busra which loathe the scabbard;
Which grow not blunt nor buckle
And cease not smiting if they are not held back,
Like autumn lightning in the hands of heroes
Overwhelming in blood heads that remain in place.
Our fathers taught us how to strike
And we will teach our sons
The swordsmanship of heroes and the spending of patrimony

In defence of our honour as long as we live.
When a champion passes, his posterity takes his place
And he leaves others to inherit him.
We grow up and our fathers perish,
And while we bring up our sons we cease to be.

I asked about you, Ibnul-Zibara,
And was told that you were baseborn,
Evil, of disgraceful life, persistently mean.
You have said much (Another reading is tanajjasta
'You have behaved filthily', which may be right.) in insulting God's apostle.
God slay you, you cursed rude fellow!
You utter filth, and then throw it
At the clean robed godly faithful one (650).

He also said:

Ask Quraysh of our flight and of theirs
That morn at the base of Uhud's hill.
We were lions, they but leopards when they came.
We cared nothing for blood relationship.
How many brave chiefs did we leave there Protectors of proteges, noble in birth and reputation?

Among us the apostle, a star, then there followed
him

A brilliant light excelling the stars.
True is his speech, just his behaviour.
He who answers his call will escape perdition,
Brave in attack, purposeful, resolute
When hearts are moved by fear,
Advancing and encouraging us so that we should not be disobedient,
Like the full moon that cannot lie.
When he appeared we followed him and held him true.

They called him liar so we are the happiest of the Arabs.

They wheeled and we wheeled, they did not reform or return

While we followed them in unwearied pursuit.
The two armies had nothing in common,
God's party and the men of polytheism and idols (These two poems are in sharp contrast. The first is a fine example of the old Arabian spirit; the second belongs to the large category of the spurious, and clearly dates from a later age.) (65 1).

Abdullah b. Rawaha said (652):
My eye wept and right well it did so
(But what avails weeping and lamentation),
For God's lion on the day that they said
Is that slain man Hamza?
All the Muslims were distressed thereat;
The apostle too suffered.
O Abu Yala (The kunya of Hamza.), your pillars were shattered,
You the noble, just, bounteous one.
God's peace on you in paradise
With everlasting felicity!
O Hashim, the best men, be steadfast
Whose every deed is fine and laudable. (Koran 38.
47. 8; 12. 18. 83.)

God's apostle is patient, noble,
Whenever he speaks 'tis (it is) by God's command.
Will someone tell Luayy for me
(For after today war's fortune will change,
And previously they have known and tasted of
Our fighting in which vengeance was slaked),
You have forgotten our blows at Badr's pool
When swift death came to you,
The morn that Abu Jahl lay prostrate,
The vultures wheeling and circling over him.
Utba and his son fell together
And Shayba whom the polished sword bit.
We left Umayya stretched on the ground,
A huge lance in his belly.
Ask the skulls of Banu Rabia,
For our swords were notched by them.
Weep, O Hind, grow not weary,
For you are the bereaved one in tears for a lost son.
Show not joy at Hamza's death, O Hind,
For your boasting is contemptible.

Kab b. Malik said:
Say to Quraysh despite their distance,
Do you boast of what you have not won?
You boast of the slain on whom the favours
Of Him who grants the best favours have fallen.
They dwell in gardens and have left waiting for you
Lions who protect their cubs,
To fight for their religion, in their midst
A prophet who never recedes from the truth.
Maadd attacked him with infamous words
And the arrows of enmity unceasingly (653).

Dirar b. al-Khattab:

What ails thine eye which sleeplessness affects
As though pain were in thine eyelids?
Is it for the loss of a friend whom you hold dear
Parted by distance and foes?
Or is it because of the mischief of a useless people
When wars blaze with burning heat?
They cease not from the error they have committed.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

Woe to them! No helper have they from Luayy.
We adjured them all by God,
But neither kinship nor oaths deterred them;
Till finally when they determined on war against us
And injustice and bad feeling had grown strong,
We attacked them with an army
Flanked by helmeted strong mailed men
And slender horses sweeping along with warriors
Like kites, so smooth was their gait:
An army which Sakhr (i.e. Abu Sufyin.) led and commanded
Like an angry lion of the jungle tearing his prey.
Death brought out a people from their dwellings,
We and they met at Uhud.
Some of them were left stone dead
Like goats which the hail na's frozen to the cold ground.

Noble dead, the Banul-Najjar in their midst
And Musab with broken pieces of our shafts around him

And Hamza the chief, prostrate, his widow going round him.
His nose and liver had been cut away. It was
As if when he fell he bled beneath the dust
Transfixed by a lance on which the blood had dried.
He was the colt of an old she-camel whose companions had fled

As frightened ostriches run away
Rushing headlong filled with terror,
The steep precipitous rocks aiding their escape.
Husbandless women weep over them
In mourning garb rent in pieces.
We left them to the vultures on the battlefield
And to the hyaenas who made for their bodies (654):

Abu Zana b. Abdullah b. Amr b. Utba, brother of
(the) B. Jusham b. al-Khazraj:

I am Abu Zana. Al-Huzam (The name of his horse.)
takes me apace,
Painful exertion alone saves disgrace.
A Khazrajite of Jusham his ward will solace.

Alib. Abu Talib (655):

Al-Harith b. al-Simma
Was faithful to his covenant with us.
He went through painful deserts,
Black as darkest night,
Among many swords and spears
Seeking God's apostle in what was happening there.

Ikrima b. Abu Jahl:

Each of them says to his horse, Come on here!
You can see him advancing today without fear
Bearing a leader with his mighty spear.
Al-Asha b. Zurara b. al-Nabbash al-Tamimi, of (the)
B. Asad b. Amr b. Tamim, weeping the slain of (the) B.
Abd al-Dar:

Let the Banu Abu Talha in spite of their distance
Be given a greeting that will not be rejected.
Their watercarrier passed them with it
And every watercarrier of theirs is known.
Their neighbour and guest never complained,
No door was closed in their face. (The last line is omitted by Wüstenfeld, probably rightly. He refers to it in his notes in vol. II.)

Abdullah b. al-Zibara:

We killed Ibn Jahsh and rejoiced at his death
And Hamza with his horsemen and Ibn Qauqal.
Some men escaped us and got quickly away.
Would that they had stopped and we had not been hasty,
That they had stood so that our swords their best
men

Might have cut down, for all of us were fully armed;
And that there might have been a fight between us
When they would have a morning draught (Wüstenfeld has sabah 'morning'.) whose evil would not pass away (656).

Safiya d. Abdul-Muttalib mourning her brother
Hamza:

Are you my sisters asking in dread
The men of Uhud, the slow of speech and the eloquent? (i.e. Whether they know or not. This poem is attributed to Hassan in the Diwan, xxxviii, where the text differs somewhat. It is obviously the product of a later age.)

The latter said Hamza is dead,
The best helper of the apostle of God.
God the true, the Lord of the Throne, called him
To live in paradise in joy.
That is what we hoped and longed for.
Hamza on the day of gathering will enjoy the best reward.

By God I shall never forget thee as long as the east wind blows
In sorrow and weeping, whether at home or in travel,
For the lion of God who was our defence,
Protecting Islam against every unbeliever.
Would that my limbs and bones were there
For hyaenas and vultures to visit.

I said when my family raised their lamentation,
God reward him, fine brother and helper as he was!
(657).

Num wife of Shammas b. Uthman weeping her husband:

O eye be generous, let thy tears flow spontaneously
For the noble and victorious warrior Whose opinion was accepted, whose deeds were successful,
Who carried the standards, the rider of horses.
I said in anguish when news of his death came,
'The generous man who fed and clothed others has perished.'

I said when the places where he sat were forsaken,
'May God not take Shammas far from us!
Her brother Abul-Hakam b. Said b. Yarbu replying to comfort her:

Preserve thy modesty in secret and in honour,
For Shammas was only a man.
Kill not thyself because he met his death
In obeying God on the day of heroic battle.
Hamza was the lion of God, so be patient;
He too on that day tasted Shammas's cup.
Hind d. Utba when the polytheists withdrew from Uhud:

I came back my heart filled with sorrow,
For some from whom I sought vengeance had escaped me,
Men of Quraysh who were at Badr,
Of Banu Hashim, and of Yathrib's people.
I gained somewhat from the expedition
But not all that I had hoped (658).

THE DAY OF AL-RAJI, 3 A.H.

Abu Mohammed Abdul-Malik b. Hisham told us from Ziyad b. Abdullah al-Bakkai from Ibn Ishaq from Asim b. Umar b. Qatada: After Uhud a number of Adal and al-Qara came to the apostle (659). They said that some of them had already accepted Islam and they asked him to send some of his companions to instruct them in religion and to teach them to read the Koran and to teach them the laws of Islam. The apostle sent the following six of his companions. Marthad b. Abu Marthad al-Ghanawi, an ally of Hamza; Khalid b. al-Bukayr al-Laythi, an ally of (the) B. Adiy b. Kab;
Asim b. Thabit b. Abul-Aqlah, brother of (the) B.
Amr b. Auf b. Malik b. al-Aus; Khubayb b. Adiy, brother of (the) B. Jahjaba b. Kulfa b. Amr b. Auf; Zayd b. al-Dathinna b. Muawiya, brother of (the) B.
Bayada b. Amr b. Zurayq b. Abdu Haritha b. Malik b.
Ghadr b. Jusham b. al-Khazraj; and Abdullah b.

Tariq, ally of (the) B. Zafar b. al-Khazraj b. Amr b.
Malik b. al-Aus.

The apostle put Marthad in command of them and the band got as far as al-Raji, a watering-place of Hudhayl in a district of the Hijaz at the upper part of al-Hada. (Between Asfan and Mecca; according to others between Mecca and al-Taif.) There they betrayed them and summoned Hudhayl against them.
While they were off their guard sitting with their baggage suddenly they were set upon by men with swords in their hands, so they took their swords to fight them; but the men said that it was not their intention to kill them; they wanted to get something for them from the people of Mecca. They swore by God that they would not kill them.

Marthad, Khalid, and Asim said: 'By God, we will never accept an undertaking and agreement from a polytheist.' Asim said:

No weakling I, an archer bold,
My bow thick-stringed with trusty hold
Broad arrows can life's coil unfold.
Death is certain—life a mere tale told.
What God decrees men shall behold,
Life must return to Him its mould.
I fight though I leave a mother, cold (660).

He also said:

I am Abu Sulayman with al-Muqad's shafts (A Meccan who was famed for feathering arrows skilfully.)

Like Gehenna they burn my feathered shafts.
(The readings of the following line vary: al-nawaji
"the ways" and ufturishat 'full of men'; al-nawaji 'swift camels' and uqturishat 'collected'. The probable sense is given here:) When battle is abroad I am not afraid,
With shield of smooth ox-hide I am safely arrayed
And I firmly believe in what Mohammed has said.
He also said:
I am Abu Sulayman, an archer fine,
And come of a people of noble line.
His kunya was Abu Sulayman.

Thereupon he fought with the people until he and his two companions were killed.

[The passages in this square bracket are quoted by b.
Yusuf b. Yahya al-Tadali known as Ibn al-Zayyat (d.
627/1299) in his al-Tashawwuf ila rijali l-tashawwuf, Rabat MS. D. 767, f. 24r, where dabr is glossed by nahl: When Asim was slain Hudhayl wanted to take his head to sell it to Sulafa d. Sad b. Shuhayd. When he killed her two sons at Uhud she swore a vow that if she could get possession of his head she would drink wine in his skull; but bees (Or, more probably, 'hornets'.
But see below.) protected him. // When the bees came between it and them they said, 'Let him alone until nightfall when they will leave him and we can take the skull.' But God sent a flood in the wadi and it carried Asim away. Now Asim had made a covenant with God that no polytheist should touch him nor would he ever touch a polytheist for fear of contamination. // Umar used to say when he heard of how the bees protected him, // God protects the believer. Asim had vowed that no polytheist should touch him and that he would never touch one so long as he lived, so God protected him after his death as he had protected himself while he was alive.]

Zayd, Khubayb, and Abdullah b. Tariq were weak and yielding in their desire to preserve their lives so they surrendered and were bound and taken to Mecca to be sold there. When they were in al-Zahran Abdullah broke loose from his bonds and drew his sword. But the men drew back from him and stoned him until they killed him. His grave is in al-Zahran.
Khubayb and Zayd were brought to Mecca (661).

Hujayr b. Abu Ihab al-Tamimi, an ally of (the) B.
Naufal, bought Khubayb for Uqba b. al-Harith b.
Amir b. Naufal, Abu Ihab being the brother of al-

Harith b. Amir by the same mother, to kill him in revenge for his father (662).

Safwan b. Umayya bought Zayd to kill him in revenge for his father Umayya b. Khalaf. Safwan sent him with a freedman of his called Nistas (Possibly short for Anastasius.) to al-Tanim and they brought him out of the haram to kill him. A number of Quraysh gathered, among whom was Abu Sufyan b. Harb, who said to him as he was brought out to be killed, I adjure you by God, Zayd, do not you wish that Mohammed was with us now in your place so that we might cut off his head (Arabs were obsessed with cutting off limbs and mutilate their targets and victims in like kind. This has become an Islamic tradition in general), and that you were with your family? Zayd answered, 'By God, I do not wish that Mohammed now were in the place he occupies and that a thorn could hurt him, and that I were sitting with my family.' Abu Sufyan used to say, I have never seen a man who was so loved as Mohammed's companions loved him. Then Nistas killed him, God pity him.

Abdullah b. Abu Najih told me that he was told by Mawiya (S. says that this is the reading of Yunus b. Bukayr and it is to be found in old copies of Ibn Hisham, but others give the name as Mariya on Ibn Ishaq's authority.), freedwoman of Hujayr b. Abu Ihab, who had become a Muslim: Khubayb was imprisoned in my house and I looked at him one day with a bunch of grapes in his hand as big as a man's head from which he was eating. I did not know that there were grapes on God's earth that could be eaten (at that time).

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Abdullah b. Abu Najih both told me that she said: When the time for his execution had come he asked me to send him a razor with which to cleanse himself before he died; so I gave a razor to a youth of the tribe and told him to take it to the man in the house. Hardly had he turned his back to take it to him when I thought, 'What have I done? By God, the man will take his revenge by killing the youngster and it will be man for man.' But when he handed him the steel he took it from him saying, 'Good gracious, your mother was not afraid of my treachery when she sent you to me with this razor!' Then he let him go (663).

Asim said, Then they took out Khubayb as far as al-Tanim to crucify him. He asked them to give him time to make a couple of bowings, and they agreed. He performed two excellent bowings and then turned to the people saying, 'Were it not that you would think that I only delayed out of fear of death I would have prolonged my prayer.' Khubayb b. Adiy was the first to establish the custom of performing two bowings at death. Then they raised him on the wood and when they had bound him he said, 'O God, we have delivered the message of Thy apostle, so tell him tomorrow what has been done to us.' Then he said, 'O God, reckon them by number and kill them one by one, let none of them escape.' Then they killed him, God pity him.

Muawiya b. Abu Sufyan used to say: I was present that day among those who were there with Abu Sufyan and I saw him throw me to the ground out of fear of Khubayb's curse. They used to say, If a man is cursed and is thrown to one side the curse will pass over him.'

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father Abbad concerning Uqba b. al-Harith said: I heard him say, "It was not I who killed Khubayb, for I was too young to do that; but Abu Maysara brother of (the) B. Abdul-Dar took a lance and put it in my hand. Then he covered my hand with his and thrust him with it until he killed him."

One of our companions said that Umar had appointed Said b. Amir b. Hidyam al-Jumahi over a part of Syria. Fainting fits used to seize him when he was among the people and Umar was told of this. It was said that the man was subject to seizures. During one of his visits Umar asked him the cause of the trouble and he said, 'There is nothing the matter with me, but I was one of those who was present when Khubayb b. Adiy was killed and I heard his curse, and whenever I remember it when I am in a meeting I faint away.' This increased his favour in Umar's eyes (664).

A freedman of Zayd b. Thabit told me from Ikrima, freedman of Ibn Abbas, or from Said b. Jubayr, that Ibn Abbas said with reference to a passage of the Koran about this expedition: When the expedition in which Marthad and Asim took part came to grief in al-Rajl some of the disaffected said, Alas for those beguiled fellows who perished thus! They did not stay with their families nor did they deliver the message of their master.' Then God sent down concerning their words and the good they gained by their suffering: 'There is the kind of man whose talk about the life of this world pleases you,' i.e. when he professes Islam with his tongue, And he calls God to witness about that which is in his heart' which is contrary to what he professes with his tongue, 'yet he is the most quarrelsome of adversaries', i.e. a controversialist when he argues with you (Koran 2.200. S. records a variant reading of Ibn Muhaysin, wayash hadullahu for wayush hidullaha, i.e. God knows what is in his heart, and this may well be the true reading. He also says that the majority of commentators hold that this verse came down with reference to aJ-Akhnas b. Shariq al-Thaqafi according to the tradition from Ibn Abbas through Abu Malik, and Mujahid said the same. Ibnul-Kalbi said that when he was in Mecca he gave that opinion, but one of al-Akhnas's offspring denied it and said that it came down with reference to the people of Mecca.) (665).

God said, And when he turns away,' i.e. goes out from your presence, 'he hastens through the land to make mischief therein and to destroy the crops and the cattle; but God loves not mischief,' i.e. He does not love the doing of it nor does it please Him. And when it is said to him, Beware of God, pride seizes him in sin. Hell will be his reckoning, an evil restingplace. And there is the kind of man who would sell himself in his desire to please God and God is kind to His servants,' i.e. they sold themselves to God by fighting in His way and doing what He required until they gave up their lives. He means that expedition (666).

Among the poems about this is that of Khubayb b. Adiy when he heard that the people had gathered to crucify him (667):

The confederates gathered their tribes around me
And assembled all whom they could collect.
All of them show violent enmity against me
Because I am helpless in bonds.
They collect their women and children
And I am brought to a lofty high trunk.
To God I complain of my loneliness and pain
And of the death the confederates have prepared for me.
Lord of the throne, give me endurance against their purpose.

They have pierced my flesh—all hope is gone!
This is for God's sake, and if He wills
He will bless the limbs thus torn.
They let me choose infidelity but death is preferable,
And my tears flowed though not in fear.
I fear not death who am about to die
But I fear hell and its all-embracing fire.
By God, I fear not (raja is one of the addad.) if I die a Muslim

What death I suffer for God's sake.
I will not show subservience to the enemy
Nor despair, for 'tis to God I return.

Hassan b. Thabit said, mourning Khubayb:

What ails thine eye that its tears cease not
Flowing on to thy breast like loose pearls?
For Khubayb the hero, no coward when you meet him,
No fickle youth as men well know.
Then go, Khubayb, may God reward thee well

In the eternal gardens with houris among thy companions.

What will you say when the prophet says to you
When the pure angels are in the firmament,
Why did you kill God's martyr for the sake of an evil man
Who committed crimes far and wide? (668)

Hassan also said:

O eye, be generous with thy tears;
Weep for Khubayb who did not return with the warriors.
A hawk, amidst the Ansar was his dignity,
Generous by nature of pure unmixed descent.
My eye was inflamed because of the difficulty of weeping (i.e. my nature is such that my eyes are unaccustomed to tears.)

When 'twas (it was) said, He has been lifted up on a tree.

O raider going forth on your business
Convey a threat—no idle threat
To the Banu Kuhayba that war's milk
Will be bitter when its teats are pressed.
In it will be the lions of the Banu al-Najjar,
Their glittering spears in front of a great shouting army (669).

Hassan also said:

Had there been in the camp a noble chief, a warrior,
A champion of the people, a hawk whose uncle is Anas,
Then, Khubayb, you would have had a spacious place to sit in
And not have been confined by guards in prison.
Low adherents of the tribes would not have borne you to Tanim,
Some of them men whom Udas had expelled.
They deceived you with their treachery, breaking their faith,
You were wronged, a prisoner in their camp (670).

Those who formed the mob from Quraysh when Khubayb was killed were Ikrima b. Abu Jahi; Said b. Abdullah b. Abu Qays b. Abdu Wudd; al-Akhnas b. Shariq al-Thaqafi, ally of (the) B. Zuhra; Ubayda b. Hakim b. Umayya b. Haritha b. al-Auqas al-Sulami, ally of (the) B. Umayya b. Abdu Shams; and Umayya b. Abu Utba and the B. al-Hadrami.

Hassan also said reviling Hudhayl for what they did to Khubayb:

Tell (the) Banu Amr that a man steeped in treachery
Sold their brother as a chattel.
Zuhayr b. al-Agharr and Jami sold him,
Both of them committing foul crimes.
You promised him protection and having done so betrayed him.

In the region of al-Raji you were as sharp swords (Or, perhaps, 'thieves').
Would that Khubayb had not been deceived by your promise;
Would that he had known what people he was dealing with! (671)

Hassan also said:

If pure unalloyed treachery pleases you
Go to al-Raji and ask about the abode of Lihyan;
A people who adjure one another to devour the guest among them. (Al-Jahiz. Bukhala, Cairo, 1948, p. 216, understands from this and other satirical poems that these men were cannibals.)
Dog and ape are like such men.
If a he-goat were to rise up and address them one day
He would be a man of honour and importance among them! (672)

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

Hassan also said:

Hudhayl asked the apostle for something disgraceful.
They erred therein and went astray;
They asked their apostle what he would not grant them

To their dying day and they were the disgrace of the Arabs.

Never will you see in Hudhayl one
Calling others to a generous deed in that place of plunder.

Woe to them who desired to make immoral conditions

To be allowed what the scripture forbids!

Hassan also said:

The tale of Khubayb and Asim
Has ruined the name of Hudhayl ibn Mudrik.
The tale of Lihyan has ruined their reputation,
For Lihyan has committed the worst of crimes.
Men, the best stock of their tribe,
Like hairs upon a horse's fetlock,
Were treacherous on the day of al-Raji,
Betraying their ward to whom kindness and generosity were due,

The apostle's messenger. Hudhayl took no pains
To ward off the evil of loathsome crimes.

One day they will see victory turn against them
For killing one whom there protected against evil deeds (haraim refer, to the oath taken by Asim that he would never touch or be touched by a polytheist, and also to the vow of Sulafa that she would drink wine from Asim's skull.)

Swarms of hornets standing guard over his flesh
Which protected the flesh of one who witnessed great battles.

Perhaps in return for killing him Hudhayl will see Dead lying prostrate or women mourning
As we bring a violent attack upon them.
Which riders will relate faithfully to those at the fairs

By command of God's apostle, for he with full knowledge

Has made a forceful decision against Lihyan,
A contemptible tribe caring nothing for good faith.
If they are wronged they do not resist the avroresso
When people live in an isolated quarter

You see them in the watercourses between the well-worn channels.

Their place is the home of death.

When anything happens to them they have the minds of cattle.

Hassan also said:

God curse Lihyan, for their blood does not repay us
For their having slain the two in treachery.
At al-Raji they killed the son of a free woman
Faithful and pure in his friendship.

Had they all been killed on the day of al-Raji
In revenge for Asim (Lit. 'he of the hornets') that would not have sufficed

For the dead man whom the bees protected in their tents,

Among people of obvious infidelity and coarseness.
Lihyan killed one more honourable than they
And sold Khubayb for a miserable price, woe to them!

Ugh! for Lihyan in every event.

May their memory perish and not even be mentioned!
A contemptible tribe of mean and treacherous descent,

Their meanness cannot be concealed.

If they were slain their blood would not pay for him
But the killing of his killers would cure me (of my pain).

Unless I die I will terrify Hudhayl with a plundering raid

Swift as the early morning cloud.
By the apostle's command, and his it is,
Disaster will spend the night in Lihyan's court.

The people in al-Raji will be found in the morning
Like little goats who have passed the winter without warmth (This is accepted by Bukhari.)

Hassan also said:

By God, Hudhayl do not know
Whether Zamzam's water is clean or foul;
And if they make the great or lesser pilgrimage
They have no share in the hijr or the running.

But at al-Raji they have a place,
The home of open meanness and disgrace.
They arc like goats in the Hijaz bleating
In the evening beside the shelters.
They were treacherous to Khubayb their ward.
What a miserable covenant was their false word!
(673)

Hassan also said:

God bless those who followed one another (to death)
The day of al-Raji

And were honoured and rewarded.
Marthad the head and leader of the party and Ibn al-Bukayr their imam and Khubayb.

And a son of Tariq; Ibn Dathinna was there too.
There his death as it was written befell him

And al-Asim slain at Raji!
Attained the heights (of heaven) great gainer he.
He averted the disgrace of wounds in the back.

He met them sword in hand, the noble warrior (674).

THE STORY OF BIR MAUNA IN SAFAR, 4 A.H.

The apostle stayed (in Medina) for the rest of Shawwal, Dhul-Qada, Dhul-Hijja, and al-Muharram while the polytheists supervised the pilgrimage. Then he sent the men of Bir Ma'Gna forth in Safar, four months after Uhud.

My father Ishaq b. Yasar from al-Mughira b. Abdul-Rahman b. al-Harith b. Hisham told me, as did Abdullah b. Abu Bakr b. Mohammed b. Amr b. Hazm and other traditionists, as follows: Abu Bara Amir b. Malik b. Jafar the 'Player with the Spears' came to the apostle in Medina (Tabari 1442: and offered him a present. The apostle refused it, saying that he could not accept a present from a polytheist and telling him to become a Muslim if he wished him to accept his present. Tabari's version is more verbose and pedantic than Ibn Hisham's recension.). The apostle explained Islam to him and invited him to accept it. He would not do so yet he was not far from Islam. He said: 'O Mohammed (Tabari: your affair to which you invite me is most excellent). If you were to send some of your companions to the people of Najd and they invited them to your affair I have good hopes that they would give you a favourable answer.' The apostle said that he feared that the people of Najd would kill them; to which Abu Bara replied that he would go surety for them, so let him send them and invite men to his religion. So the apostle sent al-Mundhir b. Amr, brother of (the) B. Saida, 'The Quick to seek Death', with forty of his companions from the best of the Muslims. Among them were al-Harith b. al-Simma; Haram b. Milhan, brother of B. Adiy b. al-Najjar; Urwa b. Asma b. al-Salt al-Sulami; Nafi b. Budayl b. Warqa al-Khuzai; Amir b. Fuhayra, freedman of Abu Bakr, of those who were named of the best Muslims. (Tabari: Humayd al-Tawil from Anas b. Malik who said that the apostle sent al-Mundhir b. Amr with seventy riders. This is accepted by Bukhari.) They went on until they halted at Bir Mauna which is between the land of (the) B. Amir and the harra of (the) B. Sulaym, near to both districts but nearer to the harra.

When they alighted at it they sent Haram b. Milhan with the apostle's letter to the enemy of God Amir b. Tufayl. When he came to him he rushed at the man and killed him before he even looked at the letter. Then he tried to call out the B. Amir against them, but they refused to do what he wanted, saying that they would not violate the promise of security which Abu Bara had given these men. Then he appealed to the tribes of (the) B. Sulaym of Usayya, Ril, and Dhakwan, and they agreed and came out against them and surrounded them as they were with their camels. Seeing them they drew their swords and fought to the last man. All were killed but Kab b. Zayd, brother of (the) B. Dinar b. al-Najjar; him they left while breath was in him. He was picked up from among the slain and lived until the battle of the Trench when he was killed as a martyr.

Amr b. Umayya al-Damri and an Ansari of (the) B. Amr b. Auf were with the camels out at pasture (675). They did not know of the death of their companions until they saw vultures circling round the camp. They knew that this must mean that something serious had happened, so they went to investigate and there were the men lying in their blood and the horsemen who had killed them standing near. Amr's opinion was that they should rejoin the apostle and tell him the news, but the Ansari said that he could not bring himself to leave the spot where al-Mundhir had been slain, nor could he bear that people should say that he had done such a thing, so he fought the party until he was killed. They took Amr prisoner, and when he told them that he was of Mudar, Amir b. al-Tufayl let him go after cutting off his forelock. He freed him, so he alleged, because of an oath taken by his mother (Cf. the shorter account in Musa b. Uqba, No. 7.).

Amr got as far as al-Qarqara at the beginning of Qanat when two men of B. Amir turned up and stopped with him in the shade (676). Now there was an agreement of friendship between the apostle and the two Amiris of which Amr knew nothing, and when after questioning he found that they belonged to (the) B. Amir he let them alone for a time until they slept when he fell upon them and killed them, thinking that he had taken vengeance on them for the killing of the apostle's companions. But when he came to the apostle and told him what he had done he said, 'You have killed two men whose bloodwit I must pay.' Then the apostle said, 'This is (the result of) Abu Bara's act. I did not like this expedition fearing what would happen.' When Abu Bara heard the news he was much upset at Amir's violation of his guarantee in that the apostle's companions had been killed because of what he had done and because he had promised them safety. Among those who were killed was Amir b. Fuhayra.

Hisham b. Urwa from his father told me that Amir b. al-Tufayl used to ask, 'Who was the man I saw lifted up between heaven and earth when he had been killed until I saw the sky receive him?' They answered, 'It was Amir b. Fuhayra.'

One of (the) B. Jabbar b. Salma b. Malik b. Jafar told me—Jabbar was among those who were present that day with Amir and afterwards became a Muslim—that Jabbar used to say, 'What led me to become a Muslim was that I stabbed one of them between the shoulders that day and I saw the point of the spear come out of his chest, and I heard him say, "I have won by God!" I could not make out what he meant by the words seeing that I had killed him until afterwards I asked others and was told that it was martyrdom, and then I said, "By God he has won."'

Hassan b. Thabit, inciting (the) B. Abu Bara against Amir b. al-Tufayl, said:

Ye sons of Ummul-Banin, are you not dismayed,
You the loftiest of Najd's people,
At Amir's insolence to Abu Bara in violating his safe conduct?

For a mistake is not the same as a deliberate act.
Say to Rabia who strives after great deeds,

What did you do after I left you?
Your father Abu Bara is a man of war,
Your uncle Hakam b. Sad is celebrated (677).

[Tabari 1445: Kab b. Malik also said on the same subject:

The violation of Abu Bara's guarantee
Is blazed abroad far and wide.
It is like Musahhab and his father's sons
Hard by al-Radh in the region of Suwa.
O sons of Ummul-Banin, did you not hear
The cry for help at eventide, the loud call for aid?
You did indeed, but you knew that he was a doughty warrior.

The Banu Kilab and al-Qurata
Are homes of broken faith.
O Amir, Amir of ancient infamy,
You have won, but without intelligence or dignity.
Did you not deal falsely with the prophet?
Yet of old have you behaved infamously.
You are not like the guest of Abu Duwad
Nor al-Asadi the guest of Abul-Ala;
But your shame is a disease of long standing.
Take note that the disease of treachery is the most deadly.

When the words of Hassan and Kab reached Rabia b. Amir (Abul-Bara) he attacked Amir b. al-Tufayl and stabbed him with his spear in his thigh; he failed to kill him (Tabari has 'the spear was deflected so that it did not kill him'.) but he fell from his horse saying, This is the work of Abul-Bara: if I die my blood (I give) to my uncle (i.e. I forgive him'.) and he is not to be sued for it: if I live I will see to what has to be done myself.

Anas b Abbas al-Sulami, maternal uncle of Wayma b. Adiy b. Naufal who killed Nafi b. Budayl b. Warqa al-Khuzai that day, said:

I left Ibn Warqa dead on the ground
With the dust wind blowing over him.
I remembered Abul-Rayyan (Wustenfeld has Abul-Zabban.) when I saw him
And made sure that I was avenged.

Abul-Rayyan was Tuayma b. Adiy.
Abdullah b. Rawaha mourning Nafi b. Budayl b. Warqa said.

God have the mercy on Nafi b. Budayl
That belongs to those who seek the reward of jihad!
(Be ready for 'jihad in order to fight against Kafirs' is one of the main precepts in Islam! Jihad is often understood as 'holy war' but interpretation is much too narrow. It rather means 'struggle' in becoming a 'better Muslim', for purification from the dirt of the infidel world, for total submission / Islamisation, for supremacy of Islam, for becoming like Mohammed as He is considered the perfect model of Islam. We have here pretty much the very same uncompromising mindset as that of the ancient Messianic Movement of the Qumran communities at the Dead Sea.)

Enduring, truthful, faithful,
When men talked too much he spoke to the point
(These lines are attributed to Hassan. Cf. Diwan xl).

Hassan b. Thabit, mourning the slain at Bir Mauna and especially al-Mundhir b. Amr, said:

Weep for the slain at Mauna
With everflowing tears,
For the apostle's horsemen the day
They met their death by God's decree.
They met their end because a people
Were false to their covenant and treacherous.
Alas for Mundhir who died there
And hastened to his end steadfastly!
How manv a noble welcoming man
Of Amr's best people was done to death! (678)

THE DEPORTATION OF THE B. AL-NADIR, 4 A.H.

According to what Yazid b. Ruman told me the apostle went to (the) B. al-Nadir to ask for their help in paying the bloodwit for the two men of (the) B. Amir whom Amr b. Umayya al-Pamri had killed after he had given them a promise of security. There was a mutual alliance between (the) B. al-Nadir and (the) B. Amir. When the apostle came to them about the bloodwit they said that of course they would contribute in the way he wished; but they took counsel with one another apart, saying, 'You will never get such a chance again. Who will go to the top of the house and drop a rock on him (Tabari 1448: so as to kill him) and rid us of him?' The apostle was sitting by the wall of one of their houses at the time. Amr b. Jihash b. Kab volunteered to do this and went up to throw down a rock. (A.G.: I think it is clear that another and later story has been attached to this incident. Obviously if the prophet had overheard their designs there was no need of a supernatural communication from heaven. Further, it should be noted that in this later story the apostle is called 'the prophet'. This is a term which Ibn Ishaq uses most sparingly, though it is fairly frequently employed by his editor Ibn Hisham.) As the apostle was with a number of his companions among whom were Abu Bakr, Umar, and Ali, news came to him from heaven about what these people intended, so he got up (Tabari: and said to his companions, 'Do not go away until I come to you') and he went back to Medina. When his companions had waited long for the prophet, they got up to search for him and met a man coming from Medina and asked him about him. He said that he had seen him entering Medina, and they went off, and when they found him he told them of the treachery which the Jews meditated against him. The apostle ordered them to prepare for war and to march against them (679). Then he went off with the men until he came upon them (680).

The Jews took refuge in their forts and the apostle ordered that the palm-trees should be cut down and burnt, and they called out to him, 'Mohammed, you have prohibited wanton destruction and blamed those guilty of it. Why then are you cutting down and burning our palm-trees?'

Now there was a number of (the) B. Auf b. al-Khazraj among whom were Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul and Wadia and Malik b. Abu Qauqal and Suwayd and Dais who had sent to B. al-Nadir saying, 'Stand firm and protect yourselves, for we will not betray you. If you are attacked we will fight with you and if you are turned out, we will go with you.' Accordingly they waited for the help they had promised, but they did nothing and God cast terror into their hearts. They asked the apostle to deport them and to spare their lives on condition that they could retain all their property which they could carry on camels, except their armour, and he agreed. So they loaded their camels with what they could carry. Men were destroying their houses down to the lintel of the door which they put upon the back of their camels and went off with it. Some went to Khaybar and others went to Syria. Among their chiefs who went to Khaybar were Sallam b. Abul-Huqayq, Kinana b. al-Rabi b. Abul-Huqayq, and Huyayy b. Akhtab. When they got there the inhabitants became subject to them.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me that he was told that they carried off the women and children and property with tambourines and pipes and singing girls playing behind them. Among them was Umm Amr, wife of Urwa b. al-Ward al-Absi, whom they had bought from him, she being one of the women of (the) B. Ghifar. (They went) with such pomp and splendour as had never been seen in any tribe in their days.

They left their property to the apostle and it became his personal property which he could dispose of as he wished. He divided it among the first emigrants to the exclusion of the Ansar, except that Sahl b. Hunayf and

Abu Dujana Simak b. Kharasha complained of poverty and so he gave them some. Only two of (the) B. al-Nadir became Muslims: Yamin b. Umayr Abu Kab b. Amr b. Jihash (Wustenfeld has here A cousin of Amr'.) and Abu Sad b. Wahb who became Muslims in order to retain their property.

One of Yamm's family told me that the apostle said to Yamin, 'Have you seen the way your cousin has treated me and what he proposed to do?' Thereupon Yamin gave a man money to kill Amr b. Jihash and he did kill him, or so they allege.

Concerning (the) B. al-Nadir the Sura of Exile came down in which is recorded how God wreaked His vengeance on them and gave His apostle power over them and how He dealt with them. God said: 'He it is who turned out those who disbelieved of the scripture people from their homes to the first exile. You did not think that they would go out and they thought that their forts would protect them from God. But God came upon them from a direction they had not reckoned and He cast terror into their hearts so that they destroyed their houses with their own hands and the hands of the believers.' (Koran 59) That refers to their destroying their houses to extract the lintels of the doors when they carried them away. 'So consider this, you who have understanding. Had not God prescribed deportation against them,' which was vengeance from God, 'He would have punished them in this world,' i.e. with the sword, And in the next world there would be the punishment of hell' as well. 'The palm-trees which you cut down or left standing upon their roots.' Lina means other than the best kind of dates. It was by God's permission,' i.e. they were cut down by God's order; it was not destruction but was vengeance from God, And to humble evil-doers' (681). 'The spoil which God gave the apostle from them,' i.e. from B. al-Nadir. 'You did not urge on your cavalry or riding camels for the sake of it, but God gives His apostle power over whom He wills and God is Almighty,' i.e. it was peculiar to him (682). 'The spoil which God gave the apostle from the people of the towns belongs to God and His apostle.' What the Muslims gallop against with horses and camels and what is captured by force of arms belongs to God and the apostle. (L.H.: Another interesting mindset of Islam is quite openly shown here: It is not evil to rob and kill Kafirs, but all those are 'evil-doers' who are not Muslims and anyone who does not support the supremacy of Islam!) And is for the next of kin and orphans and the poor and the wayfarer so that it should not circulate among your rich men; and what the apostle gives you take and abstain from what he forbids you.' He says this is another division between Muslims concerning what is taken in war according to what God prescribed to him. (In al-Baladhuri's Futuhul-Buldan, ed. De Goeje, 18f., this passage reads as follows: '. . . from Ibn Abu Zaida from Mohammed b. Ishaq concerning God's word "The spoil which God gave the apostle from them", i.e. from B. al-Nadir, "you did not urge cavalry . . . whom He wills." He taught them that it was peculiar to the apostle and to none else. So the apostk divided it among the emigrants except that Sahl b. Hunayf and Abu Dujana complained of poverty and so he gave them some. As to His words "The spoil which God gave the apostle from the people of the towns belongs to God and His apostle" to the end of the verse He says this is another division between Muslims according to what God described."

It does not necessarily follow that this is what Ibn Ishaq's wrote, though the arrangement of the matter is certainly more systematic. That may be due to al-Baladhuri. On the other hand, the mention of the first emigrants seems somewhat strange. The exclusion of the Ansir may well have been ignored by the later writer as foreign to his purpose. On the other hand, the clumsy Arabic 'concerning what is taken in war' does not appear here. The change of 'prescribed' into 'described' is not an oral mistake but a misreading and incidentally is one of countless proofs that tradition in early days was written down. A confusion between wadahu and wasafahu in speech is utterly impossible: in writing it might well be impossible to determine which alternative to adopt.) Then God said, 'Have you seen those who are disaffected,' meaning Abdullah b. Ubayy and his companions and those who are like-minded 'who say to their brothers of the scripture people who disbelieve,' i.e. the B. al-Nadir, up to the words 'like those who a short time before them tasted the misery of their acts and had a painful punishment,' i.e. the B. Qaynuqa.

Then as far as the words 'Like Satan when he said to man Disbelieve, and when man disbelieved he said, I am quit of you. I fear Allah the Lord of the worlds and the punishment of both is that they will be in hell everlastingly. That is the reward of the evildoers.'

Among the verses composed about B. al-Nadir are the following from I. Luqaym al-Absi. (Others say Qays b. Bahr b. Tarif was the author (683).)

My people be a ransom for the immortal man
Who forced the Jews to settle in a distant place (The meaning is obscure. I have followed S.).

They pass their siesta with live coals of tamarisk.
Instead of the young shooting palms they have the bare hills of Udi (A. Dh. says that this is the name of a place. Yaqut does not mention it.).

If I am right about Mohammed
You will see his horses between al-Sala and Yaramram

Making for Amr b. Buhtha (linguistically related to 'Buddha').

They are the enemy.
(A friendly tribe is not the same as an evil one.)
On them are heroes, firebrands in war,
Brandishing spears directed at their enemies.
Every fine sharp Indian blade
Inherited from the days of Ad and Jurhum.
Who will give Quraysh a message from me,
For is there one honoured in glory after them?
That your brother Mohammed, and know it well,
Is of that generous stock between al-Hajun (A place in Mecca.) and Zamzam.

Obey him in truth and your fame will grow
And you will attain the greatest heights. He is A prophet who has received God's mercy.
Ask him no hidden uncertain matter.
You had an example at Badr, O Quraysh,
And at the crowded cistern
The morning he attacked you with the Khazrajls,
Obeying the Great and Honoured One,
Helped by the Holy Spirit (i.e. Gabriel.), smiting his foes,

A true apostle from the Compassionate on high;
An apostle from the Compassionate reciting His book.
When the truth shone forth he did not hesitate.
I see his power mounting on every hand
In accord with God's decree (684).

Mentioning the deportation of B. al-Nadir and the killing of Kab b. al-Ashraf, Ali said (685):

I know, and he who judges fairly knows.
I'm sure and swerve not
From the determined word, the signs which came From God the Kind, the Most Kind,
Documents studied among the believers
In which he chose Ahmad the chosen one.
So Ahmad became honoured among us,
Honoured in rank and station.
O you who foolishly threaten him
Who came not in wickedness and was not overbearing,

Do you not fear the basest punishment
(He who has nothing to fear from God is not like him who lives in dread.) (Whenever the reader encounters this miserable banality A is not the same as B'—there is an example in the preceding poem—he may be sure that it is the product of the forger of much of the poetry of the Sira.)

And that you may be thrown beneath his swords
As Kab al-Ashraf was
The day that God saw his insolence
When he turned aside like a refractory camel?
And He sent down Gabriel with a gracious revelation

To His servant about his killing.
So the apostle secretly sent a messenger to him
With a sharp cutting sword.
Eyes wept copiously for Kab
When they learned that he was dead.
They said to Ahmad, 'Leave us awhile,
For we are not yet recovered from weeping.'
So he left them; then he said, 'Begone
In submission and humiliation.'
He sent al-Nadir to a distant exile,
They having enjoyed a prosperous home
To Adhriat (A place in Syria.) riding pillion
On every ulcerous worn-out camel they had.

Sammak the Jew answered him:

If you boast, for it is a boast for you
That you killed Kab b. al-Ashraf
The day that you compassed his death,
A man who had shown neither treachery nor bad faith,
Haply time and the change of fortune
Will take revenge from 'the just and righteous one'
(A sarcastic reference to the prophet. C. has yudil.)
For killing al-Nadir and their confederates
And for cutting down the palms, their dates i
Unless I die we will come at you with lances
And every sharp sword that we have
In the hand of a brave man who protects himself.
When he meets his adversary he kills him.
With the army is Sakhr (Abu Sufyan.) and his fellows.

When he attacks he is no weakling
Like a lion in Tarj (A mountain in the Hejaz)
protecting his covert,
Lord of the thicket, crushing his prey, enormous.
Kab b. Malik said on the same subject:
The rabbis were disgraced through their treachery,
Thus time's wheel turns round.
They had denied the mighty Lord
Whose command is great.
They had been given knowledge and understanding
And a warner from God came to them,
A truthful warner who brought a book
With plain and luminous verses.
They said, 'You have brought no true thing
And" you are more worthy of God's disapproval (Or perhaps, 'of being disbelieved'.) than we.'

He said, 'Nay, but I have brought the truth,
The wise and intelligent believe me;
He who follows it will be rightly guided
And the disbeliever therein will be recompensed.'
And when they imbibed treachery and unbelief
And aversion turned them from the truth,
God showed the prophet a sound view,
For God's decision is not false.
He strengthened him and gave him power over them
And was his Helper, an excellent Helper!
Ka'b was left prostrate there.
After his fall Nadir was brought low.
Sword in hand we cut him down
By Mohammed's order when he sent secretly by night
Kab's brother, to go to Kab.
He beguiled him and brought him down with guile.
Mahmud was trustworthy, bold.
Those Banul-Nadir were in evil case,
They were destroyed for their crimes
The day the apostle came to them with an army
Walking softly as he looked at them.

Ghassan the protectors were his helpers
Against the enemies as he helped them.

He said
(I offer) Peace, woe to you,' but they refused
And lies and deceit were their allies.
They tasted the results of their deeds in misery,
Every three of them shared one camel.
They were driven out and made for Qaynuqa',
Their palms and houses were abandoned.

Sammak the Jew answered him:
I was sleepless while deep care was my guest
On a night that made all others seem short.
I saw that all the rabbis rejected him,
All of them men of knowledge and experience
Who used to study every science
Of which the Law and Psalms do speak.

You killed Kab the chief of the rabbis (Kab was nothing of the kind. His father was of Tayyi. though his mother belonged to B. al-Nadir. Can the forger possibly have confused him with Kab al-Ahbar?),
He whose ward was always safe.

He came down to Mahmud his brother (But the man's name was Silkan (Wüstenfeld 551. line 2). Is the forger referring to Mohammed b. Maslama, one of the assassins, whom he confused with Mahmud b. Masiama [Wüstenfeld -58, 769?]),

But Mahmud was harbouring a wicked design.
He left him in his blood looking as though
Saffron was flowing o'er his clothes.
By your father and mine,

When he fell al-Nadir fell also.
If we stay safe we shall leave in revenge for Kab
Men of yours with vultures circling round them
As though they were beasts sacrificed on a feast day
With none to say them nay,
With swords that bones cannot resist,
Of finest steel and sharpened edge
Like those you met from brave Sakhr
At Uhud when you had no helper.

Abbas b. Mirdas, brother of B. Sulaym, praising the men of (the) B. al-Nadir, said:

Had the people of the settlement not been dispersed
You would have seen laughter and gaiety within it.
By my life, shall I show you women in howdahs
Which have gone to Shafat and Tayab?
Large-eyed like the gazelles of Tabala;
Maidens that would bewitch one calmed by much truck with women?!

When one seeking hospitality came they would say at -once
With faces like gold, 'Doubly welcome
The good that you seek will not be withheld.
You need fear no wrong while with us.'
Don't think me a client of Salam b. Makhzum
Nor of Huyayy b. Akhjab.

Khawwat b. Jubayr, brother of B. Amr b. Auf, answered him:

You weep bitterly over the Jewish dead and yet you can see
Those nearer and dearer to you if you want to weep.
Why do you not weep o'er the dead in Urayniq's valley

And not lament loudly with sad face (over others)?
When peace reigned with a friend you rejected it.
In religion an obstruction, in war a poltroon.
You aimed at power for your people, seeking Someone similar that you might get glory and victory.
When you wanted to give praise you went
To one whom to praise is falsehood and shame.
You got what you deserved and you did not find
One among them to say Welcome to you.
Why did you not praise people whose kings
Built up their standing from ancient fame,

A tribe who became kings and were honoured?
None seeking food was ever found hungry among them.

Such are more worthy of praise than Jews;
In them you see proud glory firmly established.

Abbas b. Mirdas al-Sulami answered him:

You satirised the purest stock of the two priests, (Commentators say that there were two tribes known as the Kahinayn in the neighbourhood of Medina. Some read kahinin in the plural. If [cf. v. 5] one of these tribes was the 'Sons of Aaron', could the other have been the tribe of Moses? But one must not take this forger's work too seriously. What Jew would refer to the Bible as 'The Law and the Psalms'. However, it is possible that al-zubur here means no more than 'The Writings'. If so, it would, of course, be appropriate in the mouth of a Jew. And what had they to do with the slaughter of beasts on the open plain?) (L.H.: The duality of names in Islamic texts can have another reason: As there were 2 Meccas: [1st] the ancient Mecca, "Makka" in Pharan [of which the Armenian Chronist Tovmi Artsruni reported in the mid-9th century], better known as Petra in today's Jordan [hometown to Ismael and the Hashim-klan, to which Mohammed belonged as well as the today's Royal house of Jordan] and [2nd] the modern Mecca or "Makka" in today's Saudi Arabia; The very same applies to Medina: [1st] the ancient Medina, Madain Saleh [or Hegira which means "Hijra"] in the North of Saudi Arabia, and [2nd] the modern Medina. The distances between one another of those 2 ancient cities, as well as the 2 modern cities, are almost equal. The classic antique architecture of the 2 ancient cities is also very similar.)

Yet you always enjoyed favours at their hands.

'Twere [it were] more fitting that you should weep for them,

Your people too if they paid their debt of gratitude.
Gratitude is the best fruit of kindness,
And the most fitting act of one who would do right.
You are as one who cuts off his head

To gain the power that it contains (i.e. kill the goose that lays the golden eggs. In destroying the Jewish settlements they had destroyed the prosperity of the Hijaz.)

Weep for B. Harun and remember their deeds,
How they killed beasts for the hungry when you were famished (Lit. 'killed hunger).

O Khawwat, shed tear after tear for them,
Abandon your injurious attack upon them.

Had you met them in their homes
You would not have said what you say.

They were the first to perform noble deeds in war,
Welcoming the needy guest with kind words (It says much for the impartiality of the biographer and his editor that they have retained this touching tribute to the unfortunate Jews.)

Kab b. Malik (685) answered him:

On my life the mill of war

After it had sent Luayy flying east and west (He refers to the battle of Badr.)

Ground the remains of the family of the two priests, and their glory

Which once was great became feeble.

Salam and Ibn Saya died a violent death

And Ibn Akhtab was led to a humiliating fate.

He made such noise in seeking glory ('twas [it was] really humiliation he sought),

What he gained from his fuss was frustration (The meaning of the gloss in British Museum Manuscript 1489 seems to be In seeking glory he appealed to outsiders', etc.),

Like him who leaves the plain and the height distresses him,

And that men find more difficult and arduous.

Sha's and Azzal suffered war's fiery trial,
They were not absent as others were.

Auf b. Salma and Ibn Auf, both of them,

And Kab chief of the people died a disappointed man.
Away with B. Nadir and their like be victory or God (i.e. we have nothing but our hope in God.) (686).

THE RAID OF DHATUL-RIQA

After the attack on B. al-Nadir the apostle stayed in Medina during RabiVI-AKhir and part of Jumada. Then he raided Najd making for B. Muharib and B. Thalaba of Ghatafan (687), until he stopped at Nakhl. This was the raid of Dhatul-Riqa. There a large force of Ghatafan was encountered. The two forces approached one another, but no fighting occurred, for each feared the other. The apostle led the prayer of fear; then he went off with the men.

(Tabari 1454: Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr and Mohammed b. Abdul-Rahman from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Abu Hurayra: We went with the apostle to Najd until at Dhatul-Riqa he met a number of Ghatafan. There was no fighting because the men were afraid of them. The prayer of fear came down (Koran 4.102 f.) and he divided his companions into two sections, one facing the enemy and the other behind the apostle. The apostle cried Allah akbar' [Allah is great], and so did they all. Then he bowed with those behind him and he and they prostrated themselves. When they stood erect they walked backwards to the ranks of their companions and the others returned and prayed one bow. Then they stood erect and the apostle prayed one bow with them and they sat. Those who were facing the enemy came back and prayed the second bow and all sat and the apostle united them with the salam, and gave them the Muslim greeting. [See further E.I., art. Salat, p. 102b; Tabari here notes that there is an inconcilable difference tradition, and proposes to deal with the problem elsewhere. Ibn Hisham has probably omitted the story because of the conflict in tradition.] (688)

Amr b. Ubayd from al-Hasan from Jabir b. Abdullah told me that a man of B. Muharib called Ghaurath said to his people of Ghatafan and Muharib, 'Shall I kill Mohammed for you? They encouraged h.m to do so and asked him how he proposed to carry out his design. He said that he would take him by surprise; so he went to the apostle as he was sitting with his sword in his lap, and asked to be allowed to look at it (689). The apostle gave it to him and he drew it and began to brandish it intending to strike him, but God frustrated him (Or. 'knocked him down'). He said, Are you not afraid of me Mohammed?' 'No, why should I be?' Are you not afraid of me when I have a sword in my hand?' 'No, God will protect me from you. Then he returned the apostle's sword to him. God sent down, 'O you who believe, remember God's favour to you when a people purposed to lay hands on you and he turned their hands away from you. tear God and on God let the believers rely (Koran 5.14).'

Yazid b. Ruman told me that this came down in reference to Amr d. Jihash, brother of B. al- Nadir, and his intention. But God knows the truth of the matter.

Wahb b. Kaysan from Jabir b. Abdullah said: I went out with the apostle to the raid of Dhatul-Riqa of Nakhl on an old feeble camel of mine. On the way back the company kept going on while I dropped farther behind until the apostle overtook me and asked me what the trouble was. I told him that my camel was keeping me back, and he told me to make it kneel. I did so and the apostle made his camel kneel and then said, 'Give me this stick you are holding' or 'Cut me a stick from a tree.' He took it and prodded the beast with it a few times. Then he told me to mount and off we went. By Him who sent him with the truth my (old) camel kept up with the rapid pace of his she-camel.

As we were talking, the apostle asked me if I would sell him my camel. I said that I would give him it, but he insisted on buying it, so I asked him to make me an offer. He said he would give me a dirham. I refused and said that would be cheating me. Then he offered two dirhams and I still refused and the apostle went on raising his offer until it amounted to an ounce (of gold). When I asked him if he was really satisfied he said that he was and I said the camel was his. Then he asked me if I were married; then was she a virgin or a woman previously married? I told him she had been married before and he said, 'No girl so that you could sport together!' I told him that my father had been killed at Uhud leaving seven daughters and I had married a motherly woman who could look after them efficiently. He said, 'You have done well, if God will. Had we come to Sirar (A spot about 3 miles / 5 km from Medina.) we would order camels to be slaughtered and stay there for the day and she would hear about us and shake the dust off her cushions.' I said, 'But by God we have no cushions!' He said, 'But you will have. When you return behave wisely.' When we got to Sirar the apostle ordered the camels to be slaughtered and we stayed there for the day. At night the apostle went home and so did we. I told the woman the news and what the apostle had said to me. She said 'Look alive and do what he tells you.' In the morning I led away the camel and made it kneel at the apostle's door. Then I sat inside the mosque hard by. He came out and saw it and asked what it was, and they told him it was the camel which I had brought. He asked where I was and I was summoned to him. He said, 'O son of my brother, take away your camel for it is yours,' and he called Bilal and told him to give me an ounce of gold. He did so and added a little more. By God it continued to thrive with me and its effect on our household could be seen until it was lost recently in the misfortune which befell us, meaning the day of al-Harra (When Medina rebelled against Yazid b. Muawiya.)

[My uncle]* Sadaqa b. Yasar from Aqil b. Jabir from Jabir b. Abdullah al-Ansari said: We went with the apostle on the raid of Dhatul-Riqa of Nakhl and a man killed the wife of one of the polytheists. (* This word ammi is not in Tabari's recension. A. Dh. says it is a mistake because this man Sadaqa was a Khuzri who lived in Mecca, and was not Ibn Ishaq's uncle. Iie adds that Abu Daud [i.e. al-Sijistani, author of the Sunan] would not have it that he was Ibn Ishaq's uncle.)

When the apostle was on his way back her husband, who had been away, returned and heard the news of her death. He swore that he would not rest until he had taken vengeance on Mohammed's companions. He went off following the track of the apostle, who when he halted asked that someone should keep watch during the night. A Muhajir and an Ansari volunteered and he told them to stay in the mouth of the pass, the apostle and his companions having halted lower down the pass (690).

When the two had gone to take up their positions the Ansari asked the Muhajiri whether he would prefer to watch for the first or the second part of the night. He said that he would like to be relieved of the first part and lay down and went to sleep, while the Ansari stood up to pray. The man who had been following them perceiving the figure of the man on guard and recognising him for what he was, shot him with an arrow. The guard pulled it out and laid it down and remained standing. He shot him a second and a third time, and each time he pulled out the arrow and laid it down. Then he bowed and prostrated himself. Only then did he wake his companion, saying, 'Sit down, for I have been wounded.' But he leapt up, and when the man saw the two of them he knew that they were aware of him and fled. When the Muhajiri saw the Ansari flowing with blood he said 'Good gracious, why did you not wake me the first time you were hit?' He replied, I was reading a sura and I did not want to stop until I had finished it. When the shooting continued I bowed in prayer and woke you. By God, unless I were to lose a post which the apostle had ordered me to hold he could have killed me before I would break off my reading until I had finished the sura (691).'

When the apostle came to Medina after this raid he stayed there for the rest of Jumadal-ula, Jumadal-akhira, and Rajab.

THE LAST EXPEDITION TO BADR, 4 A.H.

In Shaban he went forth to Badr to keep his appointment with Abu Sufyan and stopped there (692).

He stayed there for eight nights waiting for Abu Sufyan. Abu Sufyan with the men of Mecca went as far as Majanna in the area of (Tabari: Murr) al-Zahrān. Some people say he reached (Tabari: passed through) Ufan; then he decided to go back. He told the Quraysh that the only suitable year was a fertile year when they could pasture the animals on the herbage and drink their milk, whereas this was a dry year. He was going to return and they must return with him. And so they did. The Meccans called them 'the porridge army', saying that they merely went out to drink porridge (Sawiq was made of parched wheat or barley, mixed with water or butter; it was 'drunk' as a sort of porridge).'

While the apostle was staying at Badr waiting for Abu Sufyan to keep his appointment Makhshiy b. Amr al-Damn, who had made an agreement with him concerning (the) B. Damra in the raid of Waddan, came to him and asked him if he had come to meet Quraysh by this water. He said, 'Yes, O brother of B. Damra; nevertheless, if you wish we will cancel the arrangement between us and then fight you until God decide between us.' He answered, 'No, by God, Mohammed, we do not want anything of the kind.'

As he remained waiting for Abu Sufyan, Mabad b. Abu Mabad al-Khuzai passed by. He had seen where the apostle was as his she-camel passed swiftly by and he said:

She fled from the two companies of Mohammed
And a datestone from Yathrib (modern Medina) like a raisin stone

Hastening in the ancient religion of her fathers.

She made the water of Qudayd (Qudayd was near Mecca.) my meeting-place

And the water of Pajnan (Dajnan is a mountain in the Tihama about one post from Mecca.) will be hers tomorrow.

Abdullah b. Rawaha said concerning this: (693):

We arranged to meet Abu Sufyan at Badr,
But we did not find him true to his promise.
I swear if you had kept your word and met us
You would have returned disgraced without your nearest kin.

We had left there the limbs of Utba and his son
And Amr Abu Jahl we left lying there.
You disobeyed God's apostle—disgusting your religion

And your evil state that's all astray.

If you reproach me I say

My wealth and people be the apostle's ransom!

We obey him treating none among us as his equal.

He is our guiding light in the darkness of the night.

Hassan b. Thabit said concerning that:

You can say good-bye to Syria's running streams,
For in between are swords like mouths of pregnant camels that feed on arak trees

In the hands of men who migrated to their Lord,

In the hands of His true helpers and the angels too.

If they go to the lowland of the sandy valley

Say to them: 'This is not the road (These lines have already been cited on p. 547).'

We stayed by the shallow well eight nights
With a large well-equipped force with many camels
(Lit. 'wide kneeling places'),

With every dark bay its middle half its size

Slender, long, of lofty withers.

You could see the swift camel's feet

Uprooting the annual herbs.

If on our journeyings we meet Furat b. Hayyan

He will become death's hostage.

If we meet Qays b. Imruul-Qays hereafter

His black face will become blacker still!

Take Abu Sufyan a message from me

For you are the best of a bad lot.

Abu Sufyan b. al-Harith b. Abdul-Muttalib answered him:

O Hassan, son of a mouldy date-eating woman,

I swear that we so traversed wide deserts

That young gazelles could not escape between us

Had they fled from us swiftly one after the other

(According to the commentator the meaning is that their force was so large that the gazelles could not escape them.).

When we left our halting-place you would have thought it

Dunged by the crowds at a fair.

You stayed by the shallow well wanting us

And you left us in the palm-groves hard by.

Our horses and camels walked on the crops

And what they trod on they drove into the soft sand.

We stopped three days between Sal and Fari (Two mountains.)

With splendid steeds and swift camels.

You would have thought fighting people beside their tents

Was as easy as buying lead for money.

Don't describe your fine horses, but speak of them

As one who holds them firmly back.

You rejoice in them, but that is the right of others,

The horsemen of the sons of Fihir b. Malik.

You have no part in the migration though you mention it

And do not observe the prohibitions of its religion (694).

THE RAID ON DUMATUL-JANDAL, 5 A.H.

The apostle returned to Medina and stayed there some months until Dhul-Hijja had passed. This was the fourth year of his sojourn in Medina and the polytheists were in charge of the pilgrimage. Then he raided Dumatul-Jandal (695).

Then he returned, not having reached the place, without fighting, and stayed in Medina for the rest of the year.

THE BATTLE OF THE DITCH*, 5 A.H.

[Also called THE BATTLE OF THE TRENCH]

(* The story comes from Ibn Ishaq by way of al-Bakkai and Ibn Hisham. [L.H.: What follows now is one of the most gruesome stories on Mohammed showing his bad temper and cruelty. In a very lively manner, the writer narrates a battle in which the Qurayza surrendered to Mohammed's troops and have all been executed afterwards on order of Mohammed. That he executed 600-900 prisoners of war might have had a particular reason. The name Qurayza is linguistically related to the name Quraysh which lets scientists suggest that one was a branch of the other. As Mohammed was related to the Jews [probably over the Quraysh / Qurayza], he became incandescent with rage [because he felt betrayed by his very own people] and he ordered the beheading of 600-900 Qurayza-Jews. They would suffer the full force of Mohammed's fury. The trauma inflicted on the Jews would forever shape Islam's negative political reputation as this kind of treatment became a political doctrine which is still valid today! The surviving wives and children were sold into slavery which became another dirty Islamic legacy that even influenced American history as the Muslims were at the other end of the slavery trading routes in Africa.]

This took place in Shawwal, 5 A.H. Yazid b. Ruman, client of the family of al-Zubayr b. Urwa b. al-Zubayr, and one whom I have no reason to suspect from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik, and Mohammed b. Kab al-Qurazi, and al-Zuhri, and Asim b. Umar b. Qatada, and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr and other traditionists of ours told me the following narrative, each contributing a part of it:

A number of Jews who had formed a party against the apostle, among whom were Sallam b. Abul-Huqayq al-Nadri, and Huyayy b. Akhtab al-Nadri and Kinana b. Abul-Huqayq al-Nadri, and Haudha b. Qays al-Waili, and Abu Ammar al-Waili with a number of (the) B. al-Nadir and (the) B. Wail went to Quraysh at Mecca and invited them to join them in an attack on the apostle so that they might get rid of him altogether. (The) Quraysh said, 'You, O Jews, are the first scripture people and know the nature of our dispute with Mohammed. Is our religion the best or is his?' They replied that certainly their religion was better than his and they had a better claim to be in the right. (It was about them that God sent down, 'Have you not considered those to whom a part of the scripture was given who believe in idols and false deities and say to those who disbelieve, These are more rightly guided than those who believe? These are they whom God hath cursed and he whom God has cursed you will find for him no helper' as far as His words, 'Or are they jealous of men because of what God from His bounty has brought to them?' i.e. prophecy. 'We gave the family of Abraham the scripture and wisdom and we gave them a great kingdom and some of them believed in it and some of them turned from it, and hell is sufficient for (their) burning.') (Koran 4.54 f.) These words rejoiced (the) Quraysh and they responded gladly to their invitation to fight the apostle, and they assembled and made their preparations. Then that company of Jews went off to Ghatafan of Qays Aylan and invited them to fight the apostle and told them that they would act with them and that Quraysh had followed their lead in the matter; so they too joined in with them (Tabari: and agreed to what they suggested).

(The) Quraysh marched under the leadership of Abu Sufyan b. Harb; and Ghatafan led by Uyyayna b. Hisn b. Hudhayfa b. Badr with (the) B. Fazara; and al-Harith b. Auf b. Abu Haritha al-Murri with (the) B. Murra; and Misar b. Rukhayla b. Nuwayra b. Tarif b. Suhma b. Abdullah b. Hilal b. Khalawa b. Ashja b. Rayth b. Ghatafan with those of his people from Ashja who followed him.

When the apostle heard of their intention he drew a trench about Medina and worked at it himself encouraging the Muslims with the hope of reward in heaven. The Muslims worked very hard with him, but the disaffected held back from them and began to hide their real object by working slackly and by stealing away to their families without the apostle's permission or knowledge. A Muslim who had to attend to an urgent matter would ask the apostle's permission to go and would get it, and when he had carried out his business he would return to the work he had left because of his desire to do what was right and his respect for the same. So God sent down concerning those believers: They only are the believers who believe in God and His apostle and when they are with him on a common work do not go away without asking his permission. Those who ask thy permission are they who believe in God and His apostle. And if they ask thy permission in some business of theirs, give leave to whom thou wilt of them and ask God's pardon for them. God is forgiving, merciful (Koran 24.62).'

Then God said of the disaffected who were stealing away from the work and leaving it without the prophet's permission, 'Do not treat the call of the apostle among you as if it were one of you calling upon another. God knows those of you who steal away to hide themselves. Let those who conspire to disobey his order beware lest trouble or a painful punishment befall them' (696). 'Verily to God belong heaven and earth. He knows what you are doing' the man who speaks the truth and the man who lies.

And (He knows) the day they will be returned to Him when He will tell them what they did, for God knows all things.' The Muslims worked at the trench until they had finished it, and they made a jingle about one of the Muslims called Juayl whom the apostle had named Amr, saying,

He changed his name from Juayl to Amr
And was a help to the poor man that day.

When they came to the word Amr the apostle said Amr, and when they came to 'help' he said 'help' (The prophet came in with the rhyming words of each hemistich [a half line of vers.]).

I have heard some stories about the digging of the trench in which there is an example of God's justifying His apostle and confirming his prophetic office, things which the Muslims saw with their eyes. Among these stories is one that I have heard that Jabir b. Abdullah used to relate: When they were working on the trench a large rock caused great difficulty, and they complained to the apostle. He called for some water and spat in it then he prayed as God willed him to pray; then he sprinkled the water on the rock. Those who were present said, 'By Him who sent him a prophet with the truth it was pulverised as though it were soft sand so that it could not resist axe or shovel.'

Said b. Mina told me that he was told that a daughter of Bashir b. Sad sister of al-Numan b. Bashir, said: 'My mother Amra me and gave me a handful of dates which she put in my garment and told me to take them to my father and my uncle Abdullah b. Rawaha for their food. As I went off looking for them I passed the apostle who called me and asked me what I had. When I told him that I was taking the dates to my father and my uncle he told me to give them to him. So I poured them into his hands but they did not fill them. Then he called for a garment which was laid out for him and threw the dates upon it so that they were scattered on it. Then he told the men to summon the diggers to lunch, and when they came they began to eat and the dates went on increasing until they turned away from them and they were still falling from the ends of the garment.'

On the same authority I was told: We worked with the apostle at the trench. Now I had a little ewe not fully fattened and I thought it would be a good thing to dress it for the apostle, so I told my wife to grind some barley and make some bread for us, and I killed the sheep and we roasted it for the apostle. When night came and the apostle was about to leave the trench-for we used to work at it all day and go home in the evening-I told him that we had prepared bread and mutton for him and that should like him to come with me to my house. It was only he that I wanted; but when I said this he ordered a crier to shout an invitation for al to come to my house. I said, 'To God we belong and to Him we return! (A pious exclamation in misfortunes.) However, he and the other men came and when he had sat down we produced the food and he blessed it and invoked the name of God over it Then he ate as did all the others. As soon as one lot had finished another lot came until the diggers turned from it.

I was told that Salman al-Farisi said: I was working with a pick in the trench where a rock gave me much trouble The apostle who was near at hand saw me hacking and saw how difficult the place was He dropped down into the trench and took the pick from my hand and gave such a blow that lightning showed beneath the pick. This happened a second and a third time. I said: 'O you, dearer than father or mother, what is the meaning of this light beneath your pick as you strike? He said: Did you really see that, Salman? The first means that God has opened up to me the Yaman (Yemenites); the second Syria and the west; and the third the east. One whom I do not suspect told me that Abu Hurayra used to say when these countries were conquered in the time of Umar and Uthman and after, 'Conquer where you will, by God, you have not conquered and to the resurrection day you will not conquer a city whose keys God had not given beforehand to Mohammed.'

When the apostle had finished the trench, Quraysh came and encamped where the torrent-beds of Ruma meet between al-Juruf and Zughaba with ten thousand of their black mercenaries and their followers from (the) B. Kinana and the people of Tihama. Ghatafan too came with their followers from Najd and halted at Dhanab Naqma towards the direction of Uhud. The apostle and the Muslims came out with three thousand men having Salat their backs. He pitched his camp there with the trench between him and his foes (697), and gave orders that the women and children were to be taken up into the forts.

The enemy of God Huyayy b. Akhtab al-Nadri went out to Kab b. Asad al-Qurazi who had made a treaty with the apostle. When Kab heard of Huyayy's coming he shut the door of his fort in his face, and when he asked permission to enter he refused to see him, saying that he was a man of ill omen and that he himself was in treaty with Mohammed and did not intend to go back on his word because he had always found him loyal and faithful. Then Huyayy accused him of shutting him out because he was unwilling to let him eat his com. This so enraged him that he opened his door. He said, 'Good heavens, Kab, I have brought you immortal fame and a great army. I have come with Quraysh with their leaders and chiefs which I have halted where the torrent-beds of Ruma meet; and Ghatafan with their leaders and chiefs which I have halted in Dhanab Naqma towards Uhud. They have made a firm agreement and promised me that they will not depart until we have made an end of Mohammed and his men.' Kab said: 'By God, you have brought me immortal shame and an empty cloud which has shed its water while it thunders and lightens with nothing in it. Woe to you Huyayy leave me (and Mohammed) as I am, for I have always found him loyal and faithful.' Huyayy kept on wheedling Kab until at last he gave way in giving him a solemn promise that if Quraysh and Ghatafan returned without having killed Mohammed he would enter his fort with him and await his fate. Thus Kab broke his promise and cut loose from the bond that was between him and the apostle.

When the apostle and the Muslims heard of this the apostle sent Sad b. Muadh b. al-Numan who was chief of Aus at the time, and Sad b. Ubada b. Dulaym, one of (the) B. Saida b. Kab b. Khazraj, chief of al-Khazraj at the time, together with Abdullah b. Rawaha brother of (the) B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj, and Khawwat b. Jubayr brother of (the) B. Amr b. Auf, and told them to go and see whether the report was true or not. If it is true give me an enigmatic message (See the excursus on the semantic development of the word lahn in J. Fück, Arabiya, Berlin, 1950, p. 132.) which I can understand, and do not undermine the people's confidence: and if they are loyal to their agreement speak out openly before the people.' They went forth and found the situation even more deplorable than they had heard; they spoke disparagingly of the apostle, saying, 'Who is the apostle of God? We have no agreement or undertaking with Mohammed.' Sad b. Muadh reviled them and they reviled him. He was a man of hasty temper and Sad b. Ubada said to him, 'Stop insulting them, for the dispute between us is too serious for recrimination.' Then the two Sads returned to the apostle and after saluting him said: Adal and al-Qara i.e. (It is) like the treachery of Adal and al-Qara towards the men of al-Raji, Khubayb and his friends. The apostle said Allah akbar! Be of good cheer, you Muslims.'

The situation became serious and fear was everywhere. The enemy came at them from above and below until the believers imagined vain things, (The language is borrowed from Koran 33.10.) and Disaffection was rife among the disaffected to the point that Muattib b. Qusayhr brother of (the) B. Amr b. Auf said, 'Mohammed used to promise us that we should eat the treasures of Chosroes and Caesar and today not one of us can feel safe in going to the privy!' (698). It reached such a point that Aus b. Qayzi, one of B. Haritha b. al-Harith, said to the apostle, 'Our houses are exposed to the enemy'—this he said before a large gathering of his people—'so let us go out and return to our home, for it is outside Medina.' The apostle and the polytheists remained twenty days and more, nearly a month, without fighting except for some shooting with arrows, and the siege.

When conditions pressed hard upon the people the apostle—according to what Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and one whom I do not suspect told me from Mohammed b. Muslim b. Ubaydullah b. Shihab al-Zuhri—sent to Uyayna b. Hisn b. Hudhayfa b. Badr and to al-Harith b. Auf b. Abu Haritha al-Murri who were leaders of Ghatafan and offered them a third of the dates of Medina on condition that they would go back with their followers and leave him and his men, so peace was made between them so far as the writing of a document. It was not signed and was not a definite peace, merely peace negotiations (and they did so). When the apostle wanted to act he sent to the two Sa'ds and told them of it and asked their advice. They said: Is it a thing you want us to do, or something God has ordered you to do which we must carry out? or is it something you are doing for us? He said: It is something I am doing for your sake. By God. I would not do it were it not that I have seen the Arabs have shot at you from one bow, and gathered against you from every side and I want to break their offensive against you! Sa'd b. MuAdh said: 'We and these people were polytheists and idolaters, not serving God nor knowing him, and they never hoped to eat a single date (of ours) except as guests or by purchase. Now, after God has honoured and guided us to Islam and made us famous by you, are we to give them our property? We certainly will not. We will give them nothing but the sword until God decide between us.' The apostle said: 'You shall have it so.' Sad took the paper and erased what was written, saying, 'Let them do their worst against us!'

The siege continued without any actual fighting, but some horsemen of Quraysh, among whom were Amr b. Abdu Wudd b. Abu Qays (699) brother of B. Amir b. Luayy; Ikrima b. Abu Jah!; Hubayra b. Abu Wahb, both of Makhzum; Pirar b. al-Khattab the poet, b. Mirdas brother of B. Muharib b. Fihir donned their armour and went forth on horseback to the stations of B. Kinana, saying, 'Prepare for fighting and then you will know who are true knights today.' They galloped forward until they stopped at the trench. When they saw it they exclaimed, 'This is a device which the Arabs have never employed!' (700).

Then they made for a narrow part of the trench and beat their horses so that they dashed through it and carried them into the swampy ground between the trench and Sal. Ali with some Muslims came out to hold the gap through which they had forced a passage against (the rest of) them and the horsemen galloped to meet them. Now Amr b. Abdu Wudd had fought at Badr until he was disabled by wounds, and so he had not been at Uhud. At the battle of the Trench he came out wearing a distinguishing mark to show his rank, and when he and his contingent stopped he challenged anyone to fight him. Ali accepted the challenge and said to him:

Amr, you swore by God that if any man of Quraysh offered you two alternatives you would accept one of them? 'Yes, I did,' he said. Ali replied, 'Then I invite you to God and His apostle and to Islam.' He said that he had no use for them. Ali went on, 'Then I call on you to dismount.' He replied, 'O son of my brother, I do not want to kill you.' Ali said, 'But I want to kill you.' This so enraged Amr that he got off his horse and hamstringed it and beat its face; then he advanced on Ali, and they fought, the one circling round the other. Ali killed him and their cavalry fled, bursting headlong in flight across the trench.

[I.S.N., ii.61: 'When Amr issued his challenge to single combat Ali got up clad in armour and asked the prophet's permission to fight him, but he told him to sit down, for it was Amr. Then Amr repeated his challenge taunting them and saying, 'Where is your garden of which you say that those you lose in battle will enter it? Can you not send a man to fight me?' Again Ali asked the prophet's permission to go out, and again he told him to sit down. Then Amr called out the third time:

I have become hoarse from shouting.
Is there not one among the lot of you who will answer my challenge?
I have stood here like a fighting champion
While the so-called brave are cowards.
I have always hastened to the front
Before the fight begins.
Bravery and generosity are in truth
The best qualities of a warrior.

Ali asked the prophet's permission to fight him, even if he were Amr, and he let him go. He marched towards him saying the while:

Do not be in a hurry. No weakling
Has come to answer your challenge.
A man of resolution and foresight.
Truth is the refuge of the successful.
I hope to make the keening women
Busy over your corpse
Through the blow of a spear
Whose memory will last while fights are talked of.

Amr asked him who he was, and when he told him he said: 'Let it be one of your uncles who is older than you, my nephew, for I do not want to shed your blood.' Ali answered, 'But I do want to shed your blood.' He became angry, and drew his sword which flashed like fire, and advanced in his anger (it is said that he was mounted). Ali said to him, 'How can I fight you when you are on a horse? Dismount and be on a level with me.' So he got off his horse and came at him and Ali advanced with his shield. Amr aimed a blow which cut deeply into the shield so that the sword stuck in it and struck his head. But Ali gave him a blow on the vein at the base of the neck and he fell to the ground. The dust rose and the apostle S. ii. 191 heard the cry, Allah Akbar' and knew that Ali had killed him. [Suhayli continues:] As he came towards the apostle smiling with joy Umar asked him if he had stripped him of his armour, for it was the best that could be found among the Arabs. He answered: 'When I had struck him down he turned his private parts towards me and I felt ashamed to despoil him and moreover he had said that he did not want to shed my blood because my father was a friend of his.']

[This incident is reported by Ibn Hisham, Suh., I.S.Nis., and al-Mawardi, 64, all of them saying that it was not reported by Ibn Hisham in the form given above. I.S. Nas says it was not in the riwaya of al-Bakkai. Mawardi adds the details (a) that the three challenges of Amr were issued on three successive days; (b) that he called out to Mohammed. His version seems to be the original, as there is more point in the taunt: 'What's the matter when none of you will advance to get his reward from his Lord (by being killed) or send an enemy to hell?' He ends: 'They circled round each other and the dust rose so that it hid them from sight. When it cleared away there was Ali wiping his sword on Amr's garments and he was slain.' Miwardi took this from a written source, because he says that Ibn Hisham narrated the story in his Maghazi.]

[Tabari 1476: With Amr were killed two men, Munabbih b. Uthman b. Ubayd b. ai-Sabbaq b. Abdul-Dar who was hit by an arrow and died in Mecca; and of (the) B. Makhzum Naufal b. Abdullah b. al-Mughira who had stormed the trench and rolled down into it and they stoned him. He called out, 'O Arabs, Death is better than this,' so Ali went down to him and dispatched him. The Muslims got possession of his body and asked the apostle to let them sell his effects. He told them that he had no use for his effects or the price they would fetch, and it was their affair; and he left them a free hand.]

Ali said concerning that:

In his folly he fought for the stone pillars (i.e. the idols.)

While I fought for the Lord of Mohammed rightly.
I rejoiced when I left him prone
Like a stump between sand and rocks.

I forbore to take his garments (The point of this is made clear in the extract from Ibn Ishaq's Maghazi and Tabari's quotation from Ibn Ishaq As the Sira of Ibn Hisham stands it is left in the air.)

Though had I been the vanquished he would have taken mine.

Do not imagine, you confederates, that God
Will desert His religion and His prophet (701).

Ikrima b. Abu Jahl threw away his spear as he was running from Amr, so Hassan b. Thabit said:

As he fled he threw his spear to us.
Perhaps, Ikrima, you have not done such a thing before?

As you turned your back you ran like an ostrich
Turning neither to right nor left.
You did not turn your back as a human being would,
The back of your neck was like a young hyaena's (702).

Abu Layla Abdullah b. Sahl b. Abdul-Rahman b. Sahl al-Ansari, brother of (the) B. Haritha, told me that Aisha was in the fort of (the) B. Haritha on that day. It was one of the strongest forts of Medina. The mother of Sad b. Muadh was with her. Aisha said: This was before the veil had been imposed upon us. Sad went by wearing a coat of mail so short that the whole of his forearm was exposed. He hurried along carrying a lance, saying the while,

Wait a little! Let Hamal* see the fight.

What matters death when the time is right?

(* The saying is proverbial. The readings vary between Hamal and Jamal, and the commentators are not agreed on the reading or the man intended.)

His mother said, "Hurry up, my boy, for by God you are late." I said to her, "I wish that Sad's coat of mail were longer than it is", for I was afraid for him where the arrow actually hit him. Sad was shot by an arrow which severed the vein of his arm. The man who shot him, according to what Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me, was Hibban b. Qays b. al-Ariqa, one of B. Amir b. Luayy. When he hit him he said, "Take that from me, the son of al-Ariqa." (She was Khadija's grandmother according to some.) Sad said to him, "May God make your face sweat (arraq) in hell. O God, if for the war with (the) Quraysh is to be prolonged spare me for it, for there is no people whom I want to fight more than those who insulted your apostle, called him a liar, and drove him out. O God, seeing that you have appointed war between us and them grant me martyrdom and do not let me die until I have seen my desire upon (the) B. Qurayza."

One whom I do not suspect told me from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik that he used to say: 'The man who hit Sad that day was Abu Usama al-Jushami, an ally of (the) B. Makhzum. This Abu Usama composed an ode about it with reference to Ikrima b. Abu Jahl:

O Ikrima, why did you blame me when you said
Khalid be your ransom in the forts of Medina?
Am I not he who inflicted a bloody wound on Sad?
The vein where the elbow bends gushed with his blood.

Sad died of it and the grey-haired matrons
And the high-breasted virgins made loud lamentation.

You are the one who protected him when Ubayda (It this Ubayda b. Jibir who was slain at Ubad?)

Called all of them in his stress,
What time some of them turned away from him
And others made off in their terror (Or, reading marghub, 'made off to avoid trouble').
God knows best about that' (703).

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr from his father Abbad told me as follows: Safiya d. Abdul-Muttalib was in Fari, the fort of Hassan b. Thabit. She said: 'Hassan was with us there with the women and children, when a Jew came along and began to go round the fort. The B. Qurayza had gone to war and cut our communications with the apostle, and there was no one to protect us while the apostle and the Muslims were at the enemy's throats unable to leave them to come to us if anyone turned up. I told Hassan that he could see this Jew going round the fort and I feared that he would discover our weakness and inform the Jews who were in our rear while the apostle and his companions were too occupied to help us, so he must go down and kill him. "God forgive you," he said.

"You know quite well that I am not the man to do that." When he said that and I saw that no help was to be expected from him I girded myself (Or, reading itaartu, 'fastened my veil'.) and took a club, and went down to him from the fort above and hit him with the club until I killed him. This done I went back to the fort and told Hassan to go down and strip him: I could not do it myself because he was a man. He said, "I have no need to strip him, Bint Abdul-Muttalib."

(The commentators do not like this story to the discredit of one of the prophet's companions. Suhayli says that the learned reject the tradition because the isnad (hadith text) is broken off. Further, had the story of Hassan's cowardice been true the poets who satirised him would have mentioned it. As they did not the tradition must be weak. On the other hand, if it is sound, it may be that riasan was ill on that day and could not fight. Al-Zarqani, who believes the story, discounts the argument that rival poets would have used the story had it been true by saying that the fact that he was a companion of the prophet saved him, and their silence on the subject is one of the 'marks of prophecy'.)

As God has described, (Koran Sura 33.10.) the apostle and his companions remained in fear and difficulty when the enemy came on them from above and below. Then Nuaym b. Masud b. Amir b. Unayf b. Thalaba b. Qunfud b. Hilal b. Khalawa b. Ashja b. Rayth b. Ghatafan came to the apostle saying that he had become a Muslim though his own people did not know of it, and let him give him what orders he would. The apostle said: 'You are only one man among us, so go and awake distrust among the enemy to draw them off us if you can, for war is deceit.' Thereupon Nuaym went off to (the) B. Qurayza with whom he had been a boon companion in heathen days, and reminded them of his affection for them and of the special tie between them. When they admitted that they did not suspect him he said: '(The) Quraysh and (the) Ghatafan are not like you: the land is your land, your property, your wives, and your children are in it; you cannot leave it and go somewhere else. Now (the) Quraysh and (the) Ghatafan have come to fight Mohammed and his companions and you have aided them against him, but their land, their property, and their wives are not here, so they are not like you. If they see an opportunity they will make the most of it; but if things go badly they will go back to their own land and leave you to face the man in your country and you will not be able to do so if you are left alone. So do not fight along with these people until you take hostages from their chiefs who will remain in your hands as security that they will fight Mohammed with you until you make an end of him.' The Jews said that this was excellent advice.

Then he went to (the) Quraysh and said to Abu Sufyan b. Harb and his company: 'You know my affection for you and that I have left Mohammed. Now I have heard something which I think it my duty to tell you of by way of warning, but regard it as confidential.' When they said that they would, he continued: 'Mark my words, the Jews have regretted their action in opposing Mohammed and have sent to tell him so, saying: "Would you like us to get hold of some chiefs of the two tribes, (the) Quraysh and (the) Ghatafan, and hand them over to you so that you can cut their heads off? Then we can join you in exterminating the rest of them." He has sent word back to accept their offer; so if the Jews send to you to demand hostages, do not send them a single man.'

Then he went to (the) Ghatafan and said: 'You are my stock and my family, the dearest of men to me, and I do not think that you can suspect me.'

They agreed that he was above suspicion and so he told the same story as he had told (the) Quraysh.

On the night of the sabbath of Shawwal A.H. it came about by God's action on behalf of His apostle that Abu Sufyan and the chiefs of (the) Ghatafan sent Ikrima b. Abu Jahl to (the) B. Qurayza with some of their number saying that they had no permanent camp, that the horses and camels were dying; therefore they must make ready for battle and make an end of Mohammed once and for all. They replied that it was the sabbath, a day on which they did nothing, and it was well known what had happened to those of their people who had violated the sabbath. 'Moreover we will not fight Mohammed along with you until you give us hostages whom we can hold as security until we make an end of Mohammed; for we fear that if the battle goes against you and you suffer heavily you will withdraw at once to your country and leave us while the man is in our country, and we cannot face him alone.' When the messengers returned with their reply Quraysh and Ghatafan said (Now you know) that what Nuaym told you is the truth; so send to B. Qurayza that we will not give them a single man, and if they want to fight let them come out and fight. Having received this message (the) B. Qurayza said: 'What Nuaym told you is the truth. The people are bent on fighting and if they get an opportunity they will take advantage of it; but if they do not they will withdraw to their own country and leave us to face this man here. So send word to them that we will not fight Mohammed with them until they give us hostages.' (The) Quraysh and (the) Ghatafan refused to do so, and God sowed distrust between them, and sent a bitter cold wind against them in the winter nights which upset their cooking-pots and overthrew their tents.

When the apostle learned of their dispute and how God had broken up their alliance he called Hudhayfa b. al-Yaman and sent him to them to see what the army was doing at night.

Yazid b. Ziyad told me from Mohammed b. Kab b. al-Qurazi: A man of Kufa said to Hudhayfa, 'Did you really see the apostle and were you his companion?' When he replied Yes, he asked what they used to do, and he said that they used to live a hard life. He said, 'By God, if we had lived in his day we would not have allowed him to set foot on the ground, but would have carried him on our shoulders.' Hudhayfa said, I can see us with the apostle at the trench as he prayed for a part of the night and then turned to us and said, "Who will get up and see for us what the army is doing and then return—the apostle stipulating that he should return—I will ask God that he shall be my companion in paradise." Not a single man got up because of his great fear, hunger, and the severe cold. When no one got up the apostle called me, and I had to get up when he called me. He told me to go and see what the army was doing and not to do anything else (i.e. not to act on his own initiative.) until I returned to him. So I went out and mingled with the army while the wind and God's troops were dealing with them as they did, leaving neither pot, nor fire, nor tent standing firm. Abu Sufyan got up and said, "O Quraysh, let every man see who is sitting next him." So I took hold of the man who was at my side and asked him who he was and he said So-and-so.

Then Abu Sufyan said: "O Quraysh, we are not in a permanent camp; the horses and camels are dying; the B. Qurayza have broken their word to us and we have heard disquieting reports of them. You can see the violence of the wind which leaves us neither cooking-pots, nor fire, nor tents to count on. Be off, for I am going!" Then he went to his camel which was hobbled, mounted it, and beat it so that it got up on its three legs; by God its hobble was not freed until it was standing (A. G.: The Arabs still hobble their camels when they are kneeling with their legs folded beneath them. One of the forelegs is tied by the halter in the folded position. If the camel gets up before the hobble is undone one leg is perforce doubled up and cannot be put to the ground.). Were it not that the apostle had enjoined me not to do anything else until I returned to him, if I wished I could have killed him with an arrow.

I returned to the apostle as he was standing praying in a wrapper belonging to one of his wives (704). When he saw me he made me come in to sit at his feet and threw the end of the wrapper over me; then he bowed and prostrated while I was in it (Tabari: And I disturbed him). When he had finished I told him the news. When Ghatafan heard of what Quraysh had done they broke up and returned to their own country.'

In the morning the apostle and the Muslims left the trench and returned to Medina, laying their arms aside.

According to what al-Zuhri told me, at the time of the noon prayers (the Archangel) Gabriel came to the apostle wearing an embroidered turban and riding on a mule with a saddle covered with a piece of brocade. He asked the apostle if he had abandoned fighting, and when he said that he had he said that the angels had not yet laid aside their arms and that he had just come from pursuing the enemy. 'God commands you, Mohammed, to go to (the) B. Qurayza. I am about to go to them to shake their stronghold.'

The prophet ordered it to be announced that none should perform the afternoon prayer until after he reached (the) B. Qurayza (705). The apostle sent Ali forward with his banner and the men hastened to it. Ali advanced until when he came near the forts he heard insulting language used of the apostle. He returned to meet the apostle on the road and told him that it was not necessary for him to come near those rascals. The apostle said, 'Why? I think you must have heard them speaking ill of me,' and when Ali said that that was so he added, if they saw me they would not talk in hat fashion.' When the apostle approached their forts he said, 'You mothers of monkeys, has God disgraced you and brought His vengeance upon you?' They replied, 'O Abul-Qasim, you are not a barbarous person.'

The apostle passed by a number of his companions in al-baurayn before he got to (the) B. Qurayza and asked if anyone had passed them. They replied that Dihya b. Khalifa al-Kalbi had passed upon a white mule with a saddle covered' with a piece of brocade. He said, 'That was Gabriel who has been sent to (the) B. Qurayza to shake their castles and strike terror to their hearts.'

When the apostle came to (the) B. Qurayza he halted by one of their wells near their property called The Well of Ana (706). The men joined him. Some of them came after the last evening prayer not having prayed the afternoon prayer because the apostle had told them not to do so until he got to (the) B. Qurayza. They had been much occupied with warlike preparations and they refused to pray until they came to (the) B. Qurayza in accordance with his instructions and they prayed the afternoon prayer there after the last evening prayer. God did not blame them for that in His book, nor did the apostle reproach them. My father Ishaq b. Yasar told me this tradition from Mabad b. Malik al-Ansari.

The apostle besieged them for twenty-five nights until they were sore pressed and God cast terror into their hearts.

Now Huyayy b. Akhtab had gone with (the) B. Qurayza into their forts when (the) Quraysh and Ghatafan had withdrawn and left them, to keep his word to Kab b. Asad; and when they felt sure that the apostle would not leave them until he had made an end of them Kab b. Asad said to them: O Jews you can see what has happened to you; I offer you three alternatives.

Take which you please.' (1st) We will follow this man and accept him as true, for by God it has become plain to you that he is a prophet who has been sent and that it is he that you find mentioned in your scripture; and then your lives, your property, your women and children will be saved. They said, 'We will never abandon the laws of the Torah and never change it for another.' (L. H.: This was the time when Mohammed positioned himself above the Laws of Moses, beginning to make his own laws and implement political doctrines into Islam of which some were unacceptable for Jews and Christians. Here the ways of Mohammed and the Jewish communities went further apart. And here began also Mohammed's hatred against the Jews, whom he used to regard as his forefathers. The more wasteful battles he had to fight against the Jewish Messianic Movement the more he became incandescent with rage and hatred against his forefathers. His Jew-hatred can be felt in every chapter of the Koran that referred, with its ruthless anti-Jewish propaganda, to Mohammed's time in Medina.) He said, 'Then if you will not accept this suggestion (2nd) let us kill our wives and children and send men with their swords drawn to Mohammed and his companions leaving no encumbrances behind us, until God decides between us and Mohammed. If we perish, we perish, and we shall not leave children behind us to cause us anxiety. If we conquer we can acquire other wives and children.' They said, 'Should we kill these poor creatures? What would be the good of life when they were dead?' He said, 'Then if you will not accept this suggestion (3rd) tonight is the eve of the sabbath and it may well be that Mohammed and his companions will feel secure from us then, so come down, perhaps we can take Mohammed and his companions by surprise.' They said: Are we to profane our sabbath and do on the sabbath what those before us of whom you well know did and were turned into apes?' He answered, 'Not a single man among you from the day of your birth has ever passed a night resolved to do what he knows ought to be done.'

Then they sent to the apostle saying, 'Send us Abu Lubaba b. Abdul-Mundhir, brother of (the) B. Amr b. Auf (for they were allies of al-Aus), that we may consult him.' So the apostle sent him to them, and when they saw him they got up to meet him. The women and children went up to him weeping in his face, and he felt sorry for them. They said, 'Oh Abu Lubaba, do you think that we should submit to Mohammed's judgement?' He said, 'Yes,' and pointed with his hand to his throat, signifying slaughter. Abu Lubaba said, 'My feet had not moved from the spot before I knew that I had been false to God and His apostle.' Then he left them and did not go to the apostle but bound himself to one of the pillars in the mosque saying, 'I will not leave this place until God forgives me for what I have done,' and he promised God that he would never go to (the) B. Qurayza and would never be seen in a town in which he had betrayed God and His apostle (707).

When the apostle heard about him, for he had been waiting for him a long time, he said, 'If he had come to me I would have asked forgiveness for him, but seeing that he behaved as he did I will not let him go from his place until God forgives him.' Yazid b. Abdullah b. Qusayt told me that the forgiveness of Abu Lubaba came to the apostle at dawn while he was in the house of Umm Salama. She said: 'At dawn I heard the apostle laugh and I said: 'Why did you laugh? May God make you laugh!' He replied, 'Abu Lubaba has been forgiven.' She said, 'Cannot I give him the good news?' and when he said that she could she went and stood at the door of her room (this was before the veil had been prescribed for women. The prophet's house was next door to the mosque where Abu Lubaba had tied himself.) and said, 'O Abu Lubaba, rejoice, for God has forgiven you'; and men rushed out to set him free. He said, 'No, not until the apostle frees me with his own hand.' When the apostle passed him when he was going out to morning prayer he set him free (708).

Thalaba b. Saya, Usayd his brother, and Asad b. Ubayd of (the) B. Hadl who were not related to B. Qurayza or B. al-Nadlr (their pedigree is far above that), accepted Islam the night on which (the) B. Qurayza surrendered to the apostle's judgement.

On that night Amr b. Suda al-Qurazi went out and passed the apostle's guards commanded that night by Mohammed b. Maslama who challenged him. Now Amr had refused to join (the) B. Qurayza in their treachery towards the apostle, saying, 'I will never behave treacherously towards Mohammed.' When Mohammed b. Maslama recognized him he said, 'O God, do not deprive me (of the honour) of setting right the errors of the noble' and let him go his way. He went as far as the door of the apostle's mosque (Wüstenfeld has 'Until he pawed the night in') in Medina that night; then he vanished, and it is not known to this day where he went. When the apostle was told he said, 'That is a man whom God delivered because of his faithfulness.' Some people allege that he was bound with a rotten rope along with the captives of (the) B. Qurayza when they submitted to the apostle's judgement, and his old rope was found cast away none knowing whither he went and the apostle then said those words. God knows what really happened.

In the morning they submitted to the apostle's judgement and al-Aus leapt up and said, 'O Apostle, they are our allies, not allies of Khazraj, and you know how you recently treated the allies of our brethren.' Now the apostle had besieged (the) B. Qaynuqa who were allies of al-Khazraj and when they submitted to his judgement Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul had asked him for them and he gave them to him; so when al-Aus spoke thus the apostle said: 'Will you be satisfied, O Aus, if one of your own number pronounces judgement on them?' When they agreed he said that Sad b. Muadh was the man. The apostle had put Sad in a tent belonging to a woman of Aslam called Rufayda inside his mosque. She used to nurse the wounded and see to those Muslims who needed care. The apostle had told his people when Sad had been wounded by an arrow at the battle of the Trench to put him in Rufayda's tent until he could visit him later. When the apostle appointed him umpire in the matter of (the) B. Qurayza, his people came to him and mounted him on a donkey on which they had put a leather cushion, he being a corpulent man. As they brought him to the apostle they said, 'Deal kindly with your friends, for the apostle has made you umpire for that very purpose.' When they persisted he said, 'The time has come for Sad in the cause of God, not to care for any man's censure.' Some of his people who were there went back to the quarter of (the) B. Abdul-Ashhal and announced to them the death of (the) B. Qurayza before Sad got to them, because of what they had heard him say.

When Sad reached the apostle and the Muslims the apostle told them to get up to greet their leader. The muhajirs of (the) Quraysh thought that the apostle meant the Ansar, while the latter thought that he meant everyone, so they got up and said 'O Abu Amr, the apostle has entrusted to you the affair of your allies that you may give judgement concerning them.' Sad asked, 'Do you covenant by Allah that you accept the judgement I pronounce on them? They said Yes, and he said, 'And is it incumbent on the one who is here?' (looking) in the direction of the apostle not mentioning him out of respect, and the apostle answered Yes. Sad said, 'Then I give judgement that the men should be killed, the property divided, and the women and children taken as captives.'

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me from Abdul-Rahman b. Amr b. Sad b. Muadh from Alqama b. Waqqas al-Laythi that the apostle said to Sad, 'You have given the judgement of Allah above the seven heavens' (709).

Then they surrendered, and the apostle confined them in Medina in the quarter of d. al-Harith, a woman of (the) B. al-Najjar. Then the apostle went out to the market of Medina (which is still its market today) and dug trenches in it. Then he sent for them and struck off their heads in those trenches as they were brought out to him in batches. Among them was the enemy of Allah Huyayy b. Akhtab and Kab b. Asad their chief. There were 600 or 700 in all, though some put the figure as high as 800 or 900. As they were being taken out in batches to the apostle they asked Kab what he thought would be done with them. He replied, 'Will you never understand? Do you not see that the summoner never stops and those who are taken away do not return? By Allah it is death! This went on until the apostle made an end of them.'

Huyayy was brought out wearing a flowered robe (710) in which he had made holes about the size of the finger-tips in every part so that it should not be taken from him as spoil. (A variant 'so that none should wear it after him' is worth mention.) with his hands bound to his neck by a rope. When he saw the apostle he said, 'By God, I do not blame myself for opposing you, but he who forsakes God will be forsaken.' Then he went to the men and said, 'God's command is right. A book and a decree, and massacre have been written against the Sons of Israel.' Then he sat down and his head was struck off.

Jabal b. Jawwal al-Thalabi said:

Ibn Akhtab did not blame himself
But he who forsakes God will be forsaken.
He fought until he justified himself
And struggled to the utmost in pursuit of glory.

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr told me from Urwa b. al-Zubayr that Aisha said: 'Only one of their women was killed. She was actually with me and was talking with me and laughing immoderately as the apostle was killing her men in the market when suddenly an unseen voice called her name. 'Good heavens,' I cried, 'what is the matter?' I am to be killed,' she replied. 'What for?' I asked. 'Because of something I did,' she answered. She was taken away and beheaded. Aisha used to say, 'I shall never forget my wonder at her good spirits and her loud laughter when all the time she knew that she would be killed' (711).

Ibn Shihab al-Zuhri told me that Thabit b. Qays b. al-Shamma had gone to al-Zabir b. Bata al-Qurazi who was Abu Abdul-Rahman. Al-Zabir had spared

Thabit during the pagan era. One of al-Zabir's sons told me that he had spared him on the day of Buath, having captured him and cut off his forelock and then let him go. Thabit came to him (he was then an old man) and asked him if he knew him, to which he answered, 'Would a man like me not recognise a man like you?' He said, 'I want to repay you for your service to me.' He said, 'The noble repays the noble.' Thabit went to the apostle and told him that al-Zabir had spared his life and he wanted to repay him for it, and the apostle said that his life would be spared. When he returned and told him that the apostle had spared his life he said, 'What does an old man without family and without children want with life?' Thabit went again to the apostle, who promised to give him his wife and children. When he told him he said, 'How can a household in the Hijaz live without property?' Thabit secured the apostle's promise that his property would be restored and came and told him so, and he said, 'O Thabit, what has become of him whose face was like a Chinese mirror in which the virgins of the tribe could see themselves, Kab b. Asad?' 'Killed,' he said. And what of the prince of the Desert and the Sown, Huyayy b. Akhtab?' 'Killed.' And what of our vanguard when we attacked and our rearward when we fled (Tabari: returned to the charge), Azzal b. Samawal?' 'Killed.' And what of the two assemblies?' meaning (the) B. Kab b. Qurayza and (the) B. Amr b. Qurayza. 'Killed.' He said, 'Then I ask of you, Thabit, by my claim on you that you join me with my people, for life holds no joy now that they are dead, and I cannot bear to wait another moment (Lit. 'the time it takes a man to pour a bucket of water into the trough and return the bucket'.) to meet my loved ones.' So Thabit went up to him and struck off his head.

When Abu Bakr heard of his words 'Until I meet my loved ones' he said, 'Yes, by Allah he will meet them in hell for ever and ever' (712).

(Tabari 1496: Thabit b. Qays said concerning that, mentioning al-Zabir b. Bata:

My obligation is ended; I was noble and persistent
When others swerved from steadfastness.
Zabir had a greater claim than any man on me
And when his wrists were bound with cords
I went to the apostle that I might free him.
The apostle was a very sea of generosity to us.)

The apostle had ordered that every adult of theirs should be killed.

Shuba b. al-Hajjaj told me from Abdul-Malik b. Umayr from Atiya al-Qurazi: The apostle had ordered that every adult of (the) B. Qurayza should be killed. I was a lad and they found that I was not an adult and so they let me go.

Avyub b. Abduul-Rahman b. Abdullah b. Abu Sasaa brother of (the) B. Adiy b. al-Najjar told me that Salma d. Qays, mother of al-Mundhir sister of Salit b. Qays—she was one of the maternal aunts of the apostle who had prayed with him both towards Jerusalem and towards Mecca and had sworn the allegiance of women to him—asked him for Rifaa b. Samawal al-Qurazi who was a grown man who had sought refuge with her, and who used to know them. She said that he had alleged that he would pray and eat camel's flesh. So he gave him to her and she saved his life.

Then the apostle divided the property, wives, and children of (the) B. Qurayza among the Muslims, and he made known on that day the shares of horse and men, and took out the fifth. A horseman got three shares, two for the horse and one for his rider. A man without a horse got one share. On the day of (the) B. Qurayza there were thirty-six horses. It was the first booty on which lots were cast and the fifth was taken. According to its precedent and what the apostle did the divisions were made, and it remained the custom for raids.

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

Then the apostle sent Sad b. Zayd al-Ansari brother of b. Abdul-Ashhal with some of the captive women of (the) B. Qurayza to Najd and he sold them for horses and weapons.

The apostle had chosen one of their women for himself, Rayhana d. Amr b. Khunafa, one of the women of (the) B. Amr b. Qurayza, and she remained with him until she died, in his power. The apostle had proposed to marry her and put the veil on her, but she said: 'Nay, leave me in your power, for that will be easier for me and for you.' So he left her. She had shown repugnance towards Islam when she was captured and clung to Judaism. So the apostle put her aside and felt some displeasure. While he was with his companions he heard the sound of sandals behind him and said, 'This is Thalaba b. Saya coming to give me the good news of Rayhana's acceptance of Islam' and he came up to announce the fact. This gave him pleasure.

God sent down concerning the trench and (the) B. Qurayza the account which is found in the sura of the Confederates (Koran 33) in which He mentioned their trial and His kindness to them, and His help when He removed that from them after one of the disaffected had said what he did: 'O you who believe, remember God's favour to you when armies came against you, and We sent against them a wind and armies you could not see, and God is a seer of what you do.' The armies were Quraysh, and Ghatafan, and (the) B. Qurayza. The armies which God sent with the wind were the angels. God said, 'When they came at you from above you and below you, and when eyes grew wild and hearts reached to the throats and you thought vain things about God.' Those who came at you from above were (the) B. Qurayza: those from below were Quraysh and Ghatafan. 'There were the believers tested and shaken with a mighty shock. And when the disaffected and those in whose hearts was a disease were saying What God and His apostle promised us is naught but a delusion refers to the words of Muattib b. Qushayr. And when a party of them said, O people of Yathrib, there is no standing for you, so turn back. And some of them sought the prophet's permission saying Our houses are exposed, and they were not exposed. They wished only to run away' refers to the words of Aus b. Qayzi and those of his people who shared his opinion. And if it had been entered from its sides', i.e. Medina (713).

'Then if they had been invited to rebellion', i.e. the return to polytheism, 'they would have complied and would have hesitated but a moment. Yet they had sworn to Allah beforehand that they would not turn their backs. An oath to God must be answered for.' They were the B. Haritha. They were the men who thought to desert on the day of Uhud with (the) B. Salama when both thought to desert on the day of Uhud. Then they swore to God that they would never do the like again and he reminded them of what they had taken on themselves. 'Say, Flight will not avail you if you flee from death or killing, and then you will enjoy comfort but for a little. Say, Who can preserve you from Allah if He intends evil towards you, or intends mercy. They will not find that they have any friend or helper but Allah. Allah knows those of you who hinder,' i.e. the disaffected people. And those who say to their brethren, Come to us and they come not to battle save a little,' i.e. for a moment to make a pretence of sincerity, 'sparing of their help to you,' i.e. because of their grudging nature. 'But when fear comes you see them looking at you with rolling eyes like one in a deadly faint,' i.e. thinking it dreadful and terrified of it. 'Then when their fear departs they scald you with sharp tongues,' i.e. with talk about what does not please you because their hope is in this life; hope of (future) reward does not move them, for they fear death with the dread of him who has no hope in a future life (714). 'They think that the confederates have not gone away,' i.e. (the) Quraysh and (the) Ghatafan, And if the confederates should come again they would like to be in the desert with the Bedouin asking for news of you and if they were among you they would fight but little.'

Then He addressed the believers and said, In God's apostle you have a fine example for one who hopes for Allah and the last day,' i.e. that they should not prefer themselves to him and not desire to be in a place where he is not.

Then He mentioned the believers and their truth and their belief in what God promised them of trial by which He tested them and He said, And when the believers saw the confederates they said: This is what God and His apostle promised us, and God and His apostle are true. It did but increase their faith and submission,' i.e. endurance of trial and submission to the decree and belief in the truth of what God and His apostle had promised them. Then He said: 'Some of the believers are men who are true to what they covenanted with Allah and some of them have fulfilled their vow in death,' i.e. finished their work and returned to their Lord like those who sought martyrdom at Badr and Uhud (715).

And some of them are still waiting,' i.e. for the help which Allah promised them and the martyrdom like that which befell his companions. God said: And they have not altered in the least,' i.e. they did not doubt nor hesitate in their religion, and did not change it for another. 'That God may reward the true men for their truth and punish the disaffected if He will, or repent towards them. God is forgiving, merciful. And Allah turned back those who disbelieved in their wrath,' i.e. (the) Quraysh and Ghatafan. 'They gained no good. God averted battle from the believers, and Allah is strong, mighty. And He brought down those of the Scripture people who helped them,' i.e. (the) B. Qurayza, 'from their strongholds' the forts and castles in which they were (716). And he cast terror into their hearts; some you slew and some you captured,' i.e. he killed the men and captured the women and children. And caused you to inherit their land and their dwellings, and their property, and a land you had not trod,' i.e. Khaybar. 'For Allah can do all things.'

When the affair of (the) B. Qurayza was disposed of, Sad's wound burst open and he died a martyr therefrom.

Muadh b. Rifea al-Zuraqi told me: Anyone you like from the men of my people told me that Gabriel came to the apostle when Sad was taken, in the middle of the night wearing an embroidered turban, and said, 'O Mohammed, who is this dead man for whom the doors of heaven have been opened and at whom the throne shook?' The apostle got up quickly dragging his garment as he went to Sad and found him already dead.

Abdullah b. Abu Bakr told me from Amra d. Abdul-Rahman: As Aisha was returning from Mecca with Usayd b. Hudayr he heard of the death of a wife of his, and showed considerable grief. Aisha said: 'God forgive you, O Abu Yahya, will you grieve over a woman when you have lost the son of your uncle, for whom the throne shook?'

One I do not suspect told me from al-Hasan al-Basri: Sad was a fat man and when the men carried him they found him light. Some of the disaffected said, 'He was a fat man and we have never carried a lighter bier than his.' When the apostle heard of this he said, 'He had other carriers as well. By Him Who holds my life in His hand the angels rejoiced at (receiving) the spirit of Sad and the throne shook for him.'

Muadh b. Riffa told me from Mahmud b. Abdul-Rahman b. Amr b. al-Jamuh from Jabir b. Abdullah: When Sad was buried as we were with the apostle he said Subhdnallah and we said it with him. Then he said Allah akbar and the men said it with him. When they asked him why he had said Subhdnallah he said 'The grave was constricted on this good man until God eased him from it' (717).

Of Sad one of the Ansar said:

We have never heard of the throne of God
Shaking for any dead man but Sa'd Abu Amr.

His mother said when his bier was being carried, as she was weeping (718):

Alas Umm Sad for Sad the brave and bold,
Leader glorious, knight ever ready,
Stepping into the breach, cutting heads to pieces.
(This line is omitted by Wüstenfeld.)

The apostle said, 'Every wailing woman lies except the one who wept Sad b. Muadh.

Only six Muslims found martyrdom at the battle of the Trench: Of (the) B. Abdul-Ashhal: Sad b. Muadh; Anas b. Aus b. Atik b. Amr, and Abdullah b. Sahl. 3.

Of (the) B. Jusham b. al-Khazraj of the clan B. Salima: al-Tufayl b. al-Numan and Thalaba b. Ghanama. 2.

Of (the) B. al-Najjar of the clan B. Dinar: Kab b. Zayd whom a random arrow hit and slew (719). 1.

Three polytheists were killed:
Of (the) B. Abdul-Dar: Munabbih b. Uthman b. Ubayd b. al-Sabbaq hit by an arrow and died in Mecca (720).

Of (The) B. Makhzum b. Yaqaqa: Naufal b. Abdullah b. al-Mughira. They asked the apostle to let them buy his body he having stormed the trench and become trapped in it and killed, and the Muslims got possession of his body. The apostle said that they had no use for his body and did not want to be paid for it, and he let them have it (721).

Of (the) B. Amir b. Luayy of the clan B. Malik b. Hisi: Amr b. Abdu Wudd whom Ali killed (722).

On the day of (the) Qurayza there were martyred of the Muslims of (the) B. al-Harith b. al-Khazraj: Khallad b. Suwayd b. Thalaba b. Amr. A millstone was thrown on him and inflicted a shattering wound. They allege that the apostle said, 'He will have the reward of two martyrs.'

Abu Sinan b. Mihsan b. Hurthan brother of (the) B. Asad b. Khuzayma died while the apostle was besieging (the) B. Qurayza and was buried in the cemetery of B. Qurayza which is still used today. They buried those who died in Islam there.

When the defenders of the trench left it I have heard that the apostle said: '(The) Quraysh will not attack you after this year, but you will attack them.'

Quraysh did not attack them after that; it was he who attacked them until God conquered Mecca by him.

POETRY ABOUT THE TRENCH AND THE B. QURAYZA

(Muslims were so enchanted by cutting off limbs and heads that they composed a large ode of lyrics and poems, narrating the battle and the execution in the most colourful details.)

Dirar b. al-Khattab b. Mirdas brother of (the) B. Muharib b. Fihri said about the battle of the Trench:

Many a sympathetic woman had doubts about us*,
Yet we led a great force, crushing all before us.

(* If this poem is really Dirar's it must have been composed after Sura 33, for it uses the language of verse 10. It is hardly likely that a Muslim would have boasted of the doings of Quraysh, or that a polytheist would have borrowed language from the Koran. Therefore it would seem to be a sort of literary Aunt Sally, put up to be assailed in the poems that follow.)

Its size was as Uhud
When one could see its whole extent.
You could see the long mail upon the warriors
And their strong leather shields
And the fine steeds like arrows
Which we discharged against the sinful wrongdoers.
When we charged the one the other,
'Twas (it was) as though at the gap in the trench men would shake hands.

You could not see a rightly guided man among them

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

Though they said: Are we not in the right?
 We besieged them for one whole month
 Standing over them like conquerors.
 Night and morning every day
 We attacked them fully armed;
 Sharp swords in our hands
 Cutting through heads and skulls.
 'Twas (it was) as though their gleam when they were drawn
 When they flashed in the hands of those that drew them
 Was the gleam of lightning illuminating the night
 So that one could see the clouds clearly.
 But for the trench which protected them
 We would have destroyed them one and all.
 But there it stood in front of them,
 And they took refuge in it from fear of us.
 Though we withdrew we left
 Sa'd hostage to death in front of their tents.
 When darkness came you could hear the keening women
 Raising their lament over Sad.
 Soon we shall visit you again
 Helping one another as we did before
 With a company of Kinana armed
 Like lions of the jungle protecting their dens.
 Kab b. Malik brother of (the) B. Salima answered
 him:
 Many a woman will ask of our fight.
 Had she been there she would have seen we were steadfast.
 We were steadfast trusting in Him;
 We saw nothing equal to God in the hour of our danger.
 We have a prophet, a true helper,
 By whom we can conquer all men.
 We fought an evil disobedient people
 Fully prepared in their hostile attack.
 When they came at us we struck them blows
 Which dispatched the precipitate.
 You would have seen us in wide long mail which Glittered like pools in the plain;
 Sharp swords in our hands
 By which we quench the spirit of the mischievous.
 Like lions at the gap in the trench
 Whose tangled jungle protects their lairs.
 Our horsemen when they charged night and morning Looked disdainfully at the enemy as they wore their badges
 To help Ahmad and God so that we might be Sincere slaves of truth,
 And that the Meccans might know when they came
 And the people of different parties
 That God has no partners,
 And that He helps the believers.
 Though you killed Sa'd wantonly,
 God's decrees are for the best.
 He will admit him to goodly gardens
 The resting-place of the righteous.
 As He repulsed you, runaway fugitives,
 Fruitless, disgraced, despite your rage.
 Disgraced, you accomplished nothing there
 And were all but destroyed
 By a tempest which overtook you
 So that you were blinded by its force.

Abdullah b. al-Zibara al-Sahmi said about the trench:

Salute the dwelling whose vestiges
 Long decay and time's changes have effaced.
 'Tis as though their remains were the writings of Jews
 Except the zarebas and (marks of) tentpegs*.
 (* The trace of an old camp (rasm) is compared to Hebrew script. The word also means 'writing'.)
 A desert as though you did not find diversion in it
 Happily with young girls of one age.
 But speak no more of a life that has passed

And a place become ruined and deserted,
 And gratefully remember the gallantry of all
 Who marched from the sacred stones*, (* The ansab may mean either the stones set up to mark the boundary of the sacred territory, such as remain to this day, or the stones at which the sacrificial victims were slaughtered.) The stones of Mecca, making for Yathrib (modern Medina),
 With a loud-throated mighty force;
 Leaving the high ground well used paths
 In every conspicuous height and pass;
 The fine lean steeds led beside them
 Thin in belly, lean of flank,
 Foaled from long-bodied mares and stallions,
 Like a wolf who attacks careless watchmen.
 Uyayna marched with the banner of the army;
 Sakhr led the confederates;
 Two chiefs like the moon in its splendour,
 The help of the poor, the refuge of the fugitive,
 Until when they came to Medina
 And girt themselves for death their sharp swords drawn.
 For forty days they had the best of Mohammed
 Though his companions in war were the best.
 They called for withdrawal the morning you said
 'We are almost done for.'
 But for the trench they would have left them
 Corpses for hungry birds and wolves.

Hassan b. Thabit answered him and said:

Can the vanished traces of a deserted place
 Answer one who addresses it?
 A desert where clouds of rain have effaced its traces
 And the constant blowing of every high wind?
 Yet have I seen their dwellings adorned by Shining faces, heirs of a glorious past.
 But leave the dwellings, the talk of lovely maidens
 With soft breasts, sweet in converse,
 And complain to God of cares and what you see—
 An angry people who wronged the apostle,
 Who marched with their company against him
 And collected townsmen and desert dwellers,
 The army of Tyayna and Ibn Harb
 Mingled with the horsemen of the confederates
 Until they came to Medina and hoped to slay
 The apostle's men and plunder them,
 And attacked us in their strength.
 They were put to flight in their fury
 By a tempest which dispersed their company
 And the armies of thy Lord the Lord of lords.
 God averted battle from the believers (Almost an exact quotation from Sura 33. 25.)
 And gave them the best of rewards.
 When they had abandoned hope, our bounteous
 King
 Sent down His aid and scattered them;
 Gave ease to Mohammed and his companions
 And humiliated every lying doubter,
 Hard-hearted, suspicious, doubtful,
 Not men of pure life, unbelievers.
 May misery cling to their hearts, for
 In unbelief they persisted to the very end. (Or, To whose hearts misery has clung; So that their hearts persist in disbelief to the end of time.)
 Kab b. Malik also answered him:
 War has left over to us
 The best gift of our bounteous Lord;
 High white forts and resting-places for camels where [from their rubbing]
 Palms are black and where milk is plentiful.
 They are like lava tracts and their bounty is lavished
 On the visiting guest and relative*.
 (* A.Dh.'s explanation implies: (1st) High white forts and resting-places for camels. (2nd) Where the camels have black necks and are rich in milk. (3rd)
 They [the resting places] are like lava tracts. (4th)

Their bounty, etc. / / S. renders maatin 'palm plantations' and judhu trunks' and then has to take ahlalab as a metaphor of 'fruit.' // The verse is difficult, but it is possible to avoid unnatural metaphors in its translation. The dung of the camels made the ground look like a lava tract.)
 And horses* swift as wolves (* nazal are horses imported from elsewhere.)
 Fed on barley and cut lucerne
 With hairless fetlocks and firm-fleshed hindquarters,
 Smooth their coats from head to tail
 Long-necked, answering the View hallo
 As hounds speed to the huntsman's call.
 Now guarding the tribesman's cattle,
 Now slaying the enemy and returning with the spoil,
 Scaring wild beasts, swift in war,
 Grim in combat, of noble spirit,
 Well fed and sleek
 Well fleshed yet thin bellied.
 They bring coats of mail doubly woven
 With strong spears which hit the mark,
 And swords whose rust the polishers have removed;

All with a splendid highborn knight,
 His right hand holding a spear ready for the thrust
 Whose fashioning was entrusted to Khabbab.
 The glitter of his lance is like
 A flash of flame in the darkness of the night,
 And a force whose mail defies the arrows
 And repels the bolts that would pierce the thighs.
 Reddish-black, massed, as though their spears
 Were a blazing forest in every encounter,
 Seeking the shadow of the standard as though
 On the shaft of the spear there was the shadow of a hawk.
 Their courage defeated Abu Karib and Tubba
 And their gallantry overcame the Bedouin.
 We were guided by admonitions from our Lord
 On the tongue of one radiant and pure.
 They were laid before us and we loved to remember them
 After they had been laid before the confederates (and rejected).
 Axioms which evildoers assert they thought too strict
 But the wise understand.
 Quraysh came to contend with their Lord,
 But he who contends with the Conqueror will surely be conquered (723).

Kab b. Malik said about the trench:

Let one who enjoys the noise of battle where blows resound
 Like the crackling of burning swords,
 Come to the fight where swords are sharp
 Between al-Madhad* and the side of the trench.
 (* The place where the trench was dug. Some say that it was between Sal and the trench.)
 They were bold in smiting champions
 And surrendered their lifeblood to the Lord of the world
 In a company by which God helped His prophet
 And was gracious to His servant.
 All in long mail whose ends swept the ground,
 Looking like an undulating pool blown by the wind
 With mail well wrought and woven as though its nails
 Were the eyes of a locust in the chain rings.
 Braced up by the belt of a sword
 Of pure steel, cutting, and shining.
 Such with piety was our clothing on the day of battle*
 (* Borrowed from Koran 7.25, 'The clothing of piety is the best'.)
 And every hour that called for bravery.
 When our swords were too short to meet the enemy

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

We made them reach by going forward.
You could see skulls split asunder,
To say nothing of hands, as though they had not been created.

We met the enemy with a compact force Driving away their force who went as though to the top of al-

Mashriq (A mountain between al-Sarif and al-Qasim in Pabba country.).

Against the enemy we prepared
Every swift, bay, white-legged, piebald horse
Carrying riders who in battle were like Lions on damp dewy soil (In such conditions lions are said to be most fierce, presumably because wet ground would ruin the scent of their prey and so they would be ravenous.).

Trusty ones who bring death to brave men
With death-dealing spears beneath the clouds of dust.
God commanded that the horses should be kept for His enemy in the fight (Koran 8.62)

(Truly God is the best guarantor of victory)
That they might vex the enemy and protect the dwellings

If the horses of the miscreants came near.
God the mighty helped us with His strength
And loyal steadfastness on the day of the encounter.
We obeyed our prophet's orders.
When he called for war we were the first to respond.
When he called for violent efforts we made them.
When we saw the battle we hastened thither.
He who obeys the prophet's command (let him do so),
for among us

He is obeyed and truly believed.
By this He will give us victory and show our glory
And so give us a life of ease.

Those who call Mohammed a liar
Disbelieve and go astray from the way of the pious (724).

Kab also said:

The mixed tribes knew when they gathered together
against us
And attacked our religion that we would not submit.
Confederates from Qays b. Aylan and Khindif with one accord

Made common cause, not knowing what would happen.

They tried to turn us from our religion while we Tried to turn them from disbelief, but God is a seer and a hearer.

When they raged against us in battle
The all embracing help of God aided us.
'Twas God's protection and His grace towards us
(He whom God does not guard is lost).
He guided us to the true religion and chose it for us.
God can do more than man can do.

Kab also said:

Tell Quraysh that Sal
And the land between al-Urayd and al-Sammad (All these places are in the neighbourhood of Medina.)

Is a land where camels who know war carry water,
Where wells dug in the days of Ad abound.
Still waters fed by copious fountains
That keep the wells at a steady depth.
The tangled growth and the rushes there
Seem to rustic when they yellow at the harvest.
Our trade does not consist in selling donkeys
To the land of Daus or Murad.

Ours is a land well tilled, for it we fight
If you have stomach for the battle.
We ploughed and planted it as peasants do;
Never have you seen a valley bordered like it.
We have kept every fine high-standing
Powerful courser for great objects.
Respond to our invitation

For clear statement and truth,
Or take the blows you will get from us
At the side of al-Madhad.

We will meet you with all our warriors
And well made tractable horses,
And bloodmares whose sides throb
Like the beating of a locust's wings (An unusually fast-flying species of locust is meant.)

Swift of limb, firm fleshed,
Perfectly made from head to tail.
Horses which live through famine years
When other men's horses die;
Which tug at the reins, turning their necks to one side (This hemistich is repeated verbatim in the poem attributed to rjassan in Wüstenfeld 829. 8.),

When their master calls them to war.
When our warners say: 'Be ready'
We put our trust in the Lord of men.
And we said: 'Nothing will ease our troubles
But smiting the helmets and desperate fighting.'
You have seen none among those we fought,
Whether townsmen or tribesmen,
Bolder than we were in attack
Nor gentler in affection.

When we tied with trusty knots
Fine coats of mail upon them
Into long armour we put every fierce noble warrior
Careful in his preparation for battle;
Haughty as an angry lion
When someone appears in his valley,
Who shatter the skull of the doughtiest warrior
With the middle of a sword carried loose on its lanyard.

That we may make Thy religion victorious, O God.
We are in Thy hand, so guide us in the right paths (725).

Musafi b. Abdu Manaf b. Wahb b. Hudhafa b.
Jumah, weeping for Amr b. Abdu Wudd and mentioning how Ali killed him, said:

Amr b. Abd was the first horseman to cross Madhad
And he was the horseman of Yalyal (A wadi in Badr.).

Mild in nature, noble, firm,
Seeking armed combat, never showing fear.
You knew that when they fled from you
Ibn Abd only hurried not Until the best fighters surrounded him
Seeking untiringly to kill him.
On Sal's sides the spears surrounded
A horseman who was no unarmed coward.
You asked Ghalib's horseman to dismount, O Ali,
On Sal's sides. Would he had not done so.
Away with you, Ali! Never have you overcome his like in renown

Nor coped with such a difficult task.
My life be a ransom for the horseman of Ghalib
Who met death unperturbed,
He who crossed al-Madhad with his mare
Seeking to avenge the men he would not desert.

Musafi also said, reproaching the horsemen of Amr who decamped and deserted him:

Amr b. Abd and the fine horses he led—
Horses led for him and horses shod—
His horsemen decamped and his clan left
A great pillar, the first among them.
Marvel as I may I saw it
When you, Ali, asked Amr to dismount he dismounted.

Be not far, (The dead are thus apostrophised.) for I have suffered by his death
And till I die I have a burden heavy to bear.
Hubayra who was despoiled turned his back in flight
Fearing the fight lest they should be killed.
And Pirar who had shown courage
Fled like a miserable unarmed wretch (726).

Hubayra b. Abu Wahb making excuses for his flight, weeping for Amr,
and mentioning how Ali killed him, said:

On my life, I did not turn my back
On Mohammed and his companions in cowardice or fear of death;

But I considered my position and could find
No advantage in sword or arrow if I used them.
I stopped, and when I could not go forward
I withdrew like a strong lion with his cubs,
Who turns his shoulder from his adversary when He can find no way to return to the fray—such has always been my way.

Be not far, O Amr, alive or dead.
Such as you deserves the highest praise from one like me
Who (now) will drive on horses checked by spears
Be not far, O Amr alive or dead.
You have gone (from us) full of praise, noble of ancestry.

Tell of his glory when the camels bellow loudly? (So loud was his voice that he could be heard above the grumbling of the cameb, as he boasted of his tribe's prowess.)

Had Ibn Abd been there he would have gone to them
And relieved them, that never ignoble man.
Away with you, Ali, never have I seen one who behaved like you
Against a brave man advancing like a stallion.
Never have you achieved such a proud boast.
As long as you live you can feel safe from stumbling thereby.

Hubayra also said:

The noblest man of Luayy b. Ghalib knows
That when misfortune came their knight was Amr.
Their knight was Amr and Ali asked him to dismount.
(The lion must seek his enemy.)
He was their knight when Ali called to him
When the squadrons basely left him.
Alas that I left Amr in Yathrib.
May misfortunes never cease there!

Hassan b. Thabit boasting of the killing of Amr b.
Abdu Wudd said:

Amr, the last of you, we slew with the lance
As we defended Yathrib with our small force.
We killed you with our Indian swords,
For we are masters of war when we attack.
We killed you in Badr too
And left your tribes threading their way through the dead (727).

Hassan also said:

The warrior Amr b. Abd is on the flanks of Yathrib
Requiring to be avenged: he was not given respite*.
(The reading in the Diwan xcv is easier but not necessarily original:
Amr ... lay dead Vengeance for him is not to be expected.)

You found our swords drawn
And you found our horses ready.
At Badr you met a band
Who smote you with no weakling's blow.
No more will you be summoned on the day of great things
Or to important distasteful tasks, O Amr! (727)

Hassan also said:

Give Abu Hidm a message,
One with which the camels hasten.
Am I your friend in every hardship
And another your friend in a time of ease?

THE CHRONOLOGICAL KORAN

You have a witness who saw me
Lifted up to him as a child is carried (728).

Hassan said concerning (the) B. Qurayza mourning Sad b. Muadh and mentioning his judgement concerning the former:

Tears streamed from my eyes,
'Tis (it is) right that they should weep for Sad
Lying on the battlefield. Eyes that flow with tears Suffer his loss without ceasing.
Slain in God's religion, he inherits paradise with martyrs,
Theirs a noble company.
Though you have said farewell and left us
And lie in the dusty darkness of the grave
You, O Sad, have returned (to God) with a noble testimony
And garments of honour and praise.
By pronouncing on the two tribes of (the) Qurayza
the (same) judgement
Which God had decreed against them you did not judge of your own volition.
Your judgement and God's were at one
And you did not forgive when you were reminded of a covenant.
Though fate has brought you to your death
Among those who sold their lives for everlasting gardens
Yet blessed is the state of the true ones
When they are summoned to God for favour and regard.

Hassan also said mourning Sad and the prophet's companions who were martyred and mentioning their merits:

O my people, is there any defence against what is decreed?
And can the good old days return?
When I call to mind an age that is passed
My heart is troubled and my tears flow;
Yearning sorrow reminds me of friends
Now dead, among them Tufayl and Rafi and Sad.
They have gone to paradise
And their houses are empty and the earth is a desert without them.
They were loyal to the apostle on the day of Badr While over them swords flashed amid the shades of death.
When he called them they answered loyally,
All of them obeyed him utterly.
They gave no ground till all were dead.
(Only battles cut short the allotted span.)
Because they hoped for his intercession
Since none but prophets can intercede.
That, O best of men, is what we did,
Our response to God while death is certain.
Ours was the first step to thee, and the last of us
Will follow the first in God's religion.
We know that the kingdom is God's alone
And that the decree of God must come to pass (Divan exxxii. Obviously this dates from a later age.
'The good old days' are idealised.)

Hassan also said about (the) B. Qurayza:

(The) Qurayza met their misfortune
And in humiliation found no helper.
A calamity worse than that which fell (the) B. al-
Nadir befell them
The day that God's apostle came to them like a brilliant moon,
With fresh horses bearing horsemen like hawks.
We left them with the blood upon them like a pool
They having accomplished nothing.
They lay prostrate with vultures circling round them.
Thus are the obstinate and impious rewarded.
Warn (the) Quraysh of a like punishment from God

If they will take my warning.
Hassan also said:
(The) Qurayza met their misfortune
And shameful humiliation befell their castles.
Sad had warned them, saying
Your God is a majestic Lord.

They soon broke their treaty so that
The apostle slew them in their town.
With our troops he surrounded their fort Which resounded with cries from the heat of the battle.

Hassan also said:

May the people who helped Quraysh miss one another (This is the reading of C. W. has taaqada against tafaqada.)
For in their land they have no helper.
They were given the scripture and wasted it,
Being blind, straying from the Torah.
You disbelieved in the Koran and yet
You had been given confirmation of what the warner said.

The nobles of (the) B. Luayy took lightly
The great conflagration in al-Buwayra. (A place belonging to the B. al-Nadir (not the Qurayza) according to Yaqut, s.v. It was their trees which Mohammed destroyed [in order to destroy their supply].)

Abu Sufyan b. al-Harith b. Abdul-Muttalib answered him:

May God make that deed immortal,
May fire burn in its quarters!
You shall know which of us is far (from the fire)
And which of our lands will be harmed.
Had the palms therein been horsemen
They would have said, 'You have no place here, be off!'

(* The meaning of this poem is that the fact that the
B. al-Nadir were able to withdraw with all their effects deserves to be immortalised and may the site they left be destroyed by fire. The last line means 'could the trees have been made to walk you Muslims would have got rid of them too!' Yaqut gives a different turn to all this and the preceding poem. Hassan's line above is put into the mouth of Abu Sufyan in the form:

'The B. Luayy took hardly the great conflagration at al-Buwayra', and the first line of Abu Sufyan's poem is given to Hassan in the form:

'May God make that conflagration permanent!'
But Ibn Ishaq was right. Later writers thought that the 'deed' must be the burning of the trees and therefore the line must have been spoken by a Muslim.
See further W. Arafat, op. cit., pp. 277-81.)

Jabal b. Jawwal al-Thalabi also answered him, mourning al-Nadir and Qurayza:

O Sad, Sad of B. Muadh,
For what befell Qurayza and al-Nadir.
By thy life, Sad of B. Muadh
The day they departed was indeed steadfast.
As for al-Khazraji Abu Hubab (A reference to Abdullah b. Ubayy's interference in favour of B.
Qaynuqa.)
He told Qaynuqa not to go.
The allies got Usayd in exchange for Hudayr
(For circumstances sometimes change.) (In the time of Hudayr, chief of Aus, the Jews were secure; but they suffered when his son Usayd came to power.)

Al-Buwayra perished and was deprived of Sallam and Sa'ya and Ibn Akhtab.
Yet in their land they were weighty men

Like the ponderous rocks of Maytan (One of the mountains of Medina.)

Though Sallam Abu Hakam is dead
His weapons were not useless or rusty.
And both the tribes of Kahin too, among them
Hawklike men, albeit kindly and generous.
We found their glory established on glory
Which time cannot obscure.
Dwell there, ye chiefs of Aus,
As though you were blind to shame.

You left your pot with nothing in it,
The pot of a people worth mentioning is ever on the boil! (A metaphor for burning anger. Khazraj rescued their Jewish allies the Qaynuqa: Aus abandoned their allies.)

THE KILLING OF SALLAM IBN ABUL- HUQAYO

When the fight at the trench and the affair of the B.
Qurayza were over, the matter of Sallam b. Abul-Huqayq known as Abu Rafi came up in connexion with those who had collected the mixed tribes together against the apostle. Now Aus had killed Kab b. al-Ashraf before Uhud because of his enmity towards the apostle and because he instigated men against him, so Khazraj asked and obtained the apostle's permission to kill Sallam who was in Khaybar.

Mohammed b. Muslim b. Shihab al-Zuhri from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik told me: One of the things which God did for His apostle was that these two tribes of the Ansar, Aus and Khazraj, competed the one with the other like two stallions: if Aus did anything to the apostle's advantage Khazraj would say,
'They shall not have this superiority over us in the apostle's eyes and in Islam' and they would not rest until they could do something similar. If Khazraj did anything Aus would say the same.

When Aus had killed Kab for his enmity towards the apostle, Khazraj used these words and asked themselves what man was as hostile to the apostle as Kab? And then they remembered Sallam who was in Khaybar and asked and obtained the apostle's permission to kill him.

Five men of B. Salima of Khazraj went to him:
Abdullah b. Atik; Masud b. Sinan; Abdullah b. Unays;
Abu Qatada al-Harith b. Ribī; and Khuzai b. Aswad, an ally from Aslam. As they left, the apostle appointed Abdullah b. Atik as their leader, and he forbade them to kill women or children. When they got to Khaybar they went to Sallam's house by night, having locked every door in the settlement on the inhabitants.
[Tabari: 1378] Now he was in an upper chamber of his to which a (Roman) ladder led up. They mounted this until they came to the door and asked to be allowed to come in. His wife came out and asked who they were and they told her that they were Arabs in search of supplies. She told them that their man was here and that they could come in. When we entered* we bolted the door of the room on her and ourselves fearing lest something should come between us and him. (* The change into the first person without any mention of the speaker's authority is significant.

Doubtless there are occasions when the actual words used at a particular time and place have been carefully stored in a hearer's memory; but it should always be borne in mind that oratio obliqua is abhorrent to Semitic writers who escape into the oratio recta ['right speech'] at the first opportunity.) His wife shrieked and warned him of us, so we ran at him with our swords as he was on his bed. The only thing that guided us in the darkness of the night was his whiteness like an Egyptian blanket. When his wife shrieked one of our number would lift his sword against her; then he would remember the apostle's ban on killing women and withdraw his hand; but for that we would have made an end of her that night. When we had smitten him with our swords Abdullah b. Unays bore down with his sword into his belly until it went right through him, as he was saying Qatni, qatni, i.e. It's enough.

We went out. Now Abdullah b. Atik had poor sight, and fell from the ladder and sprained his arm (729) severely, so we carried him until we brought him to one of their water channels and went into it. The people lit lamps and went in search of us in all directions until, despairing of finding us, they returned to their master and gathered round him as he was dying. We asked each other how we could know that the enemy of God was dead, and one of us volunteered to go and see; so off he went and mingled with the people. He said, 'I found his wife and some Jews gathered round him. She had a lamp in her hand and was peering into his face and saying to them 'By God, I certainly heard the voice of Abdullah b. Atik. Then I decided I must be wrong and thought "How can Ibn Atik be in this country?" Then she turned towards him, looking into his face, and said, 'By the God of the Jews he is dead!' Never have I heard sweeter words than those.

Then he came to us and told us the news, and we picked up our companion and took him to the apostle and told him that we had killed God's enemy. We disputed before him as to who had killed him, each of us laying claim to the deed. The apostle demanded to see our swords and when he looked at them he said, 'It is the sword of Abdullah b. Unays that killed him; I can see traces of food on it.'

Hassan b. Thabit mentioning the killing of Kab and Sallam said:

God, what a fine band you met,
O Ibnul-Huqayq and Ibnul-Ashraf!
They went to you with sharp swords,
Brisk as lions in a tangled thicket,
Until they came on you in your dwelling
And made you drink death with their swift-slaying swords,
Looking for the victory of their prophet's religion
Despising every risk of hurt.

Amr b. al-As and Khalid b. al-walid accept islam Yazid b. Abu Habib from Rashid client of Hablb b. Abu Aus al-Thaqafi from Hablb told me that Amr b. al-As told him from his own mouth: When we came away from the trench with the mixed tribes I gathered some of Quraysh together, men who shared my opinion and would listen to me, and said: 'You know that in my opinion this affair of Mohammed will go to unheard-of lengths and I should like to know what you think of my opinion. I think that we ought to go to the Negus and stay with him. If Mohammed conquers our people we shall be with the Negus and we should prefer to be subject to his authority rather than to Mohammed; on the other hand, if our people get the upper hand they know us and will treat us well.' They thought that my suggestion was excellent so I told them to collect something that we could take as a present to him; as leather was the product of our land which he most valued we collected a large quantity and took it to him.

While we were with him who should come to him but Amr b. Umayya al-Damri whom the apostle had sent concerning Jafar and his companions. He had an audience with the Negus, and when he came out I said to my companions that if I were to go to the Negus and ask him to let me have him, he would give him to me and we could cut off his head; and when I had done that Quraysh would see that I had served them well in killing Mohammed's messenger. So I went in to the Negus and did obeisance as was my wont. He welcomed me as a friend and asked if I had brought anything from our country, and when I told him that I had brought a large quantity of leather and produced it he was greatly pleased and coveted it. Then I said, 'O

King, I have just seen a man leave your presence. He is the messenger of an enemy of ours, so let me have him that I may kill him, for he has killed some of our chiefs and best men.' He was enraged, and stretching out his hand he gave his nose such a blow that I thought he would have broken it. If the earth had opened I would have gone into it to escape his anger. I said that had I known that my request would have been distasteful to him I would not have made it. He said, 'Would you ask me to give you the messenger of a man to whom the great Namus comes as he used to come to Moses, so that you might kill him!' When I asked if he were really so great he said: 'Woe to you, Amr, obey me and follow him, for by Allah he is right and will triumph over his adversaries as Moses triumphed over Pharaoh and his armies.' I asked him if he would accept my allegiance to Mohammed in Islam, and he stretched out his hand and I gave my allegiance. When I went out to my companions I had entirely changed my mind, but I concealed my Islam from my companions.

Then I went off making for Mohammed to adopt Islam, and met Khalid b. al-Walid coming from Mecca. This was a little while before the occupation of Mecca. I said, 'Where are you going, Abu Sulayman?' He said: 'The way has become clear. The man is certainly a prophet, and by Allah I am going to be a Muslim. How much longer should I delay?' I told him that I too was travelling with the same object in view, so we went to Medina to the apostle. Khalid got there first and accepted Islam and gave his allegiance.

Then I came up and said, 'O apostle, I will give you my allegiance on condition that my past faults are forgiven and no mention is made of what has gone before.' He said, 'Give allegiance Amr, for Islam does away with all that preceded it, as does the hijra.' So I gave my allegiance and went away (730).

One whom I do not suspect told me that Uthman b. Talha b. Abu Talha who was with them accepted Islam at the same time.

Ibn al-Zibara al-Sahmi said:

I adjure Uthman b. Talha by our oath of friendship
And by the casting of the sandals at the stone of kissing
And by every alliance our fathers made,
Khalid not being exempt from such,
Do you want the key of a house other than yours
(Uthman was the Keeper of the Key of the Kaaba. See Wüstenfeld 821.),
And what can be more desirable than the glory of an ancient house?

Trust not Khalid and Uthman

After this; they have brought a great disaster.

The conquest of B. Qurayza was in Dhul-Qada and the beginning of Dhul-Hijja. The polytheists were in charge of that pilgrimage.

THE ATTACK ON THE BANU LIHYAN

The apostle stayed in Medina during Dhul-Hijja, Muharram, Safar, and the two months of Rabi, and in Jumadal-Ula, six months after the conquest of Qurayza, he went out against (the) B. Lihyan to avenge his men killed at al-Rajl, Khubayb b. Adiy and his companions. He made as though he was going to Syria in order to take the people by surprise (731). He went past Ghurab, a mountain near Medina on the road to Syria, then by Mahis (The place is wrongly given as Makhid in Wüstenfeld.), then by al-Batra; then he turned off to the left and came out by Bin (A wadi near Medina.), then by Sukhayratul-Yamam (Between al-Sayala and Farah.), then the track went by the Meccan highroad. He quickened the pace until he came down to Ghuran, the haunts of (the) B. Lihyan. (Ghuran is a wadi between Amaj and Usfan extending as far as a village called Saya.) He found that the people had been warned and taken up strong positions on the tops of the mountains. When the apostle got there and saw that he had failed to take them by surprise as he had intended, he said, 'Were we to come down to Usfan the Meccans would think that we intend to come to Mecca.' So he went out with two hundred riders until he came to Usfan, when he sent two horsemen from his companions who went as far as Kuraul-Ghamim (Between Mecca and Medina, a wadi some eight miles from Usfan.). Then he turned and went back.

Jabir b. Abdullah used to say, I heard the apostle say when he set his face towards Medina "Returning repentant if God will, giving thanks to out Lord. I take refuge in God from the difficulties of the journey and its unhappy ending, and the evil appearance of man and beast."

The tradition about the raid on B. Libyan is from Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik.

Kab b. Malik said:

If (the) B. Lihyan had waited

They would have met bands in their settlements, fine fighters.

They would have met audacious warriors whose terror fills the way (Or, with a different vowel, 'the heart'.)

In front of an irresistible force glittering like stars.

But they were as weasels who stick to the Clefts of the rocks (A variant is 'passes of Hijjaa', which have no means of escape.

THE ATTACK ON DHU QARAD

The apostle had spent only a few nights in Medina when Uyayna b. Hisn b. Hudhayfa b. Badr al-Fazari with the cavalry of Ghatafan raided the apostle's mileh-camels in al-Ghaba (Near Medina in the direction to Syria.). A man of (the) B. Ghifar, who had his wife with him, was in charge of the camels. Him they killed and carried off his wife with the camels.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr and a man I do not suspect from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik contributed to the story which follows. The first to know of them was Salama b. Amr b. al-Akwa al-Aslami. That morning he was making for al-Ghaba armed with bow and arrows accompanied by a slave belonging to Talha b. Ubaydullah with a horse which he was leading. When he got to the pass of al-Wada he saw some of their cavalry and looked down in the direction of Sal and cried aloud, 'O (what a) morning!' Then he hurried off after the raiding party like a lion. When he came up with them he began to keep them at bay with arrows, saying as he shot:

Take that, al-Akwa's son am I.

Today, mean crowd, you die!

Whenever the horsemen made for him he fled from them; then back he would come and take a shot at them when he could, saying the same words.

One of them said, 'Our little Akwa' comes early in the morning!'

Ibnul-Akwa's call for aid reached the apostle and he ordered the alarm to be sounded in Medina and the cavalry rallied to him. The first horseman to arrive was al-Miqdad b. Amr called b. al-Aswad, ally of (the) B. Zuhra. The next to arrive from the Ansar were Abbad b. Bishr b. Waqsh b. Zughba b. Zaura, one of (the) B. Abdul-Ashhal; Sad b. Zayd, one of (the) B. Kab b. Abdul-Ashhal; Usayd b. Zuhayr, brother of B. Haritha b. al-Harith, though there is some doubt about him; Ukasha b. Mihsan, brother of (the) B. Asad b. Khuzayma; Muhriz b. Nadla, brother of B. Asad b. Khuzayma; Abu Qatada al-Harith b. Ribī, brother of (the) B. Salima; and Abu Ayyash who was Ubayd b. Zayd b. al-Samit, brother of (the) B. Zurayq. When they had gathered to the apostle, he set Sad b. Zayd over them according to my information and told them to go in pursuit of the band until he himself overtook them with the army.

I have heard from some men of (the) B. Zurayq that the apostle had said to Abu Ayyash: 'How would it be if you were to give this horse to a man who is a better rider than you and he caught up with the band?' He replied: I am the best horseman of the people! Then I beat the horse, and by Allah he had not taken me fifty cubits before he threw me. I was astonished that the apostle should say that he wished that I had given him to a better horseman and that I should have said that I was the best horseman.'

Men of B. Zurayq allege that the apostle gave Abu Ayyash's horse to Muadh b. Mais, or to Aidh b. Mais b. Qays b. Khalada who was the eighth. Some people count Salama b. Amr b. al-Akwa as one of the eight and exclude Usayd b. Zuhayr, but God knows what happened, seeing that Salama was not riding that day but was the first to catch up with the band on foot. The horsemen went in pursuit of the band until they overtook them.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that the first horseman to catch up with the band was Muhriz b. Nadla who was called Al-Akhram and 'Qumayr', and that when the alarm sounded a horse belonging to Mahmud b. Maslama ran round the plantation when it heard the neighing of the horses, for it was a treasured animal not put to work. When some women of (the) B. Abdul-Ashhal saw the horse running round the plantation with the stump of wood to which it was tied they said: 'How would you like to ride this horse, Qumayr? You can see what it is like. Then you could overtake the apostle and the Muslims.' He agreed and they handed it over to him, and he soon outstripped the rest of them because it was full of spirit. When he overtook the band and came to a halt in front of them he said: 'Stop, you rascals, until the emigrants and Ansar who are behind you catch up with you.' One of them attacked and killed him. The horse wheeled and they could not stop him until it stood by its stable among (the) B. Abdul-Ashhal. This man was the only Muslim to be killed (732).

Mahmud's horse was called Dhul-Limma (733).

One whom I do not suspect told me from Abdullah b. Kab b. Malik that Muhriz rode a horse of Ukasha's called al-Janah. Muhriz (C. has Mujazziz, but gives no authority for the reading.) was killed and al-Janah was captured. When the cavalry engaged, Abu Qatada al-Harith b. Ribi killed Habib b. Uyayna b. Hisn and covered him with his mantle; then he joined his force. The apostle advanced with the Muslims (734) and there was Habib covered with Abu Qatada's mantle. The men exclaimed, 'We are God's and to Him must we return! Abu Qatada has been killed.' The apostle said that it was not Abu Qatada but a man he had killed and covered with his mantle so that they might know that he was his prey. Ukasha overtook Aubar and his son Amr who were riding the same camel, and ran them through with his lance, killing the two of them at one stroke. They recovered some of the milch-camels. The apostle went forward until he halted at the mountain of Dhu Qarad, and the men joined him there, and he stopped there for a day and a night. Salama b. al-Akwa asked if he might go with a hundred men and recover the rest of the herd and cut off the heads of the band. I have heard that the apostle said, 'By this time they are being served with their evening drink among Ghatafan.' The apostle divided a butchered camel among every hundred men, and after a while he returned to Medina. The wife of the Ghifari came upon one of the apostle's she-camels and told him what had happened. Having done so she said, I vowed to Allah that I would slaughter her if Allah let me escape on her.' The apostle smiled and said: 'You would repay her badly when God mounted you on her and delivered you by her and then you would slaughter her! No vow in disobedience to God nor concerning property that is not your own is valid. She is one of my camels, so go back to your family with God's blessing.' This story of the Ghifari's wife comes from Abul-Zubayr al-Makki from al-Hasan b. Abul-Hasan al-Basri.

Among the verse composed about Dhu Qarad is the following from Hassan b. Thabit:

Were it not for what our horses suffered and what hurt their frogs

As they were led to the south of Saya last night,
They would have met you as they carried well-armed warriors

Noble in ancestry protecting their standard,
And the bastards would have rejoiced that we Did not fight when Miqdad's horsemen came.
We were eight; they were a great force
Loud-voiced yet pricked by (our) lances (and) scattered.

We were of the people who followed them
And we gave free rein to every noble steed.
Yea, by the Lord of the camels that go to Mina
Traversing the great mountain passes (we will pursue you)

Till we make the horses stale (Reading nublla with C. and Diwan cxxxvii.) in the midst of your dwellings
And come back with your women and children,
Walking gently with every swift horse and mare
That turns swiftly in every battle.
A day in which they are led and a day of charges
Has worn out their quarters and altered the appearance of their backs.

Our horses are fed on milk
While war is kindled by passing winds.
Our sharp swords glittering cut through
Iron shields and pugnacious heads.
Allah put obstacles in their way to protect His sacred property

And to protect His dignity. (This line is obscure. Perhaps the 'sacred property' means the prophet's camels. Possibly the verb is an optative.)

They lived happily in their home, but
On the days of Dhu Qarad they were given the faces of slaves (735).

Hassan also said:

Did Uyayna think when he visited it (i.e. Medina.)
That he would destroy its castles?
In what you said you were made a liar.
You said, 'We will take great spoil.'
You loathed Medina when you visited it
And met roaring lions there.
Back they turned running fast like ostriches
Without getting near a single camel.
God's apostle was our amir,
God's a beloved amir to us!
An apostle whose message we believe
Who recites a luminous light-bringing book.

Kab b. Malik said concerning the day of Dhu Qarad with reference to the horsemen:

Do the bastards think that we
Are not their equals in horsemanship?
We are men who think killing no shame,
We turn not from the piercing lances.
We feed the guest with choicest camels' meat
And smite (chop off) the heads of the haughty.
We turn back the conspicuous warriors in their pride
With blows that quash the zeal of the unyielding.
With heroes who protect their standard,
Noble, generous, fierce as jungle wolves.
They preserve their honour and their goods
With swords that smash the heads beneath the helms.
Ask the Banu Badr if you meet them
What the brethren did on the day of battle.

Tell the truth (Reading fasduqu with C. against Wüstenfeld's faktumu.) to those you meet whenever you come out.

Conceal not the news in assemblies.

Say, We slipped away from the claws of the angry lion

With rage in his heart which he could not work off (736).

Shaddad b. Arid said concerning the day of Dhu Qarad with reference to Uyayna who was surnamed Abu Malik:
Why, O Abu Malik, did you not return to the fight
When your cavalry were in flight and being slain?
You mentioned going back to Asjar (A place near Mecca.).

Nonsense! it was too late to return.
You trusted yourself to a spirited horse
Quickly covering the ground when given free rein.
When "your left hand reined him in
He reared like a flaming cauldron.
And when you saw that God's servants
Did not wait for those behind to come up
You knew that horsemen had been trained
To chase warriors when they took to the plain.
When they chase the cavalry they bring disgrace on them.

And if they are pursued they dismount
And protect themselves in evil case
With swords which the polisher has made bright.

THE RAID ON THE B. AL-MUSTALIQ

The apostle stayed in Medina during the latter part of Jumadal-Akhira and Rajab; then he attacked (the) B. al-Mustaliq of Khuza'a in Shaban 6 A.H.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr and Mohammed b. Yahya b. Habban each told me a part of the following story: The apostle received news that (the) B. al-Mustaliq were gathering together against him, their leader being al-Harith b. Abu pirar, the father of Juwayriya d. al-Harith (afterwards) wife of the apostle. When the apostle heard about them he went out and met them at a watering place of theirs called al-Muraysi in the direction of Qudayd towards the shore. There was a fight and God put the B. al-Mustaliq to flight and killed some of them and gave the apostle their wives, children, and property as booty. A Muslim of (the) B. Kalb b. Auf b. Amir b. Layth b. Bakr called Hisham b. Subaba was killed by a man of the Ansar of the family of Ubada b. al-Samit who thought he was an enemy and killed him in error.

While the apostle was by this water a party came down to it. Umar had a hired servant from (the) B. Ghifar called Jahjah b. Masud who was leading his horse. This Jahjah and Sinan b. Wabar al-Juhani, an ally of (the) B. Auf b. al-Khazraj, thrust one another away from the water and fell to fighting. The Juhani called out 'Men of al-Ansar!' and Jahjah called out 'Men of the Muhajirun!'. Abdullah b. Ubayy b. Salul was enraged. With him was a number of his people including Zayd b. Arqam, a young boy. He said, 'Have they actually done this? They dispute our priority, they outnumber us in our own country, and nothing so fits us and the vagabonds of Quraysh as the ancient saying "Feed a dog and it will devour you". By Allah when we return to Medina the stronger will drive out the weaker.' Then he went to his people who were there and said: 'This is what you have done to yourselves. You have let them occupy your country, and you have divided your property among them. Had you but kept your property from them they would have gone elsewhere.' Zayd b. Arqam heard this and went and told the apostle when he had disposed of his enemies. Umar, who was with him, said, 'Tell Abbad b. Bishr to go and kill him.' The apostle answered, 'But what if men should say Mohammed kills his own companions? No, but give orders to set off.' Now this was at a time when the apostle was not accustomed to travel. The men duly moved off.

When Abdullah b. Ubayy heard that Zayd had told the apostle what he had said he went to him and swore that he had not said what he did say. He was a great man among his own people and the Ansar who were present with the apostle said: It may well be that the boy was mistaken in what he said, and did not remember the man's words,' sympathising with Ibn Ubayy and protecting him.

When the apostle had begun his journey Usayd b. Hudayr met him and saluted him as a prophet, saying, 'You are travelling at a disagreeable time, a thing you have never done before.' The apostle said: 'Have you not heard of what your friend said? He asserted that if he returns to Medina the stronger will drive out the weaker.' He answered: 'But you will drive him out if you want to; he is the weak and you are the strong.' He added: 'Treat him kindly, for Allah brought you to us when his people were stringing beads to make him a crown, and he thinks that you have deprived him of a kingdom.'

Then the apostle walked with the men all that day till nightfall, and through the night until morning and during the following day until the sun distressed them. Then he halted them, and as soon as they touched the ground they fell asleep. He did this to distract their minds from what Abdullah b. Ubayy had said the day before. He continued his journey through the Hijaz as far as water a little above al-Naqi called Baqa. As he travelled at night a violent wind distressed the men and they dreaded it. He told them not to be afraid because the wind announced the death of one of the greatest of the unbelievers, and when they got to Medina they found that Rifaa b. Zayd b. al-Tabut of (the) B. Qaynuqa, one of the most important Jews and a secret shelterer of the disaffected, had died that day. The sura came down in which God mentioned the disaffected with Ibn Ubayy and those like-minded with him. When it came down the apostle took hold of Zayd b. Arqam's ear, saying, 'This is he who devoted his ear to Allah.' (This anecdote is related by Zayd in the first person in Waqidi [B.M. MS. 1617, 95a]. It is a good example of the way in which early traditions preserved the general sense and were comparatively indifferent to the form of words.) Abdullah, Abdullah b. Ubayy's son, heard about his father's affair.

Asim b. Umar b. Qatada told me that Abdullah came to the apostle, saying, I have heard that you want to kill Abdullah b. Ubayy for what you have heard about him. If you must do it, then order me to do it and I will bring you his head, for al-Khazraj know that they have no man more dutiful to his father than I, and I am afraid that if you order someone else to kill him my soul will not permit me to see his slayer walking among men and I shall kill him, thus killing a believer for an unbeliever, and so I should go to hell.' The apostle said: 'Nay, but let us deal kindly with him and make much of his companionship while he is with us.' After that it happened that if any misfortune befell it was his own people who reproached and upbraided him roughly. The apostle said to Umar when he heard of this state of things: 'Now what do you think, Umar? Had I killed him on the day you wanted me to kill him the leading men would have trembled with rage. If I ordered them to kill him today they would kill him.' Umar replied, I know that the apostle's order is more blessed than mine.'

Miqyas b. Subaba came from Mecca as a Muslim, so he professed, saying, I come to you as a Muslim seeking the bloodwit for my brother who was killed in error.' The apostle ordered that he should have the bloodwit for his brother Hisham and he stopped a short while with the apostle. Then he attacked his brother's slayer and killed him and went off to Mecca an apostate. He spoke the following lines:

It eased my soul that he died in the lowland,
The blood of his neck veins dyeing his garments.
Before I killed him I was beset by cares
Which prevented me from seeking my couch.
I gave free vent to my vengeance
And was the first to return to the idols.
I avenged Fihri on him and laid his bloodwit

On the chiefs of B. al-Najjar, the lords of Fari (One of their castles.)

He also said:

I fetched him a stroke in vengeance
Which drew blood that ebbed and flowed.
I said as the wrinkles of death covered him
'You cannot be safe from B. Bakr when they are wronged' (738).

Of the B. Mustaliq who were slain that day, Ali killed two—Malik and his son. Abdul-Rahman b. Auf killed one of their horsemen called Ahmar or Uhaymir. The apostle took many captives and they were distributed among the Muslims. One of those taken was Juwayriya d. al-Harith b. Abu Pirar, the apostle's wife.

Mohammed b. Jafar b. al-Zubayr from Urwa b. al-Zubayr from Aisha said: When the apostle distributed the captives of B. al-Mustaliq, Juwayriya fell to the lot of Thabit b. Qays b. al-Shammās, or to a cousin of his, and she gave him a deed for her redemption. She was a most beautiful woman. She captivated every man who saw her. She came to the apostle to ask his help in the matter. As soon as I saw her at the door of my room I took a dislike to her, for I knew that he would see her as I saw her. She went in and told him who she was—d. of al-Harith b. Abu Dirar, the chief of his people. 'You can see the state to which I have been brought. I have fallen to the lot of Thabit or his cousin and have given him a deed for my ransom and have come to ask your help in the matter.' He said, 'Would you like something better than that? I will discharge your debt and marry you,' and she accepted him.

The news that the apostle had married Juwayriya was blazed abroad and now that B. Mustaliq were the prophet's relations by marriage the men released those they held. When he married her a hundred families were released. I do not know a woman who was a greater blessing to her people than she (739).

Yazid b. Ruman told me that the apostle sent al-Walid b. Uqba b. Abu Muayt to them after they had accepted Islam. When they heard of him they rode out to meet him, but when he heard of them he was afraid and went back to the apostle and told him that the people had determined to kill him and had withheld their due poor tax. The Muslims talked a lot about raiding them until the apostle himself meditated doing so. While this was going on an embassy of theirs came to the apostle, saying: 'We heard about your messenger when you sent him to us and we went out to meet him to show him respect and to pay the poor tax that was due, and he went back as fast as he could. Now we hear that he has alleged that we went out to kill him. By Allah we did not go out with such intent.' So God sent down concerning him and them: 'O you who believe if an evil man comes to you with a report examine it closely lest you do ill to a people in ignorance and be sorry for what you have done. Know that the apostle of God is among you. If he were to obey you in much of the government you would be in trouble (Koran 49.6).'

THE LIE THAT WAS UTTERED ON THE RAID OF THE B. AL-MUSTALIQ

According to what a man I do not suspect told me from al-Zuhri from Urwa from Aisha the apostle had gone forward on that journey of his until he was near Medina, Aisha having been with him on the journey, when the liars spoke about her.

Al-Zuhri told us from Alqama b. Waqqas, and from Said b. Jubayr and from Urwa b. al-Zubayr, and from Ubaydullah b. Abdullah b. Utba, each contributing a part of the story, one remembering more of it than another, and I (Zuhri) have put together for you what the people told me.

Yahya b. Abbad b. Abdullah b. al-Zubayr told me from his father from Aisha; and Abdullah b. Abu Bakr from Amra d. Abdul-Rahman from Aisha from her own words when the liars said what they did. The whole of her story rests on these men as a whole. One relates what another does not. All of them are trustworthy witnesses, and all of them related what they heard from her. She said: 'When the apostle intended to go on an expedition he cast lots between his wives which of them should accompany him. He did this on the occasion of the raid on B. al-Mustaliq and the lot fell on me, so the apostle took me out. The wives on these occasions used to eat light rations; meat did not fill them up so that they were heavy. When the camel was being saddled for me I used to sit in my howdah; then the men who saddled it for me would come and pick me up and take hold of the lower part of the howdah and lift it up and put it on the camel's back and fasten it with a rope. Then they would take hold of the camel's head and walk with it.'

'When the apostle finished his journey on this occasion he started back and halted when he was near Medina and passed a part of the night there. Then he gave permission to start and the men moved off. I went out for a certain purpose having a string of Zafar beads on my neck. When I had finished, it slipped from my neck without my knowledge, and when I returned to the camel I went feeling my neck for it but could not find it. Meanwhile the main body had already moved off. I went back to the place where I had been and looked for the necklace until I found it. The men who were saddling the camel for me came up to the place I had just left and having finished the saddling they took hold of the howdah thinking that I was in it as I normally was, picked it up and bound it on the camel, not doubting that I was in it. Then they took the camel by the head and went off with it. I returned to the place and there was not a soul there. The men had gone. So I wrapped myself in my smock and then lay down where I was, knowing that if I were missed they would come back for me, and by Allah I had but just lain down when Safwan b. al-Muattal al-Sulami passed me; he had fallen behind the main body for some purpose and had not spent the night with the troops. He saw my form and came and stood over me. He used to see me before the veil was prescribed for us, so when he saw me he exclaimed in astonishment "The apostle's wife" (zaina, a woman carried in a howdah.) while I was wrapped in my garments. He asked me what had kept me behind but I did not speak to him. Then he brought up his camel and told me to ride it while he kept behind. So I rode it and he took the camel's head going forward quickly in search of the army, and by Allah we did not overtake them and I was not missed until the morning. The men had halted and when they were rested up came the man leading me and the liars spread their reports and the army was much disturbed. But by Allah I knew nothing about it.'

'Then we came to Medina and immediately I became very ill and so heard nothing of the matter. The story had reached the apostle and my parents, yet they told me nothing of it though I missed the apostle's accustomed kindness to me. When I was ill he used to show compassion and kindness to me, but in this illness he did not and I missed his attentions. When he came in to see me when my mother was nursing me (740), all he said was, "How is she?" (The form used indicates the plural and, to some extent, the speaker's indifference.) so that I was pained and asked him to let me be taken to my mother so that she could nurse me. "Do what you like," he said, and so I was taken to my mother, knowing nothing of what had happened until I recovered from my illness some twenty days later. Now we were an Arab people: we did not have those privies which foreigners have in their houses; we loathe and detest them. Our practice was to go out into the open spaces of Medina. The women used to go out even' night, and one night I went out with Umm Mistah. d. Abu Ruhm b. al-Muttalib b. Abdu Manaf. Her mother was d. Sakhr b. Amir b. Kab b. Sad b. Taym aunt of Abu Bakr. As she was walking with me she stumbled over her gown and exclaimed, "May Mistah stumble," Mistah being the nickname of Auf. I said, "That is a bad thing to say about one of the emigrants who fought at Badr." She replied, "Haven't you heard the news, O daughter of Abu Bakr?" and when I said that I had not heard she went on to tell me of what the liars had said, and when I showed my astonishment she told me that all this really had happened. By Allah, I was unable to do what I had to do and went back. I could not stop crying until I thought that the weeping would burst my liver. I said to my mother, "God forgive you! Men have spoken ill of me (Tabari 1521: and you have known of it) and have not told me a thing about it." She replied "My little daughter, do not let the matter weigh on you. Seldom is there a beautiful woman married to a man who loves her but her rival wives gossip about her and men do the same."
